'All trustworthy restoiation of corrupted texts is founded on a study of their history.' This principle, long established in the recension of classical and biblical texts, is implicit in the work of Shakespeare's earlier editors, but its full implications were first made completely explicit in the criticism of A. W. Pollard, R. B. McKerrow and Sir Walter Greg. Their study of Elizabethan books and theatrical documents in the light of collateral evidence hitherto neglected or misinterpreted enabled them to redraw on more probable and intelligible lines the history of the versions in which Shakespeare's work has been transmitted to us. The gap the earlier editors left between Shakespeare and his text, they closed: minutiae—such as the original punctuation—once considered negligible, they have made relevant for the interpretation of the text.

This development in critical method has prompted the present revision of the text of Shakespeare that Messrs. Collins first published nearly ninety years ago. That edition was based on the work of the earlier editors, and their contribution to the elucidation of the text is naturally still invaluable. The lines are now numbered as in the great Cambridge edition of Clark and Wright. They were the first editors to provide so simple but necessary a means of reference; and by this and their authoritative survey of all previous editions, digested in a compendious textual apparatus, they greatly facilitated subsequent work on the text. It is unfortunate that the standard concordance follows the line-numbering of their Globe edition, for there the references no longer always correspond with that of the apparatus, so indispensable

The range of detail that now confronts a general editor is so extensive that he is necessarily indebted not merely to previous editors but more and more to scholars who have made an intensive study of some aspect or portion of the text. Of the many special contributions that I have found most helpful I must name Dr. Greg's The Variants in the First Ouarto of 'King Lear', and its sequel, Professor G. I. Duthie's 'oldspelling' edition of the play; Professor David Patrick's The Textual History of 'Richard III', a study of a text that shares a peculiar history with Lear; Professor J. Dover Wilson's The Manuscript of 'Hamlet', and its sequel, the critical study of the play by Professor Thomas Parrott and Professor Hardin Craig, an edition admirably adapted editorum in usum. In the interpretation of the punctuation of the early texts—for to reproduce this punctuation would merely confuse and mislead the general reader—I am indebted to Dr. Percy Simpson's Shakespearian Punctuation and to the studies of the late Alfred Thiselton. To the glossaries of Dr. C. J. Onions and R. J. Cunliffe I am conscious of owing much; and I have found helpful matter in the work of Professor M. A. Shaaber and Dr. Richard Flatter.

The complete editions I have consulted with advantage include those by Mr. M. R. Ridley and G. L. Kittredge and that by W. A. Neilson and Professor C. J. Hill. Lastly I must mention the edition still in progress edited by Professor J. Dover Wilson, although my debt to him is not the least I have to acknowledge; for whenever I have ventured to disagree with him on general principles or their particular application, I have not spared myself the expense of second thoughts.

My personal thanks are due to Mr. George F. Maine, 'the onlie begetter' of this revision, for his constant encouragement and assistance; to Mr. James C. Harrison and the caseroom staff for their courtesy and patience in spite of my many requests; to Mrs. Hilda Bone for all her care and pains in the task; and to Sir Walter Greg and the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press for their generous permission to reproduce the special transcript of Shakespeare's contribution to Sir Thomas More.

T is still true in the study of Shalespe, re that 'the dispersion of error is the first step in the discovery of truth'. The scholarly criticism of his plays, which found but casual expression in his lifetime and took systematic shape only in the eighteenth century when men of letters and scholars found the editing of his works a source of profit or reputation, began by remarking that he ignored the Rules. These rules or laws of the drama were generalizations from the practice of the Greek dramatists; and Renaissance critics and their eighteenth century disciples regarded plays that failed to conform to these Laws as deficient in Art. Shakespeare ignored the Rules so constantly that his critics, however much they admired his natural powers, could not accept him as a great Artist. This openion is still maintained to-day by men of distinction in letters; but it is an opinion born of a fashion in European thought that has passed away, and it survives only as a prejudice that will no longer bear critical examination.

It is now realised that this demand for the scholarly imitation of the external or accidental features of classical masterpieces is an appeal to the letter not to the spirit of Art. No one to-day will argue that Westminster Abbey is inferior as a work of art to St. Paul's because the Gothic builders were not so familiar as Wren with 'the four regular orders of Greece'. Indeed, the complete revolution wrought by the progress of European criticism is best seen in the attitude of the French, who were the most jealous guardians of what they considered 'classical' form. The French were in this phase of their culture as severe in their

*To spare the reader a succession of footnotes, I mention here some of the studies I should otherwise have to refer him to in passing. J. S. Smart's Shakespeare: Truth and Traduton, 'a new landmark in Shakespeare scholarship' is the best introduction to a study of A Life of Shakespeare by J. Quincy Adams; the student will then be in a position to profit by Shakespeare: A Study of Facts and Problems by Sir Edmund Chambers. The best idea of the structure of Shakespeare's theatre is given by The Globe Playhouse by John C. Adams, of Shakespeare's Audience by Alfred Harbage's Shakespeare's Audience. On dramatic questions Granville-Barker's Prefaces are most helpful. Bradley's Shakespearean Tragedy is still an important guide in interpretation, and those who fancy that recent 'historical or objective' criticism has outmoded his method should read Alfred Harbage's As They Liked It. Dr. Tillyard's Shakespeare's History Plays is a valuable study of Shakespeare's attitude to his material and of the implications it suggests; and in Dr. Ivor Brown's Shakespeare can be seen the reactions to academic opinion of one familiar with the modern theatre. All Dr. Hotson's works have added valuable touches to the social background of Shakespeare's life and his Shakespeare's 'First Period' unnecessary. Pollard's Shakespeare's Figlit with the Pirates is the ideal preparation for Sir Walter Greg's The Editorial Problem in Shakespeare, an authoritative review that will enable the reader to study with advantage Professor Dover Wilson's Introductions to the Cambridge 'New Shakespeare'. The views summarized in the introduction now before the reader will be found argued in some detail in the writer's Shakespeare's Life and Art.

denunciations of their own early architecture as they were of the lawless Shakespeare. Now France is proud to reckon the buildings they once despised as Gothic as their greatest and most original contribution to the art of the world. And for the very same reasons the English may now claim that Shakespeare is the greatest artist to whom their race has so tar given birth—a dramatist unsurpassed, as all acknowledge, in the gifts that nature alone can bestow, but as unsurpassed for the judgment that gives to work almost as various as nature itself the unity and commanding power found only in the world's supreme masterpieces.

When Rowe in 1709 and Pope in 1725 ventured on the systematic criticism of Shakespeare, so important did the Rules seem to them and their contemporaries that they deduced from Shakespeare's practice three important conclusions that were long accepted as almost selfevident. First: Shakespeare could not have received any instruction worthy of the name of education, and consequently Stratford where he was born and brought up must have been peopled merely by ignorant and unbookish rustics. Second: the form in which Shakespeare cast his dramas, not being prescribed by the Rules of Art, was dictated by the dramatist's desire to gratify, in his pursuit of gain, an ignorant and untaught audience. Third: so little interest, except financial, did Shakespeare and his even more ignorant fellow-actors take in his works that his plays were transmitted to posterity in so sadly mangled a condition, so full of interpolations from hands other than his own, that it was hardly possible to judge in many instances which were and which were not his writings, or to believe that we had them in a form even approximating to that in which he left them.

On the first and third of these issues modern criticism has shown that in general the truth is the very opposite to what was once so confidently maintained; on the second the wiser judgments of the great critics of the past are being gradually confirmed and developed.

STRATFORD

In Elizabethan England every self-respecting community made careful provision for the education of its children. Measured by this standard the inhabitants of Stratford could claim an honourable place amongst their countrymen. Education had in its beginnings in England been the business of the Church, but, like many other functions of the Church, education had in the course of the Middle Ages been transferred to lay administration; and the school at Stratford had passed from the Church into the keeping of the Guild of the Holy Cross, the organisation in which the social instincts of the locality, according to the fashion of the time, found expression. There has been a long-standing belief that the schools of England were largely the creation of the Reformation, but this serious historical error was exposed by A. F. Leach; and in his Social History of England Sir George Trevelyan has summarised the true course of events when he says that it was not the Reformation that made the Schools of England but the schools that made the Reformation. In 1553 the school at Stratford was renamed The King's New School of Stratford-upon-Avon; but the school owed nothing to Edward VI or his Council, and was not new by some centuries.

This renaming of the school merely marks the change from the old Guild system to a more modern form of administration in which Stratford became by Royal Charter a corporate borough under a Bailiff, Alderman, and Burgesses. The new Common Council, whose original members had all served on the Guild, now paid the Vicar and the Schoolmaster and administered the property and revenues of the Guild. It was during this period of transition that the poet's father, John Shakespeare, came to Stratford.

John Shakespeare must have left his father's home in Snitterfield, some four miles to the north of Stratford—where his father Richard Shakespeare worked as a yeoman farmer—at least seven years before 1552. In that year is found the first mention of him in Stratford records, and he is already in business as a glover in Henley Street; and to become a member of the Craft of Glovers, Whitetawers and Collarmakers, he must have served a seven year apprenticeship. By 1557 John Shakespeare had so prospered in business that he was able to return to the district of his birth to marry the youngest daughter of Robert Arden, the gentleman from whom his father, Richard Shakespeare, rented his land.

Further than Richard Shakespeare no one has yet traced with any certainty the poet's paternal connections. But on his mother's side he was related to one of the great families of the West Country, for Robert Arden came of a younger branch of the Ardens of Park Hall, a family settled in the Arden district of Warwickshire, from which they took their name, from before the Norman Conquest.

Of the marriage of John Shakespeare and Mary Arden there were eight children—four sons and four daughters. William, the third child and first son, was christened on 26th April 1564. The only member of this group to survive the poet was his younger sister Joan, who is mentioned in his will. The other three girls died in infancy, and though his brothers reached manhood they too predeceased him.

In the year of his marriage John Shakespeare was elected to the Common Council and soon took a leading part in its affairs. He acted as Chamberlain for four years—a term of office without precedent in Stratford—presumably because he was specially qualified for keeping the borough accounts. In 1568 he became Bailiff, and by virtue of his office a gentleman entitled to his coat of arms. In 1577, however, after twenty years of continuous service, he suddenly ceased to attend the Council meetings.

It has been conjectured that in his zeal for public affairs he had neglected his own business; and he certainly, at this time, was or wished to be taken for a poor man, mortgaging as he did a valuable property inherited by his wife. The authorities however took a different view of his circumstances: in 1580 he was summoned before the Queen's Bench in Westminster and fined £20 for failing to provide security that he would keep the Queen's peace; and on the same day he was fined another £20, as he had stood surety for another man in the same position as himself. That this was the outcome of the measures of John Whitgift, the new Bishop of Worcester, who had come to Worcester as he was later to go to Canterbury to restore church discipline, there can be little doubt. John Shakespeare's troubles therefore were probably political not financial, and that he was a 'recusant' there is no doubt, though the grounds of his discontent are unknown.

In 1582 his son William married Ann Hathaway the daughter of an old family friend. The licence was issued in November 1582; the first child of the marriage, Susanna, was born in May 1583. All attempts to show from an examination of the Bishop's Register and the circumstances of the marriage that it reflects discredit on either party rest on the unhistorical conjecture that the church ceremony was then, as it would be now, the marriage ceremony. The church ceremony, for which the licence was obtained, was in respectable Elizabethan society frequently no more than an after-ceremony to the marriage proper; the licence is in no respect out of the ordinary. Ann Hathaway may have been eight years older than her husband, but this is not absolutely certain, and even if it were this would be no proof of irregularity. Those who still insist that there was some impropriety in the matter may be asked to produce their evidence. In February 1585, the twins, Hamnet and Judith, were christened at Stratford.

How Shakespeare intended to support a wife and family is a natural question, and fortunately the only tradition about Shakespeare's youth that has any trustworthy pedigree behind it supplies the answer. The group of traditions that gathers round Rowe's account of Shakespeare's deer-stealing and of his prosecution by Sir Thomas Lucy has not only no pedigree but is contradicted by the fact that there was no deer-park at Charlecote at that time, the Lucy family establishing one there only in the next generation. The passage from the first scene of The Merry Wives of Windsor that is regularly cited as Shakespeare's reminiscence of this adventure is more probably the origin of the story itself; and, as Professor Hotson has shown, any personal reference in the lines may be directed towards a man very different in character from Sir Thomas This and the other popular stories about Shakespeare's youth are the kind of conjecture commonly drawn in to fill the vacuum that biographers naturally abhor. The story however that the youthful Shakespeare was a country schoolmaster rests on a quite different foundation. The antiquary John Aubrey, who made a valuable series of notes on the men of Shakespeare's generation, was advised to visit

William Beeston, then an old man, but well informed about the history of the stage, for he, like his father, Christopher Beeston, had been an actor and actor-manager. His father, Christopher, had actually been in the same company as Shakespeare for a number of years. That Aubrey discussed with Beeston the observation by Jonson on Shakespeare's 'small Latin and less Greek' is revealed in Aubrey's note:

'Though as Ben Jonson says of him that he had but little Latin and less Greek, he understood Latin pretty well, for he had been in his younger years a schoolmaster in the country'.

In the margin Aubrey recorded that his authority was Mr. Beeston. Shakespeare's next step—his departure to London—is a venture that needs no fanciful embroidery to make it intelligible. Conscious, like a later country schoolmaster, of the genius within him, he naturally sought the field where alone his talents could find their full employment.

LONDON

Those who think of Shakespeare as an ignorant youth driven by a wrathful landlord from his careless rustic existence have now to explain how he started on his new and very different career in London It is not surprising that some look elsewhere, to Bacon or to Lord Oxford, for the author of Hamlet or the Sonnets; for the explanation usually offered is as improbable as the transformation it attempts to account for. Shakespeare began, we are told, by rewriting the plays of others, among them those of Robert Greene. Why the works of a writer who boasted of a degree from both Universities should have been turned over to an illiterate new-comer is hardly to be understood; and the evidence that was for long advanced by scholars in support of this story is now seen to indicate a different and more natural course of events.

Those, however, who accept Beeston's statement that Shakespeare had been a schoolmaster find no difficulty in understanding his beginnings and progress as a dramatist. No miracle except that of genius, no hidden hand, whether that of Bacon or Lord Oxford, need be invoked. Shakespeare began as any educated young man might have begun by adapting for his purposes the models prescribed by the fashion of his time, the Latin authors familiar to him from his schooling.

Before grouping his plays in the approximate order of their composition one important observation that emerges from such a chronological arrangement as almost self-evident must be considered. Viewed as a whole and as the successive episodes in the life of one creative mind his plays reveal in their creator powers of development and self-criticism found, whether the medium be music, or painting, or literature, only in the greatest masters—those who gave to their art the devotion of a life-time. To suppose that this development could come by chance or from the mere desire to gain the applause or money of the ignorant is to deny the evidence of experience. Shakespeare had of course to make the major contribution to the fortunes of a large and important Company of actors, and at times this part of his task affected his work, but such plays as Hamlet and Othello are clearly the creations of a man who had thought long and deeply about his art. A later and in its own opinion better instructed generation did not hesitate to deny to Shakespeare even the rudiments of stage craft. The more carefully, however, this side of Shakespeare's work is examined the more clearly it is seen to be skilfully contrived for his own stage; and, what is more important, the more clearly it is seen that his craft is not an end in itself but the technical mastery inseparable from any powerful manifestation of art.

Beginning then with plays fashioned on the models then approved—plays so little like his masterpieces that they are frequently attributed to other hands—Shakespeare soon developed an original style of his own that commanded the applause of a wide public. In spite, however, of his popularity and success he was not content to repeat himself but from about his thirty-fifth year started on the series of tragic masterpieces, matched, if at all, only by the drama of ancient Athens. Nor do the works of his later years echo in feebler tones these triumphs but bring with their colouring and glow the splendid evening to the noon-day intensity of his genius—a conclusion visionary and apocalyptic.

FIRST PERIOD

From Shakespeare's arrival in London (1584) to his joining the Lord Chamberlain's men (1594)

o definite date can be given for Shakespeare's arrival in London: but by 1594 he had a body of work to his credit that must have occupied a considerable number of years. Naturally no details survive of his London connections when he was still unknown to the world, but what evidence there is indicates that he was for a time at least a member of Lord Pembroke's Company, and that for them he wrote some of his early plays.

Before the end of this period Shakespeare had established himself as a popular dramatist and as a poet of whom much was expected. The first reference to him in print, from the pen of the poet and dramatist Robert Greene, provides, indirectly, evidence of his success. Greene had failed to find in London the reward he expected for his work, and his irregular life was closing in misery and want. He felt with much bitterness that a writer received but a small return for his plays compared with the drawings taken by the performers; and on his death-bed he wrote for publication a letter to some playwrights with whom he claimed acquaintance, warning them by his own fate against depending on such ungrateful employers as the actors.

'Base minded men all three of you, if by my misery you be not warn'd; for unto none of you (like me) sought those burrs to cleave—those Puppets (I mean) that spake from our mouths, those Anticks garnisht in our colours.'

Greene then, as the allusions indicate, goes on to attack Shakespeare not merely as an actor but also as an actor-dramatist whose success, though undeserved, was making it more difficult for Greene and his friends to gain a living.

'Yes trust them not; for there is an upstart Crow, beautified with our feathers, that with his Tiger's heart wrapt in a Player's hide supposes he is as well able to bombast out a blank verse as the best of you; and being an absolute Johannes tae totum is in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a country.'

Soon after Greene's death his friend Chettle printed this letter in a pamphlet entitled Greene's Groutsworth of Wit bought with a Million of Repentance.

Marlowe, with whom Greene claimed acquaintance, was naturally displeased with the letter, for Greene like many self-confessed sinners found satisfaction in proclaiming the faults of his friends. Shakespeare also was annoyed. Chettle, three months later, in a preface to his own Kind-Heart's Dream refused to admit he had wronged Marlowe but made full apology for what he confessed was an unwarranted attack on Shakespeare.

'I am as sorry as if the original fault had been my fault, because myself have seen his demeanour no less civil than he excellent in the quality he professes. Besides, divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his Art.'

As Chettle's words indicate, Shakespeare was already highly thought of in courtly circles; and this is confirmed by the publication of his Venus and Adonis in 1593 and the Rape of Lucrece in 1594, with dedications to Lord Southampton, whose gracious entertainment of the poet is publicly and warmly acknowledged in the dedicatory epistle to Lucrece. Further evidence of Shakespeare's familiarity with courtly and learned circles is found in his Love's Labour's Lost with its copious allusion to personalities, events, and fashions, then current topics in such society. Shakespeare's poems were no doubt written during the years 1591-93 when the plague and other troubles had closed the London theatres and the Companies had to tour the provinces for a living. Shakespeare can hardly have been on tour during this period of composition, and it was not till the return to London of the leading companies, and after the extensive regrouping that it made necessary, that he joined the Lord Chamberlain's men.

Venus and Adonis, although Shakespeare's first published work, was that of a writer of recognised reputation. His success had been made on the stage; but actors were very unwilling to publish their pieces, xvi partly owing to lack of copyright protection, partly owing to their behief that publication would lessen their takings at the theatre. In this policy Shakespeare acquiesced throughout his life-time, never hastening into print with new pieces. The straitened circumstances of the actors however during their enforced absence from London gave the publishers a chance to pick up some of these much desired productions, and versions, good and bad, of certain of Shakespeare's plays now appeared in print.

From this and related evidence one can with some confidence assign to the period before the poems: his first tragedy, Titus Andronicus; his comedies, The Comedy of Errors, The Taming of the Shrew, The Two Gentlemen of Verona; his history plays, Henry VI (in three parts), and possibly Richard III. The assumption that Shakespeare did not begin his work as a dramatist till 1591 rests on the misinterpretation by Malone of Greene's attack on Shakespeare. Malone interpreted it as a charge of plagiarism. Now that this interpretation is rejected the conclusions drawn from it are unsupported, and indeed contradicted not only by the evidence of Greene and Chettle but by the circumstances in which his Poems and early plays were printed. Shakespeare must have been working as a dramatist for some years before 1590. This period of successful work explains how by 1594 he could take a leading place in the first company of the age.

SECOND PERIOD

From Shakespeare's joining the Lord Chamberlain's men in 1594 to the opening of the Globe Theatre in 1599

THE Company which Shakespeare now joined included Richard Burbage, who was to prove himself in the rôles Shakespeare provided for him the greatest tragic actor of his age, Will Kemp the popular comedian, and John Heminge and Henry Condell, who became the Company's managers and later Shakespeare's first editors. Their headquarters were at The Theatre, the first play-house to be built in England for theatrical performances.

During this period Shakespeare was living, as the subsidy rolls indicate, in easy circumstances in London; and there still survives a letter to him from a friend of his father, Richard Quiney, who was twice Bailiff of Stratford, that confirms the evidence of the subsidies. In 1596 John Shakespeare obtained from the College of Heralds a grant of arms. He was entitled to this as a former Bailiff of Stratford, but although nearly thirty years before the actual grant he had taken the preliminary steps towards this dignity, he had allowed the matter to lapse. It was no doubt considered proper in view of the poet's position in London to complete the necessary formalities, and the family shield now showed in a field of gold upon a bend sable, a spear of the first, the point upword, headed argent', and above as crest 'a falcon, with his wings displayed, standing on a wreath of his colours, supporting a spear, armed, headed, and steeled silver'. The motto was 'NON SANS DROICT' In 1597 Shakespeare bought New Place at Stratford.

Whatever his interests at this time in his personal and private affairs, Shakespeare's mind must have been unsparingly given to his work in the theatre. In 1598 Francis Meres in his Palladis Tamia describes him as 'the most excellent in both kinds [comedy and tragedy] for the stage', and adds 'for comedy, witnes his Gentlemen of Verona, his Errors, his Love labours lost, his Love labours wonne, his Midsummer night's dreame, and his Merchant of Venice: for tragedy his Richard II, Richard III, Henry IV, King John, Titus Andromeus, and his Romeo and Juliet.' He also mentions his poems and 'his sugred Sonnets among his private friends'.

The period opens with a group of 'poetical plays', Mt-lsummer-Night's Dream, Richard II, and Romeo and Juliet. The comedy is perfect in its kind and unsurpassed for the marvellous harmony it establishes among so many apparently discordant elements. The tragedy is another of the early masterpieces and anticipates in its spacious design and intensity of handling the works of Shakespeare's full maturity. But for some years to come comedy and prose were the main interest, and this, in the figure of Falstaff, overwhelms even the historical interest in the two parts of Henry IV. With Falstaff gone, there is little left for Henry V but pageantry; yet this opportunity for costume effects and patriotic verse may have been not unwelcome to Shakespeare as a suitable opening for the new Globe Theatre in 1599.

THIRD PERIOD

From the opening of the Globe (1599) to the taking over of the Blackfriars Theatre (1608)

THE Globe Theatre was opened about May 1599. With the lease of the ground on which the Theatre stood nearing an end, the Burbages bought the old dining-hall of the Blacktriars and furnished it as a theatre, but an influential circle who lived in the vicinity had this project defeated. The Burbages then acquired ground just over London Bridge on the Bankside. To this side, south of the river, they transferred some of the main timbers from the Theatre; force was necessary for the landlord hoped to retain their building for his own profit. To meet this additional expense they took into partnership as 'householders' five of the leading 'sharers' of the company, of whom Shakespeare was one.

The Blackfriars they leased to the Children of the Queen's Revels. The actors were choir boys and their theatre was described as 'private' xviii to distinguish it from ordinary theatres where the charges were not beyond the vulgar purse.

Near the beginning of this period Shakespeare's father died, in 1601; at the end, his mother, in 1608. His daughter Susanna married the well-known physician John Hall in 1607.

The great public-event of the time was the death of Queen Elizabeth and the arrival of James in London in May 1603. The King at once took over the Lord Chamberlain's Company and they were now known as the King's Men. The senior members became Grooms of the Royal Chamber and in that capacity formed part of the entourage of the Spanish Ambassador who came in August 1604, to negotiate a peace between England and Spain.

During part of this period, as Professor Wallace has shown, Shakespeare lodged with a Huguenot family in Silver Street. He was now in a position to make considerable purchases of land at Stratford and investments in the tithes of the parish.

As before, however, Shakespeare must have given unremitting attention to his art, for he was now from his thirty-fifth year to engage in the most sustained and intense effort of his career.

The plays that were to make the name of the Globe for ever famous were very different from Henry V. During the next ten years Shakespeare produced there his seven great tragedies: Julius Casar, Hamlet, Othello, Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, and Corvolanus.

Many explanations have been offered for this apparently sudden shift in Shakespeare's interest. Some have blamed the dark lady of the Sonnets and the conduct of the friend for inducing a mood of gloom and misanthropy; others have dwelt on Shakespeare's connections with Essex and Southampton, and the former's death on the block, as the cause of his disillusionment and pessimism; others again see in this tragic mood Shakespeare's infection with the spirit of a new age. The accidents of life undoubtedly provide the material on which the imagination operates; but the relationship between this accidental and the universal element in art is not so simple as cause and effect. The process of transformation is even more complicated and vital than that of digestion. But it is unnecessary to attempt an analysis of this psychological problem here, for the tragedies rightly interpreted do not reveal a spirit of gloom and disillusionment.

Many critics have dwelt on the bitterness and disgust in the works of this period. And it is true that nowhere can one find a fiercer invective and more withering scorn than that poured by these plays on the baser side of our nature. The picture of man dressed in a little brief authority playing his fantastic tricks before high heaven with an effrontery that makes the angels weep has never been drawn with more penetrating irony. And as a background we have the cowardly or malignant complacency in our natures that tolerates such shameless wickedness. Passage after passage emphasizes the der adation to which men can sink. It is summed up in one terrible line from King Lear

A dog's obey'd in office.

King Lear has been described as a tragedy of ingratitude—an ingratitude that divides parent from child and splits the very core of human existence. And the elements seem to take part in the confusion as the old and cast-off father rages on the heath with a fury that outtongues the elements. But those who find in this fury the climax of the drama have missed half the vision and the half that is greater than the whole. The design on which the drama is constructed is one familiar to great spirits in all ages, and is perhaps exhibited in its simplest elements in the old story of Elijah fleeing from Jezebel's vengeance and how as he stood at the mouth of a cave

'a great and strong wind rent the mountains and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice?

The heart of Shakespeare's drama is not reached till the storm and tempest are over and we come on the stillness of Lear's reconciliation with Cordelia. Here at last he recognises goodness for what it is in its own right. And the play's real theme is the gratitude of the converted heart at such a revelation. To see the virtues struggling in a world where their very virtue is the cause of their undoing is to be aware of tragedy; but—and this is the touch of nature that makes the reader kin with the poet—this makes us love the virtues not less but more. Had Shakespeare not seen so clearly the hollowness of the world he could not have created with such passionate brooding those spirits whom his art has made the dwellers for all time in the imaginations of men. He is not confounded by his terrible visions, for he sees in the midst of them what walks unscathed; and we read his plays because, however unconsciously, we share in that triumph, and have at least a sense, however our intelligence or conduct may later deny it, of what the soul hungers to attain to.

This revelation which is the consummation of his art did not come to Shakespeare suddenly or because a woman was false or a friend disloyal. It is born of the modest and ceaseless years of thought and labour which are not without their intimations of the final triumph of this period. Viewed in retrospect the humour and comedy, which his earlier critics found more natural to his genius, are only another aspect, a partial realisation, of his tragic vision. Philosopheis have indeed maintained that tragedy and comedy have another and finer connection than that of contrast; but, though there have been great tragic artists and great comic artists before and since Shakespeare's time, nowhere are they found united as in his work, and in such a manner that each but adds a new force to its apparent opposite.

Viewed after the event, the tragic period is seen as the natural development of the previous periods and to be explained only in so far as we can explain to ourselves the growth and nature of Shakespeare's art.

FOURTH PERIOD

From the taking over of the Blackfriars (1608) to the burning of the Globe Theatre (1613)

HE manager of the Children at the Blackfriars theatre was foolish enough to allow indiscreet stage allusions to royalty that led to the suppression of his company. The Burbages and a group of actors as 'householders' that included Shakespeare took over from him his lease, and the King's men now acted at the Blackfriars during the winter months instead of in the open Globe Theatre, to the very substantial increase in their takings. The King's men were now too well established in official favour for the old objections to their presence there to be raised again.

The plays of this period have happy endings; but to distinguish their peculiar colouring from that of his earlier comedies they have been called Romances.

Once again critics have dwelt on the contrasts between this and the previous period and denied any spiritual continuity between them, or have paradoxically asserted that the Romances are the flight into a world of make-believe that alone could save the poet from the madness in which his tragic thoughts would inevitably have engulfed him. Or again the fashion of the time is thought by some to have directed Shakespeare's interest to this type of play.

But the tragedies are the foundation on which the Romances rest. If Shakespeare had found the heart of man wanting in the fiery trial of the tragedies, what would be the hopes and aspirations in which human nature reclothes itself with every new generation as regularly as the flowers return with the spring—what would these hopes and aspirations be but will-o'-the-wisps to lure mankind to its destruction, or to leave it, should it survive, bogged in disillusion and a dreary materialism?

If fashion had anything to do with Shakespeare's return to comedy, it was because it gave him an opportunity for the expression of something he had now very much at heart, something that came naturally after the struggle of the tragedies, as naturally as Prospero's sympathies with Miranda's hopes and fears.

There can be little doubt that the Tempest, considered in conjunction with what we know of Shakespeare's arrangements at this date for taking over his house in Stratford from his cousin Thomas Greene, the town-clerk, indicates that he intended it to be his farewell to the tage. Persuaded no doubt by the importunity of his old colleagues he returned to take a final bow in Henry VIII. During the first performance of the piece, on 29th June 1613, the Globe was burnt to the ground; and this accident, for lack of more precise knowledge, may be taken as marking the conclusion of Shakespeare's work as an actor and dramatist.

STRATFORD

CHARESPEARE seems to have passed his last days quietly at Stratford, though there is a record of at least one visit to London. He made his will in January 1615 or 1616, and revised it on 25th March 1616, after the marriage of his second daughter Judith to Thomas Quiney in February 1616. He remembers amongst other friends his old colleagues, Burbage, Heminge and Condell, the last survivors of the group with which he had acted for some twenty years. He makes provision for Judith and for his sister Joan Hart, but the bulk of his estate is settled on his daughter Susanna and her heirs. His wife was obviously going to live with her daughter, who was, if what she put on her mother's grave gives any echo of truth, devoted to her.

Shakespeare died on St. George's day, 23rd April 1616, and was buried, having this right as a tithe-holder, in the Chancel of the Church at Stratford. The monument on the north wall was erected sometime before 1623. In 1623 his wife was buried beside him, and his daughter Susanna not far away in 1649. She left a daughter Elizabeth Hall who had married Thomas Nash and, on his death, Sir John Bernard, but was to die without issue. Judith Shakespeare had three sons who all died childless before her. From his sister only, and that through her second son Thomas, can those living to-day who are related to Shakespeare claim their descent.

THE FIRST FOLIO

In 1623, seven years after Shakespeare's death, his old friends and fellow-actors, John Heminge and Henry Condell, gave the world the first collected edition of Shakespeare's plays. This is now known as the First Folio, because of its format and to distinguish it from the Second, Third, and Fourth Folios, issued in 1632, 1663, and 1685 respectively. Each of these later Folios is in turn based on its predecessor. Heminge and Condell attributed thirty-six plays to Shakespeare, all that are included in the present volume except Pericles, for Pericles, although its omission by Shakespeare's colleagues is good evidence that it is not wholly his, undoubtedly contains scenes from his pen.

Their long friendship with Shakespeare, their admiration for his genius, their position of authority in the company, for they had acted as its managers for many years, made Heminge and Condell in some respects well qualified for their task. They, if anyone did, must have known what was by Shakespeare and what was not; their office in the company had made them familiar with his manuscripts. Yet their edition has presented students with problems for which reasonable solutions have been found only in recent years; problems that may be summarized here in the questions: Why did Shakespeare himself not supervise the printing of his plays; and why, since Heminge and Condell claimed to be Shakespeare's literary executors and to have used his papers, is the First Folio not accepted as the last and final authority for the text of all the plays? Why have there been so many subsequent editors, a line that begins with Rowe in 1709, and includes Pope (1725), Theobald (1733), Johnson (1765), Capell (1768) and Malone (1790), and threatens, like the phantom procession that appalled Macbeth, to stretch out to the crack of doom.

Shakespeare did not print his plays when he produced them because the actors did not favour such a procedure. They feared that publication might affect adversely their takings at the theatre, and the financial return from such publications, at least to the author or actors, was insufficient to overcome this fear. It was not because there was no reading public; publishers were only too ready to print his plays; but there was nothing in the nature of modern copyright to protect the author's interest; and to dispose for a pittance of plays that were drawing good houses did not seem sound policy. Yet in spite of these considerations nineteen of Shakespeare's plays were printed in some form or other during his lifetime, and a twentieth just before 1623.

THE QUARTOS

THE Quartos, so called from their format, contained single plays and sold at sixpence apiece, compared with the pound charged for the First Folio. For their printing the initiative lay with the publishers rather than with the actors. Enterprising if unscrupulous printers were ready to issue even imperfect versions of the plays, whether put together by needy actors who had had parts in them, or vamped up by someone who had carried away from performances the drift of the plot. Seven plays were published in this manner: The Contention, The True Tragedy (these were pirated versions of 2 and 3 Henry VI), A Shrew, Romeo and Juliet, Merry Wives of Windsor, Henry V, and Hamlet—and The Troublesome Reign of King John may be an eighth. These are now known as the Bad Quartos.

This attack on their property inevitably provoked a reaction in Shakespeare and his company. They published in reply the genuine text of Romeo and Juliet and Hamlet, and they were not unwilling to print plays that had become well known through frequent performance. In contrast, then, to the seven or eight mutilated or distorted versions stand fourteen authorised or authoritative texts: Titus Andronicus, Love's Labour's Lost, Romeo and Juliet, Richard II, Richard III, I and 2 Henry IV, Merchant of Venice, Midsummer-Night's Dream, Much Ado, Hamlet, Troilus and Cressida, King Lear, Othello. These are the Good Quartos. Even they, however, were treated as in some measure provisional publications. Shakespeare never revised the proofs for any of them, and the printer, although he was in quite a number working from a manuscript in Shakespeare's own hand, found difficulties (see p. 1350) he failed to master. The Good Quartos are therefore in places faulty or corrupt, and Shakespeare died before he cared to mend matters.

The actors, when at last they came to their task, had to provide the publisher with copy that extends in print to nearly 900 pages in double column. Their knowledge that many of the Good Quartos were set up from the author's manuscript or an authorised transcript prompted their use of some printed versions as copy for their own text; they took the precaution, however, of having the printed versions compared with manuscripts in their possession, but too casually to exclude all error. The manuscript copy they had to provide for the other plays was also defective for much the same reasons that the Quarto prints were not faultless: the scribe prepared his draft from material not originally designed for the printer's use, and only careful supervision could have prevented his not infrequent stumblings.

To the printed record of this large body of theatrical copy, often entangled as it were in Quarto and Folio, a modern editor has to address himself in an attempt to remove its corruptions. Heminge and Condell discharged their task honestly and with all the skill that could be expected of them; posterity can never be too grateful for their care and pains; but only those who read their Shakespeare regularly in the early versions can know how much the general reader owes to the subsequent editorial labours of those whom Johnson defined as harmless drudges.

PETER ALEXANDER

The Preliminary Matter to the FIRST FOLIO (1623)

Heminge and Condell, who chited the first collected edition of Shakespeare's plays, arranged their contents in three sections: Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. That arrangement as well as the order in which they placed the pieces in each section is preserved in this edition.

To their text the editors prefixed the preliminary matter here reproduced. Opposite the engraved portrait of Shakespeare which stood as frontispiece—now known as the Droeshout engraving after the name of the engraver—they placed Ben Jonson's lines To the Reader. Then follow their dedicatory epistle and the address to 'the great variety of readers'. They also included Ben Jonson's famous lines to Shakespeare's memory and short tributes from Leonard Digges and John Mabbe, both of Oxford University, and verses from the sister University of Cambridge by Hugh Holland.

Their 'Catalogue' does not mention Troilus and Cressida, for they were able to include this play, in a kind of no man's land, between the Histories and the Tragedies, only at the last moment and after the settlement of a dispute with the publishers who had issued the Quarto version in 1609. Heminge and Condell originally intended to place Troilus and Cressida among the Tragedies immediately after Romeo and Juliet.

TO THE READER

This Figure, that thou here seest put, It was for gentle Shakespeare cut; Wherein the Grauer had a strife with Nature, to out-doo the life: O, could he but haue drawne his wit As well in brasse, as he hath hit His face; the Print would then surpasse All, that vvas euer vvrit in brasse. But, since he cannot, Reader, looke Not on his Picture, but his Booke.

B. I.

TO THE MOST NOBLE AND INCOMPARABLE PAIRE OF BRETHREN, WILLIAM, EARLE OF PEMBROKE, &c., LORD CHAMBERLAINE TO THE KINGS MOST EXCELLENT MAIESTY, AND PHILIP, EARLE OF MONTGOMERY, &c., GENTLEMAN OF HIS MAIESTIES BEDCHAMBER; BOTH KNIGHTS OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER, AND OUR SINGULAR GOOD LORDS.

Right Honourable,

X 7 HILST we studie to be thankful in our particular, for the many fauors we have received from your L.L. we are falne vpon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diverse things that can bee, feare, and rashnesse; rashnesse in the enterprize, and feare of the successe. For, when we valew the places your H.H. sustaine, we cannot but know their dignity greater, then to descend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have depriv'd our selves of the defence of our Dedication. But since your L.L. haue beene pleas'd to thinke these trifles some-thing, heeretofore; and have prosequited both them, and their Author living, with so much favour: we hope, that (they out-living him, and he not having the fate, common with some, to be exequator to his owne writings) you will vse the like indulgence toward them, you have done vnto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any Booke choose his Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, so much were your L.L. likings of the seuerall parts. when they were acted, as before they were published, the Volume ask'd to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of selfe-profit, or fame: onely to keepe the memory of so worthy a Friend, & Fellow aliue, as was our Shakespeare, by humble offer of his playes, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we have justly observed, no man to come neere your L.L. but with a kind of religious addresse; it hath bin the height of our care, who are the Presenters, to make the present worthy of your H.H. by the perfection. But, there we must also craue our abilities to be considerd, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach foorth milke, creame, fruites, or what they haue: and many Nations (we have heard) that had not gummes & incense, obtained their requests with a leauened Cake. It was no fault to approch their Gods, by what meanes they could: And the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly consecrate to your H.H. these remaines of your servant Shakespeare; that what delight is in them, may be euer your L.L. the reputation his, & the faults ours, if any be committed, by a payre so carefull to shew their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

Your Lordshippes most bounden,

IOHN HEMINGE. HENRY CONDELL.

TO THE GREAT VARIETY OF READERS

ROM the most able, to him that can but spell: There you are number'd. We had rather you were weighd. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends vpon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purses. Well! it is now publique, & you wil stand for your primiledges wee know: to read, and censure Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a Booke, the Stationer saies. Then, how odde socuer your braines be, or your wisedomes, make your licence the same, and spare not. Indge your sixe-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your fine shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, what euer you do, Buy. Censure will not drive a Trade, or make the Iacke go. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and sit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dailie, know, these Playes have had their triall alreadie, and stood out all Appeales; and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to have bene wished, that the Author himselfe had liu'd to have set forth, and overseen his owne writings; But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to have collected & publish'd them; and so to haue publish'd them, as where (before) you were abus'd with diverse stolne, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of iniurious imposters, that expos'd them: euen those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbes; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceived them. Who, as he was a happie imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together: And what he thought, he vttered with that easinesse, that wee haue scarse received from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our prouince, who onely gather his works, and give them you, to praise him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be lost. Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you doe not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to vnderstand him. And so we leave you to other of his Friends, whom if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade your selues, and others. And such Readers we wish him.

IOHN HEMINGE. HENRIE CONDELL.

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BELOUED, THE AVTHOR MR. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE:

AND WHAT HE HATH LEFT VS.

To draw no enuy (Shakespeare) on thy name, Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame: While I confesse thy writings to be such, As neither Man, nor Muse, can praise too much. 'Tis true, and all mens suffrage. But these wayes Were not the paths I meant vnto thy praise: For seeliest Ignorance on these may light, Which, when it sounds at best, but eccho's right; Or blinde Affection, which doth ne're aduance The truth, but gropes, and vrgeth all by chance; Or crafty Malice, might pretend this praise, And thinke to ruine, where it seem'd to raise. These are, as some infamous Baud, or Whore, Should praise a Matron. What could hurt her more? But thou art proofe against them, and indeed Aboue th' ill fortune of them, or the need. I, therefore will begin. Soule of the Age! The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage! My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lye A little further, to make thee a roome: Thou art a Moniment, without a tombe, And art aliue still, while thy Booke doth liue, And we have wits to read, and praise to give. That I not mixe thee so, my braine excuses; I meane with great, but disproportion'd Muses: For, if I thought my judgement were of yeeres, I should commit thee surely with thy peeres, And tell, how farre thou didst our Lilv out-shine, Or sporting Kid, or Marlowes mighty line. And though thou hadst small Latine, and lesse Greeke, From thence to honour thee, I would not seeke For names; but call forth thund'ring Æschilus, Euripides, and Sophocles to vs. Paccuuius, Accius, him of Cordoua dead, To life againe, to heare thy Buskin tread, And shake a Stage: Or, when thy Sockes were on, Leaue thee alone, for the comparison Of all, that insolent Greece, or haughtie Rome sent forth, or since did from their ashes come. Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to showe, To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe. He was not of an age, but for all time!

And all the Muses still were in their prime,

When like Apollo he came forth to warme Our earce, or like a Mercury to charme I Nature her selfe was proud of his designes. And loy'd to weare the dressing of his lines ! Which were so nichly spun, and wouen so fit, As, since, she will vouchsafe no other Wit. The merry Greeke, tast Aristophanes, Neat Terence, witty Plantus, now not please; But antiquated, and deserted lye As they were not of Natures family. Yet must I not give Nature all: Thy Art, My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part. For though the Posts matter, Nature be, His Art doth give the fashion. And, that he, Who casts to write a liuing line, must sweat, (such as thine are) and strike the second heat Vpon the Muses anuile: turne the same. (And himselfe with it) that he thinkes to frame; Or for the lawrell, he may gaine a scorne, For a good Poet's made, as well as borne And such wert thou. Looke how the fethers face Liues in his issue, euen so, the race Of Shakespeares minde, and manners brightly shines In his well torned, and true-filed lines: In each of which, he seemes to shake a Lance, As brandish't at the eves of Ignorance. Sweet Swan of Auon! what a sight it were To see thee in our waters yet appeare, And make those flights upon the bankes of Thames, That so did take Eliza, and our Iames! But stay, I see thee in the Hemisphere Aduanc'd, and made a Constellation there!

Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheere the drooping Stage;
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourn'd like night,

And despaires day, but for thy Volumes light.

Ben: Ionson.

VPON THE LINES AND LIFE OF THE FAMOUS SCENICKE POET. MASTER WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

Those hands, which you so ciapt, go now, and wring You Britaines braue; for done are Shakespeares dayes. His dayes are done, that made the dainty Playes, Which made the Globe of heau'n and earth to ring. Dry'de is that veine, dry'd is the Thespian Spring, Turn'd all to teares, and Phabus clouds his rayes. That corp's, that coffin now besucke those bayes, Which crown'd him Poet first, then Poets King. If Tragedies might any Prologue haue, All those he made, would scarse make one to this. Where Fame, now that he gone is to the graue (Deaths publique tyring-house) the Nuncius is. For though his line of life went soone about,

The life yet of his lines shall neuer out.

TO THE MFMORIE OF THE DECEASED AUTHOUR MAISTER W. SHAKESPEARE.

CHAKE-SPEARE, at length thy pious fellowes give The world thy Workes: thy Workes, by which, out-line Thy Tombe, thy name must: when that stone is rent, And Time dissolues thy Stratford Moniment, Here we aliue shall view thee still. This Boo. ... When Brasse and Marble fade, shall make thee looke Fresh to all Ages: when Posteritie Shall loath what's new, thinke all is prodegie That is not Shake-speares; eu'ry Line, each Verse Here shall reuiue, redeeme thee from thy Herse. Nor Fire, nor cankring Age, as Naso said, Of his, thy wit-fraught Booke shall once inuade. Nor shall I e're beleeue, or thinke thee dead (Though mist) vntill our bankrout Stage be sped (Impossible) with some new straine t' out-do Passions of Iuliet, and her Romeo; Or till I heare a Scene more nobly take, Then when thy half-Sword parlying Romans spake Till these, till any of thy Volumes rest Shall with more fire, more feeling be exprest, Be sure, our Shake-speare, thou canst neuer dye, But crown'd with Lawrell, liue eternally.

TO THE MEMORIE OF M. W. SHAKE-SPEARE

WEE wondred (Shake-speare) that thou went's so soone From the Worlds-Stage, to the Graues-Tyring-roome Wee thought thee dead, but this thy printed worth, Tels thy Spectators, that thou went'st but forth To enter with applause. An Actors Art, Can dye, and liue, to acte a second part. That's but an Exit of Mortalitie; This, a Re-entrance to a Plaudite.

THE SCENE: A ship at sea: afterwards an uninhabited island.

ACT ONE

Scene I. On a ship at sea; a tempestuous noise of thunder and lightning heard.

Enter a Shipmaster and a Boatswain.

Master, Boatswain!

Boats. Here, master; what cheer? Master. Good! Speak to th' mariners; fall to 't yarely, or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir.

Enter Mariners.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts! cheerly, cheerly, my hearts! yare, yare! Take in the topsail. Tend to th' master's whistle. Blow till thou burst thy wind, if room enough.

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, FERDINAND, GONZALO, and Others.

Good boatswain, have care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below. Ant. Where is the master, boson?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour; keep your cabins; you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What cares these roarers for the name of king? To cabin! silence! Trouble us not.

Gon. Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more. Use your authority; if you cannot, give thanks you have liv'd so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.-

Cheerly, good hearts!-Out of our way. I say. IExit.

Gon. I have great comfort from this Methinks he hath no drowning fellow. mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Stand fast, good Fate, to his hanging; make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage. If he be not born to be hang'd, our case is miserable. Exeunt.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the topmast. Yare, lower, lower! Bring her to try wi' th' maincourse. [A cry within] A plague upon this howling! They are louder than the weather or our office.

Re-enter SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, and GONZALO.

Yet again! What do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, incharitable dog! Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, cur; hang, you whoreson, insolent noise-maker; we are less afraid to be drown'd than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him for drowning, though the ship were no stronger than a nutshell, and as leaky as an unstanched

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold; set her two courses: off to sea again; lay her off.

Enter Mariners, wet.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Exeunt. Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The King and Prince at prayers! Let's assist them,

For our case is as theirs. Ser by drunkaids.

This wide-chopp'd rascal—would thou Lie there my art. mightst lie drowning

The washing of ten tides! He'll be hang'd yet,

Though every drop of water swear against

And gape at wid'st to glut him.

Scene II. The island. Before Prospero's cell. Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mira. If by your art, my dearest father, vou have Put the wild waters in this rear, allay them. The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,

But that the sea, mounting to th' welkin's cheek.

Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffered 5 With those that I saw suffer! A brave vessel.

Who had no doubt some noble creature in her.

Dash'd all to pieces! O, the cry did knock Against my very heart! Poor souls, they perish'd.

Had I been any god of power, I would to Have sunk the sea within the earth or ere It should the good ship so have swallow'd and

The fraughting souls within her.

Pro. Be collected; No more amazement; tell your piteous heart

There's no harm done.

Mira. O, woe the day! No harm. Pro. I have done nothing but in care of thee, 16 Of thee, my dear one, thee, my daughter, who

Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing

Of whence I am, nor that I am more better Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell. And thy no greater father.

More to know Mira. Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Pro. "I'is time I am out of patience. 51 I should inform thee farther. Lendthy hand. And We are merely cheated of our lives And pluck my magic garment from me. So, [Lays down his manile.

Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.

The direcul spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd

The very virtue of compassion in thee, I have with such provision in mine art So safely ordered that there is no soul-No, not so much perdition as an hair Betid to any creature in the vessel Which thou heard'st civ, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down, For thou must now know farther.

You have often Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp'd, And left me to a bootless inquisition, Concluding 'Stay; not yet'.

The hour's now come: The very minute bids thee ope thine ear. Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember

A time before we came unto this cell? I do not think thou canst: for then thou wast not

Out three years old.

Mıra. Certainly, sir, I can. Pro. By what? By any other house, or person?

Of any thing the image, tell me, that Hath kept with thy remembrance?

'Tis far off, Mira. And rather like a dream than an assurance That my remembrance warrants. Had I not Four, or five, women once, that tended me?

Pro. Thou hadst, and more, Miranda. But how is it

That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else

In the dark backward and abysm of time? If thou rememb'rest aught, ere thou cam'st here,

How thou cam'st here thou mayst. Mıra. But that I do not. Pro. Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year since, Thy father was the Duke of Milan, and A prince of power.

Mıra. Sir, are not you my father? Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and

She said thou wast my daughter; and thy father

Was Duke of Milan, and his only heir And princess no worse issued.

Mira. O, the heavens! What foul play had we that we came from thence?

Or blessed was't we did?

Both, both, my girl. By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heav'd thence:

But blessedly holp hither.

O, my heart bleeds Mira. To think o' th' teen that I have turn'd you to, you, farther.

My brother and thy uncle, call'd Antonio-

I pray thee, mark me that a brother should Be so perfidious. He, whom next thyself Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put The manage of my state; as at that time Through all the signories it was the first, 71 And Prospero the prime duke, being so reputed

In dignity, and for the liberal arts Without a parallel, those being all my study-

The government I cast upon my brother 75 And to my state grew stranger, being transported

And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle-

Dost thou attend me?

Sir, most heedfully. Mira. Pro. Being once perfected how to grant

How to deny them, who t' advance, and who To trash for over-topping, new created 81 The creatures that were mine, I say, or charg'd 'em,

Or else new form'd 'em; having both the key

Of officer and office, set all hearts i' th' state To what tune pleas'd his ear; that now he

The ivy which had hid my princely trunk And suck'd my verdure out on't. Thou attend'st not.

Mira. O, good sir, I do!

I pray thee, mark me. I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated

To closeness and the bettering of my mind With that which, but by being so retir'd, 91 O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false That wrings mine eyes to't. brother

Awak'd an evil nature; and my trust, Like a good parent, did beget of him A falsehood, in its contrary as great As my trust was; which had indeed no limit,

A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded, Not only with what my revenue yielded, But what my power might else exact, like one Who having into truth, by telling of it, 100 Made such a sinner of his memory,

To credit his own lic-he did believe He was indeed the Duke; out o' th' substitution,

And executing th' outward face of royalty With all prerogative. Hence his ambition growing-

Dost thou hear?

Mira. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness. Pro. To have no screen between this part he play'd

Which is from my remembrance. Please And him he play'd it for, he needs will be Absolute Milan. Me, poor man-my library Was dukedom large enough-of temporal rovalties

He thinks me now incapable; confederates. So dry he was for sway, wi' th' King of Naples.

To give him annual tribute, do him homage. Subject his coronet to his crown, and bend The dukedom, yet unbow'd-alas, poor Mılan I-

To most ignoble stooping.

O the heavens! Mira. Pro. Mark his condition, and th' event.

then tell me If this might be a brother.

I should sin Mira. To think but nobly of my grandmother: Good wombs have borne bad sons.

Now the condition: This King of Naples, being an enemy 121 To me inveterate, hearkens my brother's suit;

Which was, that he, in lieu o' th' premises, Of homage, and I know not how much tribute.

Should presently extirpate me and mine Out of the dukedom, and confer fair Milan With all the honours on my brother. Whereon,

A treacherous army levied, one midnight Fated to th' purpose, did Antonio open The gates of Milan; and, i' th' dead of darkness.

The ministers for 'a' purpose hurried thence

Me and thy crying self.

Alack, for pity! Mira. I, not rememb'ring how I cued cut then, Will cry it o'er again; it is a hart Hear a little further. Pro. And then I'll bring thee to the present business

Which now's upon 's; without the which this story Were most impertinent.

Wherefore did they not Mira.

That hour destroy us? Well demanded, wench! Pro. My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not, So dear the love my people bore me; cor set

A mark so bloody on the business; but With colours fairer painted their foul ends. In few, they hurried us aboard a bark; Bore us some leagues to sea, where they prepared 145

105 A rotten carcass of a butt, not rigg'd.

Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats Instinctively have quit it. There they hoist us.

To cry to th' sea, that roar'd to us; to sigh Come away, servant; come; I am ready To th' winds, whose pity, sighing back again,

Did us but loving wrong.

Alack, what trouble Mira. Was I then to you!

O. a cherubin Pre.

Thou wast that did preserve me! Thou didst smile.

Infused with a fortitude from heaven, When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt.

Under my burden groan'd; which rais'd in

An undergoing stomach, to bear up Against what should ensue.

How came we ashore? Pro. By Providence divine. Some food we had and some fresh water that A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,

Out of his charity, who being then appointed

Master of this design, did give us, with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,

Which since have steaded much: so, of his gentleness, Knowing I lov'd my books, he furnish'd me From mine own library with volumes that I prize above my dukedom.

Would I might Mira.

But ever see that man!

Pro. Now I arise. IPuts on his mantle.

Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow. Here in this island we arriv'd; and here Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit

Than other princess' can, that have more time

For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. Mira. Heavens thank you for't! And now,

I pray you, sir. For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason

For raising this sea-storm?

Pro. Know thus far forth: By accident most strange, bountiful Fortune,

Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies Brought to this shore; and by my prescience

I find my zenith doth depend upon A most auspicious star, whose influence If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes Will ever after droop. Here cease more In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the questions;

Thou art inclin'd to sleep; 'tis a good dullness.

And give it way. I know thou canst not choose.

Miranda sleeps. now.

Approach, my Ariel. Come.

Enter ARIEL.

Ari. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail! I come

To answer thy best pleasure; be't to fly, To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride 191 On the curl'd clouds. To thy strong bidding task

Ariel and all his quality.

Hast thou, spirit. Pro. Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?

Ari. To every article.

I boarded the King's ship; now on the beak. Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin, I flam'd amazement. Sometime I'd divide, And burn in many places; on the topmast, The yards, and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly,

Then meet and join. Jove's lightning, the precursors

O' th' dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary

And sight-outrunning were not; the fire and cracks Of sulphurous roaring the most mighty

Neptune Seem to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,

Yea, his dread trident shake.

My brave spirit! Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil Would not infect his reason?

Ari. Not a soul

But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd tricks of desperation. Alĺ but Some mariners Plung'd in the foaming brine, and quit the vessel,

Then all afire with me; the King's son. Ferdinand.

With hair up-staring—then like reeds, not hair-

Was the first man that leapt; cried 'Hell is empty And all the devils are here'.

Pro. Why, that's my spirit! But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. Close by, my master. Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?

Not a hair perish'd; Ari. On their sustaining garments not a blemish, But fresher than before; and, as thou bad'st me, isle.

The King's son have I landed by himself, Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs La an odd angle of the isle, and sitting, His arms in this sad knot.

Of the King's ship, Pro. The mariners, say how thou hast dispos'd. and all the rest o' th' fleet ?

Safely in harbour Is the King's ship; in the deep nook, where

Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew

From the still-vex'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:

The mariners all under hatches stowed. Who, with a charm join'd to their suff'red labour.

I have left asleep; and for the rest o' th' fleet,

Which I dispers'd, they all have met again, And are upon the Mediterranean flote Bound sadly home for Naples. Supposing that they saw the King's ship wreck'd.

And his great person perish.

Ariel, thy charge Pro. Exactly is perform'd; but there's more Refusing her grand hests, she did confine work.

What is the time o' th' day?

Past the mid season. Ari. Pro. At least two glasses. The time 'twixt six and now Must by us both be spent most preciously. Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains.

Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd.

Which is not yet perform'd me.

How now, moody? What is 't thou canst demand?

My liberty. Ari. Pro. Before the time be out? No more! I prithee.

Remember I have done thee worthy service. Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakings, serv'd

Without or grudge or grumblings. Thou didst promise

To bate me a full year.

Dost thou forget Pro. From what a torment I did free thee? Ari. No.

Pro. Thou dost; and think'st it much to tread the ooze

Of the salt deep,

To run upon the sharp wind of the north, To do me business in the veins o' th' earth When it is bak'd with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir. Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing. Hast thou forgot

The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envv

Was grown into a hoop? Hast thou forgot her? Ari. No. sir.

Pro. Thou hast. Where was she born? Speak; tell me. Arl Siz. in Argier.

Pro. O. was she so? I must Once in a month recount what then hast been,

Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch Sycorax,

For muschiefs manifold, and sorcerietertible

To enter human hearing, from Argier Thou know'st was banish'd; for one thing she did

They would not take her life. Is not this true?

Ari Ay, sir. Pro. This blue-ey'd hag was hither Pro. brought with child,

And here was left by th' sailors. Thou, my As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant:

And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands, thee, By help of her more potent ministers, 273 And in her most unmitigable rage. Into a cloven pine; within which rift Imprison'd thou didst painfully remain

A dozen years; within which space she died,

And left thee there, where thou didst vent thy groans As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island-Save for the son that she did litter here, A freckl'd whelp, hag-born-not honour'd

A human shape.

Yes, Caliban her son. Pro. Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st

What torment I did find thee in; thy groans Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts

Of ever-angry bears; it was a torment To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax Could not again undo. It was mine art, When I arriv'd and heard thee, that made gape

The pine, and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master. Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak

And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till 295 Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Pardon, master: Ari. I will be correspondent to command, And do my spriting gently.

Do so; and after two days Pro. I will discharge thee.

Ari That's my noble master ! I do? 800

Pro. Go make thyself like a nymph o' th' sea; be subject

To no sight but thene and mine, invisible To every eyeball else. Go take this shape, And hither come in 't. Go, hence with diligence I [Exit Ariel.

well: Awake.

Mira. The strangeness of your story put Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off. Come on. We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yields us kind answer. 'Tis a villain, sir, Mira.

I do not love to look on.

But as 'tis, Pro. 310 We cannot miss him: he does make our fire.

Fetch in our wood, and serves in offices That profit us. What ho! slave! Caliban Thou earth, thou! Speak.

Cal. [Within] There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth, I say; there's other business for thee. Come, thou tortoise! when?

Re-enter ARIEL like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel, Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit. Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself Upon thy wicked dam, come forth ! Enter CALIBAN.

Cal. As wicked dew as e'er my mother brush'd

With raven's feather from unwholesome

Drop on you both! A south-west blow on ye

And blister you all o'er!

Pro. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps.

Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins

Shall, for that vast of night that they may

All exercise on thee; thou shalt be pinch'd As thick as honeycomb, each pinch more stinging

Than bees that made 'em.

I must eat my dinner. This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother, Which thou tak'st from me. When thou Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee cam'st first,

Thou strok'st me and made much of me, wouldst give me

Water with berries in't, and teach me how To name the bigger light, and how the less,

What shall I do? Say what. What shall That burn by day and night; and then I lov'd thee.

And show'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle. The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place and fertile.

Curs'd be I that did so! All the charms Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!

Awake, dear heart, awake; thou hast slept For I am all the subjects that you have, Which first was mine own king; and here you sty me

In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me

The rest o' th' island.

Pro. Thou most lying slave, Whom stripes may move, not kindness! I have us'd thee,

Filth as thou art, with human care, and lodg'd thee

In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate

The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho, O ho! Would 't had been done. Thou didst prevent me; I had peopl'd else This isle with Calibans.

Abhorred slave. Mira. Which any print of goodness wilt not take, Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee.

Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour

One thing or other. When thou didst not. savage,

Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble like

A thing most brutish. I endow'd thy purposes With words that made them known. But thy vile race, Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures Could not abide to be with: therefore wast thou

Deservedly confin'd into this rock; who hadst

Deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me langauge, and my profit on't

Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you

For learning me your language !

Hag-seed, hence ! Fetch us in fuel. And be quick, thou 'rt

To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, malice?

If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly

What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps.

roar, That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, pray thee. [Aside] I must obey. His art is of such pow'r, t would control my dam's god, Setebos,

And make a vassal of him.

So, stave; hence t Pro. (Ext Caliban.

Re-enter ARISL invisible, playing and strging : FERDINAND following.

Ariel's Song.

Come unto these yellow sands. And then take hands: Curtisted when you have and Liss'd. The wild waves whist, Foot it featly here and there, 379 And, sweet sprites, the burden bear. Hark, hark I Burden Jispersedly. Bow-wow.

The warch dogs bark. Burden dispersedly. Bow-wow. Hark, hark! I hear

The strain of strutting chanticleer 385 Cry. Cock-a-diddle-dow.

Fer. Where should this music be? I' th' air or th' earth? It sounds no more; and sure it waits upon Some god o' th' island. Sirting on a bank. Weeping again the King my father's wreck, This music crept by me upon the waters,

Allaying both their fury and my passion With its sweet air; thence I have follow'd

Or it hath drawn me rather. But 'tis gone. No, it begins again.

Ariel's Song.

Full fathom five thy father lies; Of his bones are coral made; Those are pearls that were his eyes: Nothing of him that doth fade But doth suffer a sea-change Into something rich and strange. Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell: Burden. Ding-dong. Hark! now I hear them-Ding-dong bell.

The ditty does remember my drown'd father.

This is no mortal business, nor no sound That the earth owes. I hear it now above I fear you have done yourself some wrong;

Pro. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance.

And say what thou seest yond.

What is't? a spirit? Mira. Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir, To be inclin'd my way! It carries a brave form. But 'tis a spirit.

hath such senses 412 As we have, such. This gallant which thou The Queen of Naples.

Was in the wreck; and but he's something [Aside] They are both in either's pow'rs; stain'd

With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou mightst call him A goodly person. He hath lost his fellows. And strays about to find 'em.

Mira. I might call him A thing divine: for nothing natural I ever saw so noble.

It goes on, I see, Pro. [Aside]

As my soul prompts it. Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free thee Within two days for this.

Most sure, the goddesa Fer. On whom these airs attend ! Vouchsafe my play'r May know if you remain upon this island; And that you will some good instruction give How I may bear me here. My prime request,

Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder I

If you be maid or no? Mira. No wonder, sir;

But certainly a maid.

My language? Heavens! I am the best of them that speak this speech, Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro. How? the best? What wert thou, if the King of Naples heard thee? Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me: And that he does I weep. Myself am

Naples, Who with mine eyes, never since at ebb, heheld

The King my father wreck'd. Alack, for mercy! Mira. Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords, the Duke of Milan And his brave son being twain.

The Duke of Milan Pro. [Aside] And his more braver daughter could control thee,

If now 'twere fit to do't. At the first sight my They have chang'd eyes. Delicate Ariel, 405 I'll set thee free for this. [Io Fer.] A word, good sir;

a word.

Mira. Why speaks my father so ungently? This

Is the third man that e'er I saw; the first That e'er I sigh'd for. Pity move my father

O. if a virgin, Fer. P10. No, wench; it eats and sleeps and And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you Soft, sir! one word more. Pro.

but this swift business 450 I must uneasy make, lest too light winning Make the prize light. [To Fer.] One word more; I charge thee

That thou attend me; thou dost here usurp The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself

Upon this island as a spy, to win it From me, the lord on't.

Fer. No, as I am a man. Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple.

If the ill spirit have so fair a house. Good things will strive to dwell with't. Follow me

Speak not you for him; he's a traitor. Come:

I'll manacle thy neck and feet together. Sea-water shalt thou drink; thy food shall be The fresh-brook mussels, wither'd roots, and husks Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow.

I will resist such entertainment till 465 Mine enemy has more power.

[He draws, and is charmed from moving. Mira O dear father,

Make not too rash a trial of him, for He's gentle, and not fearful.

Pro. What, I say, My foot my tutor? Put thy sword up, traitor;

Who mak'st a show but dar'st not strike, thy conscience

Is so possess'd with guilt. Come from thy ward:

For I can here disarm thee with this stick And make thy weapon drop.

Mira. Beseech you, father! Pro. Hence! Hang not on my garments. Mıra. Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.

Silence! One word more Pro. Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What!

An advocate for an impostor! hush! Thou think'st there is no more such shapes as he,

Having seen but him and Caliban. Foolish wench!

To th' most of men this is a Caliban, 480 And they to him are angels.

Mira. My affections Are then most humble: I have no ambition To see a goodlier man.

Come on: obey. Thy nerves are in their infancy again, And have no vigour in them.

So they are: My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up. My father's loss, the weakness which I feel, The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats To whom I am subdu'd, are but light to me, Might I but through my prison once a day wager, first begins to crow?

Behold this maid. All corners else o' th' earth

Let liberty make use of: space enough Have I in such a prison.

Pro. [Aside] It works. [To Fer.] Come on.

Thou hast done well, fine Ariel! [To Fer.] Follow me.

[To Ariel] Hark what thou else shalt do me. Mira. Be of comfort: My father's of a better nature, sir, Than he appears by speech; this is un-wonted Which now came from him.

Pro. [To Ariel] Thou shalt be as free As mountain winds; but then exactly do All points of my command.

To th' syllable. Ari. Pro. [To Fer.] Come, follow. [To Mira.] Speak not for him. [Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, GONZALO, ADRIAN, FRANCISCO, and Others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause.

So have we all, of joy; for our escape Is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe Is common; every day, some sailor's wife, The masters of some merchant, and the merchant.

Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle,

I mean our preservation, few in millions Can speak like us. Then wisely, good sir,

Our sorrow with our comfort.

Prithee, peace. Alon.Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so. Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir-Seb. One-Tell.

Gon. When every grief is entertain'd that's offer'd.

Comes to th' entertainer-

Seb. A dollar.

Gon. Dolour comes to him, indeed; you have spoken truer than you purpos'd. 20

Seb. You have taken it wiselier than I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore, my lord-

Ant. Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!

Alon. I prithee, spare.

Gon. Well, I have done; but yet-Seb. He will be talking.

Ant. Which, of he or Adrian, for a good

Seb. The old cock. Ant. The cock'rel. 30 Seb. Done. The wager? Ant. A laughter. Seb. A match! Adr. Though this island seem to be desert-

Ant. Ha, ha, ha!

Seb. So, you're paid.

Adr. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible-

Seb. Yet-Adr. Yet-

Ant. He could not miss't.

Adr. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench. Seb. Ay, and a subtle; as he most learnedly deliver'd.

Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotten ones. Ant. Or, as 'twere perfum'd by a fen. Gon. Here is everything advantageous to

Ant. True; save means to live.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little. Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks! how green!

Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of green in't.

Ant. He misses not much.

Seb. No: he doth but mistake the truth

Gon. But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost beyond credit-

Seb. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drench'd in the sea, hold, notwithstanding, their freshness and glosses, being rather new-dv'd, than stain'd with salt

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say he lies?

Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the King's fair daughter Claribel to the King of Tunis. 66

Seb. 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

Adr. Tunis was never grac'd before with such a paragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow! a pox o' that! How came that 'widow' in? Widow Dido!

Seb. What if he had said 'widower Æneas' too? Good Lord, how you take it! Adr. 'Widow Dido' said you? You make me study of that. She was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage. Adr. Carthage?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage. Ant. His word is more than the miraculous harp. Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easy next?

Seb. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

Ant. And, sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Gon. Ay.

Ant. Why, in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking that our garments seem now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now Queen.

Ant. And the rarest that e'er came there. Seb. Bate, I beseech you, widow Dido. Ant. O, widow Dido! Ay, widow Dido.

Gon. Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort. Ant. That 'sort' was well fish'd for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughter's marriage?

Alon. You cram these words into mine ears against The stomach of my sense. Would I had nevei Married my daughter there; for, coming thence, My son is lost; and, in my rate, she too, Who is so far from Italy removed

I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish Hath made his meal on thee?

Fran. Sir, he may live: I saw him beat the surges under him, And ride upon their backs; he trod the water. Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted

The surge most swoln that met him; his bold head 'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oared Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke To th' shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bowed, As stooping to relieve him. I not doubt 115

He came alive to land. Alon. No, no, he's gone. Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this

Gon. All things in common nature should produce

Without sweat or endeavour. Treason, felony,

Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any êngine,

Would I not have; but nature should bring forth, Of it own kind, all foison, all abundance,

To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his subjects? Ant. None, man; all idie; whores and knaves.

Gon. I would with such perfection govern,

T' excel the golden age.

Save his Majesty! Ant. Long live Gonzalo! Gon. And-do you mark me, sir?

Alon. Prithee, no more; thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your Highness; and did it to minister eccasion to the e gentlemen, who are of such sensible and numble lungs that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who in this kind of merry fooling am nothing to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given I Seb. An it had not fall'n flat-long.

Enter ARIEL, invisible, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so, and then go a-batfewling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry. Gon. No. I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy? Ant. Go sleep, and hear us. [All sleep but Alon., Seb. and Ant.

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes

Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts; I find

They are inclin'd to do so.

Please you, sir, Seb. Do not omit the heavy offer of it: It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

We two, my lord, Ant. Will guard your person while you take your rest,

And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you—wondrous heavy! [Alonso sleeps. Exit Ariel.

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Ant. It is the quality o' th' climate.

Wherefore this ghastly looking?

Gon. What's the matter?
Seb. Whiles we stood here securing your repose,

Even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing

Like bulls, or rather lions; did't not wake you?

It struck mine ear most terribly.

Alon. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's

To make an earthquake! Sureit was the roar Of a whole herd of lions.

Alon. Heard you this, Gonzalo? Gon. Upon mine honour, sir, I heard a humming,

And that a strange one too, which did awake me;

I shak'd you, sir, and cried; as mine eyes open'd, 320

I saw their weapons drawn—there was a noise.

noise,
That's verily. 'Tis best we stand upon our guard,

Or that we quit this place. Let's draw our weapons.

Alon. Lead off this ground; and let's make further search

For my poor son.

Grow. Heavens keep him from these beasts! Por he is, sure, i' th' island.

Alon. Lead away. 214
Art. Prospero my lord shall know what I have done:

So, King, go safely on to seek thy son. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Another part of the island.

Briter CALIBAN, with a burden of wood. A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun sucks

From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him

By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me.

And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,

Fright me with urchin-shows, pitch me i' th' mire,

Nor lead me, like a firebrand, in the dark Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but For every trifle are they set upon me; Sometime like apes that mow and chatter at me,

And after bite me; then like hedgehogs

Lie tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount

Their pricks at my footfall; sometime am I

All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues

Do hiss me into madness.

Enter TRINCULO.

Lo, now, lo!

Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me r5 For bringing wood in slowly. I'll fall flat;

Perchance he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing i' th' wind. Yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before, I know not where to hide my head. Youd same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls. What have we here? a man or a fish? dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell: a kind of not-of-the-newest Poor-John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, as once I was, and had but this fish painted. not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver. There would this monster' make a man; any strange beast there makes a man; when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Legg'd like a man, and his fins like arms! Warm, o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunderbolt. [Thunder] Alas, the storm is come again ! My best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will here shroud till the dregs of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano singing; a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea, Here shall I die ashore-

This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a man's funeral; well, here's my comfort. [Drinks.

> The master, the swabber, the boatswain, and I.

The gunner, and his mate,

Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marian, and Margery,

But none of us car'd for Kate; For she had a tongue with a tang, Would cry to a sailor 'Go hang! She lov'd not the savour of tar nor of pitch. Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she did itch.

Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang!

This is a scurvy tune too; but here's my comfort. [Drinks.

Cal. Do not torment me. O! Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here? Do you put tricks upon 's with savages and men of Ind? Ha! I have not scap'd drowning to be afeard now of your four legs; for it hath been said: As proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground; and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me. O!

Ste. This is some monster of the isle with four legs, who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief, if it be but for that. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod ou neat's leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, prithee; I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now, and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle; if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him; he shall pay for can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

him that hath him, and that soundly. Cal. Thou dost me yet but little burt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling : now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways; open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, cat. Open your mouth; this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly; you cannot tell who's your friend. Open your chaps again.

Trin. I should know that voice: should be—but he is drown'd; and these are devils. O, defend me!

Ste. Four legs and two voices; a most delicate monster! His forward voice, now, is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague. Come-Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Ste. Doth thy other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy! This is a devil, and no monster; I will leave him; I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano! If thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me; for I am Trinculo-be not afeard-thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth; I'll pull thee by the lesser legs; if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo indeed! How cam'st thou to be the siege of this moon-calf? Can he vent Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be kill'd with a thunderstroke. But art thou not drown'd. I hope now thou are not Stephano? drown'd. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberdine for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans scap'd!

Ste. Prithee, do not turn me about; my stomach is not constant.

Cal. [Aside] These be fine things, an if they be not sprites.

That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor.

I will kneel to him. Ste. How didst thou scape? How cam'st thou hither? Swear by this bottle how thou cam'st hither-I escap'd upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved o'erboard ---by this bottle, which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast ashore. Cal. I'll swear upon that bottle to be thy true subject, for the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here; swear then how thou escap'dst. Trin. Swum ashore, man, like a duck; I 120

Ste. [Passing the bittle] Here, kiss the Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose

Trm. O Stephano, hast any more of this? Ste. The whole butt, man; my cellar is in a rock by th' seaside, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! How does thine ague?

Cal. Hast thou not dropp'd from heaven? Ste. Out o' th' moon, I do assure thee; I was the Man i' th' Moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee. My mistress show'd me thee, and thy dog and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book. I will furnish it anon with new contents. Swear. [Caliban drinks.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster! I afeard of h.m! A very weak monster! The Man i' th' Moon! A most poor credulous monster! Well drawn, monster, in good sooth!

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' th' island; and I will kiss thy foot.

I prithee be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster! When 's god's asleep he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot; I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on, then: down, and swear. Trm. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurvy monster! I could find in my heart to beat him-

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. But that the poor monster's in drink. An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries:

I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I prithee let me bring thee where crabs grow;

And I with my long nails will dig thee pignuts:

Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee Burnt up those logs that you are enjoin'd

To snare the nimble marmoset; I'll bring Pray, set it down and rest you; when this thee

To clust'ring filberts, and sometimes I'll get thee

Young scamels from the rock. Wilt thou go with me?

Ste. I prithee now, lead the way without any more talking. Trinculo, the King and all our company else being drown'd, we will inherit here. Here, bear my bottle. Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. [Sings drunkenly] Farewell, master: farewell, farewell!

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster!

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish; Nor fetch in firing

At requiring,

Nor scrape trenchering, nor wash dish. 'Ban 'Ban, Ca-Caliban,

Has a new master-Get a new man.

Freedom, high-day! high-day, freedom! freedom, high-day, freedom! Ste. O brave monster! Lead the way.

Exeunt.

ACT THREE

Scene I. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter FERDINAND, bearing a log.

Fer. There be some sports are painful. and their labour

Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness

Are nobly undergone, and most poor matters

Point to rich ends. This my mean task Would be as heavy to me as odious, but The mistress which I serve quickens what's dead.

And makes my labours pleasures. O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed; And he's compos'd of harshness. I must remove Some thousands of these logs, and pile them

Upon a soie injunction; my sweet mistress Weeps when she sees me work, and says such baseness

Had never like executor. I forget: But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labours,

Most busy, least when I do it.

Enter MIRANDA; and PROSPERO at a distance, unseen.

Mira. Alas, now; pray you, Work not so hard; I would the lightning had to pile.

burns,

'Twill weep for having wearied you. My father

Is hard at study; pray, now, rest yourself; He's safe for these three hours.

Fer. O most dear mistress. The sun will set before I shall discharge What I must strive to do.

If you'll sit down. Mira. I'll bear your logs the while; pray give me that:

I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature; I had rather crack my sinews, break my back, 26

Than you should such dishonour undergo, While I sat lazy by.

Mird. It would become me
As well as it does you; and I should do it With much more ease; for my good will is to it.

And yours it is against.

Pro. [Aside] Poor worm, thou art infected!

This visitation shows it.

Mna. You look wearily.

Fer. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me

When you are by at night. I do beseech you,

Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers,

Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers, What is your name?

Miranda—O my father, I have broke your hest to say so!

Fer. Admir'd Miranda! Indeed the top of admiration; worth What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady

I have ey'd with best regard; and many a time

Th' harmony of their tongues hath into bondage

Brought my too diligent ear; for several virtues

Have I lik'd several women, never any With so full soul, but some defect in her Did quarrel with the noblest grace she ow'd.

And put it to the foil; but you, O you, So perfect and so perless, are created Of every cleature's best!

Mira. I do not know
One of my sex; no woman's face temember,
Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have
I seen

More that I may call men than you, good friend,

And my dear father. How features are abroad,

I am skilless of; but, by my modesty, The jewel in my dower, I would not wish Any companion in the would but you; 55 Nor can imagination form a shape,

Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle Something too wildly, and my father's precepts

I therein do forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition,
A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king—
I would not so!—and would no more endure
This wooden slavery than to suffer 62
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak:

The very instant that I saw you, did

My heart fly to your service; there resides

We were a brave r

We were set in his tail.

To make me slave to it, and for your sake Am I thus patient log-man.

Mira. Do you love me?
Fer. O heaven, O earth, bear witness to this sound.

And crown what I profess with kind event, If I speak true! If hollowly, invert 70 What best is hoded me to mischief! I, Beyond all limit of what else i' th' world, Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. I am a fool

To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. [Aside] Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Beavens rain grace

On that which breeds between 'em!
Fer.
Wherefore weep you?

Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer

What I desire to give, and much less take What I shall die to want. But this is triding;

And all the more it seeks to hide itself, 80 The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bathful cunning!

And prompt me plain and holy innocence! I am your wife, if you will marry me; If not, I'll die your maid. To be your fellow You may deny me; but I'll be your servant, Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest;
And I thus humble ever.

Mira. My husband, then? Fer Ay, with a heart as willing

As bondage e'er of freedom. Here's my hand.

Mira. And mine, with my heart in't. And now tarewell 90
Till half an hour hence.

Fer. A thousand thousand ! [Exeunt Fer. and Mira. severally.

Pro. So glad of this as they I cannot Le, Who are surpris'd withal; but my rejoicing At nothing can be more. I'll to my book; For yet eie supper time must I perform 95 Much business appertaining. [Exit.

SCENE II. Another part of the island. Enter Caliban, Stephano and Trinculo.

Ste. Tell not me—when the butt is out we will drink water, not a drop before; therefore bear up, and board 'em. Servantmonster, drink to me.

Trm. Servant-monster! The folly of this island! They say there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if th' other two be brain'd like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee; thy eyes are almost set in thy head. Trin. Where should they be set else?

He were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drown'd his tongue in sack. For my part, the sea cannot drown me; I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five and thirty leagues, off and on. By this light, thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, Monsieur Monster. Trin. Nor go neither; but you'll he like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, it thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoe.

I'll not serve him; he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou debosh'd fish, thou, was there ever man a coward that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! Wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. 'Lord' quoth he! That a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo again! Bite him to death, I prithee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head; if you prove a mutineer—the next tree! The poor monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I; kneel and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter ARIEL. invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant, a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the island.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. monkey, thou;

I would my valuant master would desiroy He's but a sot, as I am, nor hath not thee.

I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in's tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum, then, and no more. Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle: From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him-for I know thou dar'st, But this thing dare not-

Ste. That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compass'd? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea my lord: I'll yield him thee asleep,

Where thou mayst knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not.

Cal. What a pied ninny's this! Thou scurvy patch! I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows. And take his bottle from him. When that's gone

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him

Where the quick freshes are. Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out o doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing. I'll go farther off.

Ste. Didst thou not say he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? Take thou that, [Beats As you like this, give me the lie him another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits and hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! This can sack and drinking do. A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Ste. Now, forward with your tale.— Prithee stand further off. Cal. Beat him enough; after a little time. I'll beat him too.

Ste. Stand farther. Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him

I' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou mayst brain him.

Having first seiz'd his books; or with a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake.

Or cut his wezand with thy knife. Remember

Thou liest, thou jesting First to possess his books; for without them

> One spirit to command; they all do hate him

> As rootedly as I. Burn but his books. He has brave utensils—for so he calls them-

Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.

And that most deeply to consider is The beauty of his daughter; he himself Calls her a nonpareil. I never saw a woman But only Sycorax my dam and she; But she as far surpasseth Sycorax As great'st does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass? Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant. 100 56 And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be King and Queensave our Graces !- and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys. Dost thou like the plot. Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand; I am sorry I heat thee; but while thou liv'st, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this halt hour will he be asleep.

Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ay, on mine honour. Ste. Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry; I am full of pleasure.

Let us be jocund; will you troll the catch

You taught me but while-ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings.

> Flout 'em and scout 'em, And scout 'em and flout 'em; Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

[Ariel plays the tune on a tabor and pipe. Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of Nobody.

Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness; if thou beest a devil, take't as thou list.

Trin. O, foigive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies pays all debts. I defy thee. Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou afeard? Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afeard. The isle is full of noises.

Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments

Will hum about mine ears; and sometime voices.

That, if I then had wak'd after long sleep, Will make me sleep again; and then, in dreaming,

The clouds methought would open and show riches

Ready to drop upon me, that, when I wak'd,

I cried to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroy'd.

Ste. That shall be by and by; I remember the story.

follow it, and after do our work. Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow. I would

I could see this taborer; he lays it on.

Trin. Wilt come? I'il follow, Stephano. [Excunt.

SCENE III. Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio. GONZALO, ADRIAN, FRANCISCO, and Others.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can go no fuither, sii; My old bones ache. Here's a maze trod, indeed, Through forth-rights and meanders! By your patience,

I needs must lest me.

Alon.Old lord, I cannot blame thee. Who am myself attach'd with weariness To th' dulling of my spirits; sit down and

Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it No longer for my flatterer; he is drown'd Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks

Our frustrate search on land. Well, let him go.

Ant. [Aside to Sch.] I am 11ght glad that he's so out of hope.

Do not, for one repulse, forgo the purpose That you resolv'd t' effect.

Seb. [Aside to Ant.] The next advantage Will we take throughly.

Art. [Asiac to Seb] Let it be to-night; For, now they are oppress'd with travel,

Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance As when they are fresh.

Seb. [Aside to Ant.] I say; to-night; no

Solemn and strange music; and Prospero on the top, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet; and dance about it with gentle actions of salutations; and inviting the King, &c., to eat, they depart.

Alon. What harmony is this? My good friends, hark!

Gon. Marvellous sweet music!

Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Seb. A living drollery. Now I will believe That there are unicorns; that in Arabia There is one tree, the phænix' throne, one phœnix

At this hour reigning there.

I'll believe both: And what does else want credit, come to

And I'll be sworn 'tis true; travellers ne'er did lie,

Though fools at home condemn 'em.

Alon. I cannot too much muse Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound, expressing,

Although they want the use of tongue, a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.

Pio [Aside] Praise in departing. 39

Fr.11. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since They have left their viands behind: for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Not I. Alon.

Gon Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers.

Dewlapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men

Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find

Stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter ARIEL, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table: and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom Destiny.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. Before Prospero's cell. Enter PROSPERO, FERDINAND, and MIRANDA.

Pro. If I have too austerely punish'd you, Your compensation makes amends; for I Have given you here a third of mine own life, Or that for which I live; who once again I tender to thy hand. All thy vexations 5 Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test; here, afore heaven,

I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand! Do not smile at me that I boast her off, For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,

And make it halt behind her.

I do believe it Against an oracle.

Ari. What would my potent master? Here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy meaner fellows your last service

Did worthily perform; and I must use you In such another trick. Go bring the rabble, O'er whom I give thee pow'r, here to this place.

Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art; it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently?

Pro. Ay, with a twink.

Ari. Before you can say 'come' and And breathe twice, and cry 'so, so', Each one, tripping on his toa,

Will be here with mop and mow. Do you love me, master? No?

Pro. Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach Till thou dost hear me call.

Too much the rein; the strongest oaths are straw

To th' fire 1' th' blood. Be more abstemious, Or else good night your vow!

I warrant you, sir, The white cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the ardour of my liver.

Enter IRIS.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas

Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and pease; Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep; Thy banks with pioned and twilled brims, Which spongy April at thy hest betrims,

To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy broom groves,

Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves, And thy sea-marge, sterile and rocky-hard, Where thou thyself dost air-the Queen o' th' sky.

Whose wat'ry arch and messenger am I. Dids thee leave these; and with her sovereign grace,

Here on this grass-plot, in this very place. To come and sport. Her peacocks fly amain.

Juno descends in her car.

Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter CERES.

[Juno alights. Highest Queen of state, Great Juno, comes; I know her by her gait. Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me

To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be,

And honour'd in their issue.

They sing.

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing, Long continuance, and increasing, Hourly joys be still upon you! Juno sings her blessings on you.

Cer. Earth's increase, foison plenty, Barns and garners never empty: Vines with clust'ring bunches grow-Plants with goodly burden bowing; Spring come to you at the farthest,

In the very end of harvest! Scarcity and want shall shun you, Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold To think these spirits?

Pro. Spirits, which by mine art I have from their confines call'd to enact

My present fancies. Let me live here ever: So rare a wond'red father and a wise 123 troubled;

Be not disturb'd with my infirmity. If you be pleas'd, retire into my cell And there repose: a turn or two I'll walk To still my beating mind.

Fer., Mira. We wish your peace.

Exeunt. Pro. Come, with a thought. I thank thee, Ariel; come.

Enter ARIEL.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to. What's thy pleasure?

Scene I. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter PROSPERO in his magic robes, and ARIEL.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head:

My charms crack not, my spirits obey; and time

Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day ?

Ari. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord.

You said our work should cease.

I did say so. When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit.

How fares the King and 's followers? Confin'd together Ari.

hours:

Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us. And brought us thus together ?

Sir. she is mortal: Fer. But by immortal Providence she's mine. I chose her when I could not ask my father For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan, Ot whom so often I have heard renown But never saw before; of whom I have Receiv'd a second life; and second father

This lady makes him to me. Alon. I am hers. 190 But, O, how oddly will it sound that I Must ask my child forgiveness!

There, sir, stop; Let us not buiden our remembrances with A heaviness that's gone.

I have inly went, Gon. Or should have spoke ere this. Look down. you gods,

And on this couple drop a blessed crown; For it is you that have chalk'd forth the way

Which brought us hither.

I say, Amen, Gonzalo! Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue

Should become Kings of Naples? O, rejoice Beyond a common joy, and set it down With gold on lasting pillars: in one voyage Did Claubel her husband find at Tunis: And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom

In a poor isle; and all of us ourselves When no man was his own.

Alon. [To Fer. and Mir.] Give me your hands.

Let griet and sorrow still embrace his heart That doth not wish you joy.

Be it so. Amen! Gon.

Re-enter ARIEL, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.

O look, sir; look, sir! Here is more of us! I prophesied, if a gallows were on land, This fellow could not drown. Now. blasphemy,

That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?

Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?

Boats. The best news is that we have safely found

Our King and company; the next, our

Which but three glasses since we gave out

Is tight and yare, and bravely rigg'd, as in my head, here's a goodly sight. when

We first put out to sea.

Ari. [Aside to Pro.] Sir, all this service How fine my master is! I am afraid Have I done since I went.

Pro. [Aside to Ari.] My tricksy spirit!

Alor. These sie not natural events; they stiengthen

From strange to stranger. Say hew came you hither?

Boats. It I did think, sir, I were well awake.

I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep.

And—hoa, we know not—all clapp'd under hatches:

Where, but even now, with strange and several noises

Of roating, shucking, howling, jingling chains.

And moe diversity of sounds, all heirible, We were awak'd; straightway at liberty; Where we, in all her trim, freshly belield Our royal, good, and gellant ship; our master

Cap'ring to eye her. On a trice, so please vou,

Even in a dieam, were we divided from them.

And were brought moning hither,

Art. [Aside to Pro.] Was't well done? Pro. [Aside to Art.] Bravely, my diligence. Thou shalt be free. Alon. This is as strange a mare as e'er men trod; And there is in this business more than nature

Was ever conduct of. Some oracle Must rectify our knowledge.

Sir, my hege. Do not infest your mind with heating on

The strangeness of this business; at pick'd leisure. Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve

Which to you shall seem probable, of every

These happen'd accidents; till when, be cheerful

And think of each thing well. [Aside to Ari.] Come hither, spirit;

Set Caliban and his companions free; Until the spell. [Exit Aruel] How tares my gracious sir?

There are yet missing of your company Some few odd lads that you remember not.

Re-enter ARIEL, driving in CALIBAN, STEPHANO, and TRINCULO, in their stolen apparel.

Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune. Coragio, bully-monster, coragio!

Trin. If these be true spies which I wear Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed!

He will chastise me. Seb. Ho. ha!

THE TEMPEST [Act 5

What things are these, my lord Antonio? Will money buy 'em?

Ant. Very like; one of them is a plain fish, and no doubt marketable. Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords,

Then say if they be true. This mis-shapen knave—

His mother was a witch, and one so strong That could control the moon, make flows and chbs,

And deal in her command without her power.

These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil—

For he's a bastard one—had plotted with them

To take my life. Two of these fellows you Must know and own; this thing of darkness I 275

Acknowledge mine.

Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Seb. He is drunk now; where had he wine?

Alon. And Trinculo is reeling tipe; where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em? 280

How cam'st thou in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last that, I fear me, will never out of my bones. I shall not fear flyblowing.

Seb. Why, how now, Stephano! 285 Ste. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a cramp.

Ste. I should have been a sore one, then.

Alon. [Pointing to Caliban] This is as strange a thing as e'er I look'd on.

Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners

As in his shape. Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions; as you look

To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter,

And seek for grace. What a thrice-double

Was I to take this drunkard for a god,
And worship this dull fool!

Pro. Go to: away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.

Seb. Or stole it, rather.

[Evenut Cal., Sie., and Trin. Pro. Sir, I invite your Highness and your train 500

To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest

Por this one night; which, part of it, I'll waste

With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it

Go quick away—the story of my life, And the particular accidents gone by 505 Since I came to this isle. And in the morn I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples, Where I have hope to see the nuptial Of these our dear-belov'd solemnized, 509 And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I'il deliver ali;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious
gaies,

And sail so expeditious that shall catch sis Your royal fleet far oil. [Aside to Art.] My Ariel, chick,

Ariel, chick,
That is thy charge. Then to the elements
Be free, and fare thou well!—Please you, draw near.
[Exeunt.

EPILOGUE

SPOKEN BY PROSPERO

Now my charms are all o'erthrown, And what strength I have's mine own, Which is most faint. Now 'tis true, I must be here confin'd by you. Or sent to Naples. Let me not, Since I have my dukedom got, And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell In this base island by your spell; But release me from my bands With the help of your good hands. TO Gentle breath of yours my sails Must fill, or else my project fails, Which was to please. Now I want Spirits to enforce, art to enchant; And my ending is despair 15 Unless I be reliev'd by prayer, Which pierces so that it assaults Mercy itself, and trees all faults. As you from crimes would pardon'd be, Let your indulgence set me free.

THE SCENE: Verona; Milan; the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Verona. An open blace.

Enter VALENTINE and PROTEUS.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus: Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Were't not affection chains thy tender days To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love, I rather would entreat thy company To see the wonders of the world abroad. Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home. Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. But since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein,

Even as I would, when I to love begin. Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu l Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest Some rare noteworthy object in thy travel. Wish me partaker in thy happiness

When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger. If ever danger do environ thee,

Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,

For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine. Val. And on a love-book pray for my success? Pro. Upon some book I love I'll pray for thee.

Val. That's on some shallow story of deep

How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont. Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love; For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true; for you are over boots in love.

And yet you never swum the Heliespont. Pro. Over the boots! Nay, give me not the boots

Val. No. I will not, for it boots thee not. Pro. What?

Val. To be in love—where scorn is bought with groans, Coy looks with heart-sore sighs, one fading moment's mirth With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:

If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labour won; However, but a folly bought with wit. Or else a wit by folly vanguished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me foól.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear you'll prove.
'Tis love you cavil at; I am not

Love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you:

And he that is so yoked by a fool, Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise. Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud

The eating canker dwells, so eating love Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud

Is eaten by the canker ere it blow, Even so by love the young and tender wit Is turn'd to folly blasting in the bud, Losing his verdure even in the prime, And all the fair effects of future hopes. 50 But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee

That art a votary to fond desire? Once more adieu. My father at the road Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave.

To Milan let me hear from thee by letters Of thy success in love, and what news else Betideth here in absence of thy friend; And I likewise will visit thee with mine. 60 Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in farewell! [Exit Valentine.

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love: He leaves his friends to dignify them more: I leave myself, my friends, and all for love. Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphis'd me, Made me neglect my studies, lose my time, War with good counsel, set the world at nought:

Made wit with musing weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed, Sir Proteus, save you! Saw you my master?

Pro. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipp'd already.

And I have play'd the sheep in losing him. Pro. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray, An if the shepherd be awhile away.

Speed. You conclude that my master is a shepherd then, and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep. Pro. True; and thy master a shepherd. Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard but I'll prove it by from her?

another. Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me; therefore, I am no sheep.

Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd; the shepherd for food follows not the sheep: thou for wages followest thy master; thy master for wages follows not thee. Therefore, thou art a sheep.

Speed. Such another proof will make me cry 'baa'.

Pro. But dost thou hear? Gav'st thou my letter to Julia?

Speed. Ay, sir; I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a lac'd mutton; and she, a lac'd mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons.

Speed. If the ground be overcharg'd, you were best stick her.

Pro. Nay, in that you are astray: 'twere best pound you.

Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter. Pro. You mistake; I mean the pounda pinfold.

Speed. From a pound to a pin? Fold it over and over.

Val. As much to you at home; and so 'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.

Pro. But what said she?

Speed. [Nodding] Ay.

Pro. Nod-ay. Why, that's 'noddy'. Speed. You mistook, sir; I say she did nod; and you ask me if she did nod; and I say 'Ay'

Pro. And that set together is 'noddy' Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.

Pro. No. no: you shall have it for bearing the letter.

Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fain to bear with you.

Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me? Speed. Marry, sir, the letter, very orderly; having nothing but the word 'noddy' for my pains.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come, open the matter; in brief, what said she?

Speed. Open your purse, that the money and the matter may be both at once delivered.

Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains. What said she?

Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win ber.

Pro. Why, couldst thou perceive so much

Speed. Sir. I could perceive nothing at all from her; no, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter; and being so hard to me that brought your mind, I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling your mind. Give her no token but stones, for she's as hard as steel.

Pro. What said she? Nothing?

Speed. No. not so much as 'Take this for thy pains'. To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testern'd me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself; and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck,

Which cannot perish, having thee aboard, Being destin'd to a drier death on shore.

[Exit Speed. I must go send some better messenger. I fear my Julia would not deign my lines, Receiving them from such a worthless post. [Exit.

Scene II. Verona. The garden of Julia's house.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone, Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love? Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines unheedfully.

Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen That every day with parle encounter me, In thy opinion which is worthest love? Luc. Please you, repeat their names: I'll show my mind

According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour?

Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat. and fine:

But, were I you, he never should be mine. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?

Luc. Well of his wealth; but of himself. so so.

What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?

Luc. Lord. Lord! to see what folly reigns in us !

Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon, dear madam; 'tis a passing' shame

That I, unworthy body as I am,

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen. Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the Luc. Then thus: of many good I think him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason:

I think him so, because I think him so. Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him? Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never mov'd me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Luc. Fire that 's closest kept burns most of all.

Jul. They do not love that do not show their love.

Luc. O, they love least that let men know their love.

Jul. I would I knew his mind.

Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.

Jul. 'To Julia '-Say, from whom? Luc. That the contents will show. Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee?

Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Proteus.

in the way,

Did in your name receive it; pardon the fault, I pray.

Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker!

To whisper and conspire against my youth, Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth. And you an officer fit for the place. 4° There, take the paper; see it be return'd; Or else rerurn no more into my sight.

Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate.

Jul. Will ye be gone?

Luc. That you may ruminate. [Evit. Jul. And yet, I would I had c'erlook'd the letter.

It were a shame to call her back again, And pray her to a fault for which I chid her. What fool is she, that knows I am a mail And would not force the letter to my view ! Since maids, in modesty, say 'No 'to that Which they would have the profferer construe 'Ay'

Fie, fie, how wayward is this foolish love, That like a testy babe will scratch the nurse. And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod! How churlishly I chid Lucetta hence. When willingly I would have had her here! How angerly I taught my brow to frown,

When inward joy enforc'd my heart to smile !

My penance is to call Lucetta back And ask remission for my folly past. 65 What ho! Lucetta!

Re-enter LUCETTA.

What would your ladyship? Luc. Jul. Is 't near dinner time?

Luc. I would it were. That you might kill your stomach on your meat

And not upon your maid.

Jul. What is't that you took up so gingerly? 70 Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stoop then?

Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall. Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,

Unless it have a faise interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a

Give mc a note; your ladyship can set. Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible.

He would have given it you; but I, being Best sing it to the tune of 'Light o' Love'. Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune. Jul. Heavy! belike it hath some burden > Luc. Ay; and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Jul. And why not you?

Luc. I cannot reach so high. Jul. Let's see your song. [Lucetta withholds the letter! How now, minion! Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out.

And yet methinks I do not like this tune. Jul. You do not!

Luc. Jul. You, minion, are too saucy. Luc. Nay, now you are too flat

And mar the concord with too harsh a descant:

There wanteth but a mean to fill your song. Jul. The mean is drown'd with your unruly bass.

Luc. Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus. Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.

Here is a coil with protestation!

[Tears the letter. Go. get you gone; and let the papers lie. You would be fing'ting them, to anger me. Luc. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleas'd To be so ang'red with another letter. [Exit. Jul. Nay, would I were so ang'red with the same! O hateful hands, to tear such loving words! Injurious wasps, to feed on such sweet honey

And kill the bees that yield it with your stings!

I'll kiss each several paper for amends. Look, here is writ 'kind Julia'. Unkind Julia.

As in revenge of thy ingratitude, I throw thy name against the bruising stones, Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain. And here is writ 'love-wounded Proteus'. Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed, Shall lodge thee till thy a ound be throughly heal'd:

And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. But twice or thrice was 'Proteus' written down

Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away Till I have found each letter in the letter-Except mine own name; that some whillwind bear

Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock, And throw it thence into the raging sea. Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ: 'Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus, To the sweet Julia '. That I'll tear awa; ; And yet I will not, sith so prettily 126 He couples it to his complaining names. Thus will I fold them one upon another; Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you There shall he practise tilts and tourna-

Re-enter LUCETTA.

Luc. Madam.

Dinner is ready, and your father stays.

Jul. Well, let us go. Luc. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?

Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.

Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down;

No, madam; 'tis too sharp. Yet here they shall not lie for catching cold. Jul. I see you have a month's mind to them.

> Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see; I see things too, although you judge I wink.

Jul. Come, come; will't please you go? Exeunt.

Scene III. Verona. Antonio's house.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?

Pan. 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your

Ant. Why, what of him?

Pan. He wond'red that your lordship Would suffer him to spend his youth at

Some to the studious universities. For any, or for all these exercises, He said that Proteus, your son, was meet:

And did request me to importune you To let him spend his time no more at home. Which would be great impeachment to his age,

In having known no travel in his youth. Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that Whereon this month I have been hammer-

I have consider'd well his loss of time. And how he cannot be a perfect man, Not being tried and tutor'd in the world: Experience is by industry achiev'd, And perfected by the swift course of time. Then tell me whither were I best to send

Pan. I think your lordship is not ignorant How his companion, youthful Valentine, Attends the Emperor in his royal court.

Ant. I know it well.

Pan. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him thither:

Enter PROTEUS.

And-in good time !- now will we break He is in haste; therefore, I pray you, go. with him.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life! Here is her hand, the agent of her heart: Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn. O that our fathers would applaud our loves. To seal our happiness with their consents! O heavenly Julia!

Ant. How now! What letter are you, reading there?

Pro. May't please your lordship, 'tis a word or two

Ant. Look what thou want'st shall be sent after thee.

No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go. Come on, Panthino; you shall be employ'd To hasten on his expedition.

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire for fearof burning,

And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.

ACT TWO

Scene I. Milan. The Duke's palace.

Enter VALENTINE and SPEED.

Speed. Sir, your glove.

Val. Not mine: my gloves are on. Speed. Why, then, this may be yours; for this is but one.

Val. Ha! let me see; ay, give it me, it's mine:

Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine! Ah, Silvia! Silvia!

Speed. [Calling] Madam Silvia! Madam Silvia!

Val. How now, sirrah?

Speed. She is not within hearing, sir. Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?

Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you'll still be too forward. Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Val. Go to, sir; tell me, do you know Madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves? Val. Why, how know you that I am in love? Speea. Marry, by these special marks: first, you have learn'd, like Sir Proteus, to wreath your arms like a malcontent; to relish a love-song, like a robin redbreast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A B C; 10 weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak puling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cock; when you walk'd, to walk like one of the lions; when [Exeunt Ant. and Pan. you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you look'd sadly, it was for want of money. And now you are metamorphis'd with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceiv'd in me? Speed. They are all perceiv d without ye. Val. Without me? They cannot.

Speed. Without you! Nay, that's certain; for, without you were so simple, none else would; but you are so without these follies that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an urinal, that not an eye that sees you but is a physician to comment on your malady.

Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady

Silvia?

Speed. She that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou observ'd that? Even she, I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not. 40 Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not?

Speed. Is she not hard-favour'd, sir? Val. Not so fair, boy, as well-favour'd. Speed. Sir, I know that well enough. 45 Val. What dost thou know?

Speed. That she is not so fair as, of you, well favour'd.

Val. I mean that her beauty is exquisite,

but her favour infinite.

Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

51

Val. How painted? and how out of Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val. How esteem'st thou me? I account of her beauty.

55

Speed. You never saw her since she was deform'd.

Val. How long hath she been deform'd? Speed. Ever since you lov'd her.

Val. I have lov'd her ever since I saw her, and still I see her beautiful.

Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her. Val. Why?

Speed. Because Love is blind. O that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have when you chid at Sir Proteus for going ungarter'd! 65 Val. What should I see then?

Speed. Your own present folly and her passing deformity; for he, being in love, could not see to garter his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

71

Speed. True, sir; I was in love with my bed. I thank you, you swing'd me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

55 Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.

Val. Last night she enjoin'd me to write some lines to one she loves.

Speed. And have you?

Val. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them.

Enter SILVIA.

Peace! here she comes.

Speed. [Aside] O excellent motion! O exceeding pupper! Now will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good morrows.

Speed. [Aside] O, give ye good ev'n! Here's a million of manners.

Sil. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.

Speed. [Aside] He should give her interest, and she gives it him.

Val. As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter

Unto the secret nameless friend of yours; Which I was much unwilling to proceed in, But for my duty to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you, gentle servant. 'The very clerkly done.

Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off:

For, being ignorant to whom it goes,

I writ at random, very doubtfully. xoo Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much pains?

Val. No, madam; so it stead you, I will write,

Please you command, a thousand times as much;
And yet—

Sil. A pretty period! Well, I guess the sequel;

And yet I will not name it—and yet I care not.

And yet take this again—and yet I thank you—

Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Speed. [Aside] And yet you will; and yet another 'yet'.

Val. What means your ladyship? Do you not like it?

Sil. Yes, yes; the lines are very quaintly writ;

But, since unwillingly, take them again. Nay, take them. [Gives back the letter.

Val. Madam, they are for you. Sil. Ay, ay, you writ them, sir, at my request;

But I will none of them; they are for you:
I would have had them writ more movingly.

Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.

Sil. And when it's wiit, for my sake read it over;

And if it please you, so; if not, why, so. too Val. If it please me, madam, what then? Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour.

And so good morrow, servant. [Exit Silvia. Speed. O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,

As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple! 125 My master sues to her; and she hath taught her suitor. He being her pupil, to become her tutor.

O excellent device! Was there ever heard a better,
That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?

Val. How now, sir What are you reasoning with yourself?

Speed. Nay, I was rhyming: 'tis you that have the reason.
Val. To do what?

Speed. To be a spokesman from Madam Silvia?

Val. To whom?

Speed. To yourself; why, she woos you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Speed. By a letter, I should say.

Val. Why, she hath not writ to me. 140 Speed. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?

Val. No, believe me.

Speed. No believing you indeed, sir. But did you perceive her earnest?

Val. She gave me none except an angry word.

Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter. Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend. Speed. And that letter hath she del.ver'd, and there an end.

Val. I would it were no worse.

Speed. I'll warrant you 'tis as well.

'For often have you writ to her; and she, in modesty,

Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply;
Or fearing else some messenger that might her mind discover, r55 Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.'

All this I speak in print, for in print I found it. Why muse you, sir? "Tis dinner time.

Val. I have din'd.

Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir; though the 'This shoe with the hole in it is my mother, chameleon Love can feed on the air, I am and this my father. Scene II. Verona. Julia's house.

Enter PROTEUS and JULIA.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia. Jul. I must, where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.

Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake. [Giving a ring.

Pro. Why, then, we'll make exchange.
Here, take you this.

Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.
Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy;

And when that hour o'erslips me in the daw Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake, ru The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me for my love's forgetfulness! My father stays my coming; answer not; The tide is now—nay, not thy tide of tears: That tide will stay me longer than I should. Julia, farewell! [Exit Julia. What, gone without a word?

Ay, so true love should do: it cannot speak; For truth hath better deeds than words to grace it.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pan. Sir Proteus, you are stay'd for. Pro. Go; I come, I come. 20 Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exeuni.

Scene III. Verona. A street.

Enter LAUNCE, leading a dog.

Laun. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault. I have receiv'd my proportion, like the Prodigious Son, and am going with Sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think Crab my dog be the sourestnatured dog that lives: my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity; yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear. He is a stone, a very pebble stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog. A Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father; no, this left shoe is my father; no, no, this left shoe is my mother; nay, that cannot be so neither; yes, it is so, it is so, it hath the worser sole. This shoe with the hole in it is my mother, and this my father. A vengeance on 't! There 'tis. Now, sir, this staff is my sister, for, look you, she is as white as a lily and maid: I am the dog: no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog-O, the dog is me, and I am myself; ay, so, so. Now come I to my father: 'Father, your blessing'. Now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping; now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on. Now come I to my mother. O that she could speak now like a wood woman! Well, I kiss her-why there 'tis; here's my mother's breath up and down. Now come I to my sister; mark the moan she makes. Now the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pan. Launce, away, away aboard! Thy master is shipp'd, and thou art to post after with oars. What's the matter? Why weep'st thou, man? Away, ass! You'll lose the tide if you tarry any longer.

Laun. It is no matter if the tied were lost; for it is the unkindest tied that ever any man tied.

Pan. What's the unkindest tide? Laun. Why, he that's tied here, Crab, my dog.

Pan. Tut, man, I mean thou'lt lose the flood, and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage, and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master, and, in losing thy master, lose thy service, and, in losing thy service-Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Laun. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Pan. Where should I lose my tongue?

Laun. In thy tale.

Pan. In thy tail! Laun. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tied! Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pan. Come, come away, man; I was sent to call thee.

Laun. Sir, call me what thou dar'st.

Pan. Wilt thou go?

Laun. Well, I will go. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. Milan. The Duke's palace. Enter Silvia, Valentine, Thurio, and SPEED. Sil. Servant! Val. Mistress? Speed. Master, Sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it's for love. Speed. Not of you. Val. Of my mistress, then.

Speed. 'Twere good you knock'd him.

[Exit.

Sil. Servant, you are sad. Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so. Thu. Seem you that you are not? Val. Haply I do.

Thu. So do counterfeits.

Val. So do you.

Thu. What seem I that I am not? Val. Wise.

Thu. What instance of the contrary? Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quote you my folly? Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thu. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well, then, I'll double your folly.

Thu. How?

Sil. What, angry, Sir Thurio! Do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of chameleon.

Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood than live in your air.

Val. You have said, sir.

Thu. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time. Val. I know it well, sir; you always end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. 'Tis indeed, madam; we thank the Sil. Who is that, servant ?

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire. Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, sir; you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers: for it appears by their bare liveries that they live by your bare words.

Enter DUKE.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more. Here comes my father.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset. Sir Valentine, your father is in good health. What say you to a letter from your friends

Of much good news? Val. My lord, I will be thankful

To any happy messenger from thence. Duke. Know ye Don Antonio, your countryman? Val. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman

To be of worth and worthy estimation. And not without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord; a son that well deserves

The honour and regard of such a father. Duke. You know him well?

Val. I knew him as myself; for from our

We have convers'd and spent our hours together:

And though myself have been an idle If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear truant. 60

Omitting the sweet benefit of time To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection.

Yet hath Sir Proteus, for that's his name, Made use and fair advantage of his days: His years but young, but his experience old; His head unmellowed, but his judgment ripe:

And, in a word, for far behind his worth Comes all the praises that I now bestow. He is complete in feature and in mind, With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but if he make this good. He is as worthy for an empress' love As meet to be an emperor's counsellor. Well, sir, this gentleman is come to me With commendation from great potentates,

And here he means to spend his time awhile. I think 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him, then, according to his worth-

I speak to you, and you, Sir Thurso;

For Valentine, I need not cite him to it. I will send him hither to you presently. Exit Duke.

Val. This is the gentleman I told your ladyship

Had come along with me but that his mistress

Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks.

Sil. Belike that now she hath enfranchis'd them

Upon some other pawn for fealty.

Val. Nay, sure, I think she holds them prisoners still.

Sil. Nay, then, he should be blind; and, being blind,

How could he see his way to seek out you? Val. Why, lady, Love hath twenty pair of eyes.

Thu. They say that Love hath not an eye at all.

Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as vourself :

Upon a homely object Love can wink. Exit Thurio.

Enter PROTEUS.

Sil. Have done, have done; here comes the gentleman.

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus! Mistress, I beseech you Confirm his welcome with some special favour.

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome from.

Val. Mistress, it is; sweet lady, entertain

To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship. Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady: but too mean a servant

To have a look of such a worthy mistress. Val. Leave off discourse of disability;

Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant. Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else. Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed.

71 Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Pro. I'll die on him that says so but vourself.

Sil. That you are welcome? Pro. That you are worthless.

Re-enter Thurio.

Thu. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you.

Sil. I wait upon his pleasure. Come, Sir Thurio,

Go with me. Once more, new servant, welcome. I'll leave you to confer of home affairs; When you have done we look to hear from

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship. [Exeunt Silvia and Thurio. Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came? Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health. Val. How does your lady, and how thrives your love?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you;

I know you joy not in a love-discourse. Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now; have done penance for contemning

Love, Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me

With bifter fasts, with penitential groans. With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs:

For, in revenge of my contempt of love, Love hath chas'd sleep from my enthralled eyes

And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow.

O gentle Proteus, Love's a mighty lord, And hath so humbled me as I confess There is no woe to his correction, Nor to his service no such joy on earth. Now no discourse, except it be of love; Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel. sleep, Jpon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in vour eve. Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly

Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon. Val. Call her divine.

I will not flatter her. Pro. Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises!

Pro. When I was sick you gave me bitter pills, And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine.

Yet let her be a principality,

Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any; 150 Except thou wilt except against my love. Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too:

She shall be dignified with this high honour-

To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss

And, of so great a favour growing proud, Disdain to root the summer-swelling flow'r

And make rough winter everlastingly.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this? Val. Pardon me, Proteus; all I can is nothing To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing;

She is alone.

Then let her alone. Pro.

Val. Not for the world! Why, man, she is mine own;

And I as rich in having such a jewel As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl, The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold. Forgive me that I do not dream on thee. Because thou seest me dote upon my love. My foolish rival, that her father likes Only for his possessions are so huge, Is gone with her along; and I must after, For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you? Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd; nav more, our marriage-hour,

With all the cunning manner of our flight, Determin'd of-how I must climb her window,

The ladder made of cords, and all the means Plotted and 'greed on for my happiness. Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber, with him, it stands well with her.

Pro. Go on before: I shall enquire you forth:

I must unto the road to disembark Some necessaries that I needs must use: And then I'll presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste? Pro. I will. Exit Valentine.

Even as one heat another heat expels Or as one nail by strength drives out another.

So the remembrance of my former love 190 Is by a newer object quite forgotten. Is it my mind, or Valentinus' praise, Her true perfection, or my false transgression.

That makes me reasonless to reason thus? She is fair; and so is Julia that I love-That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd; Which like a waxen image 'gainst a fire Bears no impression of the thing it was. Methinks my zeal to Valentine is cold, And that I love him not as I was wont. 200 O! but I love his lady too too much, And that's the reason I love him so little. How shall I dote on her with more advice That thus without advice begin to love her! 'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld, And that hath dazzled my reason's light; But when I look on her perfections, There is no reason but I shall be blind. If I can check my erring love, I will; If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. [Exit.

Scene V. Milan. A street.

Enter Speed and Launce severally.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty.

welcome to Padua. Laun. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this always, that a man is never undone till he be hang'd, nor never welcome to a place till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say 'Welcome!

Speed. Come on, you madcap; I'll to the alchouse with you presently; where, for one shot of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with Madam Julia?

Laun. Marry, after they clos'd in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him? Laun. No.

Speed. How then? Shall he marry her? Laun. No, neither. Speed. What, are they broken ?

Laun. No, they are both as whole as a Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Laun. Marry, thus: when it stands well

Speed. What an ass art thou! I under- Fie, fie, unreverent tongue, to call her bad stand thee not.

Laun. What a block art thou that thou With canst not! My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Laun. Av. and what I do too; look thee. I'll but lean, and my staff understands me. Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Laun. Why, stand-under and understand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match? Laun. Ask my dog. If he say av, it will: if he say no, it will; if he shake his tail and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is, then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. Launce, how say'st thou that my master is become a notable lover?

Laun. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Laun. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mıstak'st me. Laun. Why, fool, I meant not thee, I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee my master is become a hot lover.

Laun. Why, I tell thee I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt, go with me to the alehouse; if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service. Exeum.

Scene VI. Milan. The Duke's palace. Enter PROTEUS.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn a

To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn; To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn;

And ev'n that pow'r which gave me first my oath Provokes me to this threefold perjury:

Love bade me swear, and Love bids me forswear.

O sweet-suggesting Love, if thou hast sinn'd, Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it!

At first I did adore a twinkling star, But now I worship a celestial sun. Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken; And he wants wit that wants resolved will To learn his wit t' exchange the bad for better.

Whose sovereignty so off thou hast preferr'd twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths!

I cannot leave to love, and yet I do: But there I leave to love where I should Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose: If I keep them, I needs must lose myself; If I lose them, thus find I by their loss: For Valentine, myself; for Julia, Silvia.

I to myself am dearer than a friend : For love is still most precious in itself: And Silvia-witness heaven, that made her fair !-

Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethiope. I will forget that Julia is alive, Rememb'ring that my love to her is dead:

And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,

Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend. I cannot now prove constant to myself Without some treachery us'd to Valentine. This night he meaneth with a corded ladder To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window. Myself in counsel, his competitor.

Now presently I'll give her father notice Of their disguising and pretended flight,

Who, all enrag'd, will banish Valentine, For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter:

But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly

By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.

Love, lend me wings to make my purpose

As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift.

Scene VII. Verona. Julia's house. Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me: And, ev'n in kind love, I do conjure thee,

Luc. Alas, the way is wearisome and long! Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps; Much less shall she that hath Love's wings to fly,

ACT THREE

SCENE I. Milan. The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile:

We have some secrets to confer about. [Exit Thurio.

Luc. You must needs have them with a Now tell me. Proteus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover

The law of friendship bids me to conceal; 5 But, when I call to mind your gracious favours

Done to me, undeserving as I am,

My duty pricks me on to utter that from me.

friend.

This night intends to steal away your daughter;

Myself am one made privy to the plot. I know you have determin'd to bestow her On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;

And should she thus be stol'n away from

It would be much vexation to your age. Thus for my duty's sake, I rather chose To cross my friend in his intended drift Than, by concealing it, heap on your head

A pack of sorrows which would press you down, 20

Being unprevented, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care,

Which to requite, command me while I live. This love of theirs myself have often seen, Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep.

And oftentimes have purpos'd to forbid Sir Valentine her company and my court; But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err And so, unworthily, disgrace the man, A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd, 30 I gave him gentle looks, thereby to find That which thyself hast now disclos'd to me And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this,

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,

I nightly lodge her in an upper tow'r, 35 The key whereof myself have ever kept; And thence she cannot be convey'd awav. Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devis'd

a mean

How he her chamber window will ascend
And with a corded ladder fetch her down;
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently;
Where, if it please you, you may intercept

But, good my lord, do it so cunningly That my discovery be not aimed at; 45 For love of you, not hate unto my friend, Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this. 49

Pro. Adieu, my lord; Sir Valentine is coming. [Exit.

Enter VALENTINE.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

Val. Please it your Grace, there is a messenger

That stays to bear my letters to my friends, And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import? 55 Val. The tenour of them doth but signify My health and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nav then, no matter; stay with me awhile;

I am to break with thee of some affairs That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.

'Tis not unknown to thee that I have sought To match my friend Sir Thurio to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match

Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman

Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities

Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter. Cannot your Grace win her to fancy him? Duke. No, trust me; she is peevish, sullen, froward,

Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty; Neither regarding that she is my child 70 Nor fearing me as if I were her father; And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers, Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her; And, where I thought the remnant of mine

Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty, 75

I now am full resolv'd to take a wife And turn her out to who will take her in. Then let her beauty be her wedding-dow'r; For me and my possessions she esteems not.

Val. What would your Grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady, in Verona here, Whom I affect; but she is nice, and coy, And nought esteems my aged eloquence. Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor—

For long agone I have forgot to court; 85 Besides, the fashion of the time is chang'd—How and which way I may bestow myself To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words:

Dumb jewels often in their silent kind 90 More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman sometime scorns what best contents her.

Send her another; never give her o'er, For scorn at first makes after-love the more. If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you, 96 But rather to beget more love in you; If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone, For why the fools are mad if left alone.

Take no repulse, whatever she doth say; For 'Get you gone' she doth not mean

'Away!' rot Flatter and praise, commend, extol their graces;

Though ne'er so black, say they have angels' faces.

That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man.

If with his tongue he cannot win a woman. Duke. But she I mean is promis'd by her friends Unto a youthful gentleman of worth: And kept severely from resort of men, That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock'd and keys kept safe.

That no man hath recourse to her by night. Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?

Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,

And built so shelving that one cannot climb it

Without apparent hazard of his life. Val. Why then a ladder, quaintly made of cords. To cast up with a pair of anchoring hooks,

Would serve to scale another Hero's tow'r, So bold Leander would adventure it. Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood.

Advise me where I may have such a ladder. Val. When would you use it? Pray, sir, tell me that.

Duke. This very night; for Love is like a child.

That longs for everything that he can come

Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But, hark thee; I will go to her alone:

How shall I best convey the ladder thither? may bear it

Under a cloak that is of any length. Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn?

Val. Ay, my good lord.

Then let me see thy cloak. Duke. I'll get me one of such another length. Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.

Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?

I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me. What letter is this same? What's here? To Silvia '!

And here an engine fit for my proceeding! I'll be so bold to break the seal for once. Reads.

'My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly, And slaves they are to me, that send them flying. O, could their master come and go as lightly,

Himself would lodge where, senseless, they are lying!

My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them,

While I, their king, that thither them importune.

Do curse the grace that with such grace hath blest them,

Because myself do want my servants' fortune.

I curse myself, for they are sent by me, That they should harbour where their lord should be.'

What's here? 150 'Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee.' 'Tis so; and here's the ladder for the purpose.

Why, Phaethon—for thou art Merops' son-

Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car.

And with thy daring folly burn the world? Wilt thou reach stars because they shine on thee? 156

Go. base intruder, over-weening slave, Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates:

And think my patience, more than thy desert.

Is privilege for thy departure hence. Thank me for this more than for all the favours

Which, all too much, I have bestow'd on thee.

But if thou linger in my territories Longer than swiftest expedition

Will give thee time to leave our royal court,

Val. It will be light, my lord, that you By heaven! my wrath shall far exceed the love

I ever bore my daughter or thyself. Be gone; I will not hear thy vain excuse, But, as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence. [Exit Duke.

Val. And why not death rather than living torment? To die is to be banish'd from myself, And Silvia is myself; banish'd from her Is self from self, a deadly banishment. What light is light, if Silvia be not seen? What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by? Unless it be to think that she is by, And feed upon the shadow of perfection. Except I be by Silvia in the night. There is no music in the nightingale; Unless I look on Silvia in the day, 180 There is no day for me to look upon. She is my essence, and I leave to be If I be not by her fair influence Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom: 185 Tarry I here, I but attend on death;

But fly I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter PROTEUS and LAUNCE.

Pro. Run. boy, run, run, and seek him out Laun. So-ho, so-ho!

Pro. What seest thou?

Laun. Him we go to find: there's not a hair on 's head but 'tis a Valentine.

Pro. Valentine?

Val. No.

Pro. Who then? his spirit? Val. Neither.

Pro. What then?

Val. Nothing.

Laun. Can nothing speak? Master, shall I strike?

Pro. Who wouldst thou strike?

Laun, Nothing,

Pro. Villain, forbear.

Laun. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing. pray you-

Pro. Sirrah, I say, forbear. Friend Valentine, a word.

Val. My ears are stopp'd and cannot hear good news, So much of bad already hath possess'd

Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine, For they are harsh, untuneable, and bad.

Val. Is Silvia dead? Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia.

Hath she forsworn me?

Pro. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me.

What is your news?

Laun. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are vanished.

Pro. That thou art banished-O, that's the news!-

From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.

Val. O. I have fed upon this woe already. And now excess of it will make me surfeit. Doth Silvia know that I am banished?

Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offered to the doom-

Which, unrevers'd, stands in effectual force-

A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears;

Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so more; nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only became them

As if but now they waxed pale for woe. But neither bended knees, pure hands held virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding . 230 Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire— news with your mastership?

But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die. Besides, her intercession chaf'd him so. When she for thy repeal was suppliant, That to close prison he commanded her, 235 With many bitter threats of biding there. Val. No more; unless the next word that thou speak'st

Have some malignant power upon my life: If so, I pray thee breathe it in mine ear. 195 As ending anthem of my endless dolour, 243

Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,

And study help for that which thou lament'st.

Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Here if thou stay thou canst not see thy love:

Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life. I Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that.

And manage it against despairing thoughts. Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence.

Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love. The time now serves not to expostulate.

Come, I'll convey thee through the city gate; And, ere I part with thee, confer at large

Of all that may concern thy love affairs. As thou lov'st Silvia, though not for thyself, Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Val. I pray thee, Launce an if thou seest my boy. Bid him make haste and meet me at the Northgate. Pro. Go, sirrah, find him out. Come, Valentine. Val. O my dear Silvia! Hapless Valentine! [Exeunt Valentine and Proteus.

Laun. I am but a fool, look you, and yet I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave; but that's all one if he be but one knave. He lives not now that knows me to be in love; yet I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me; nor who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman; but what woman I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milkmaid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips; yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid and serves for wages. Speed. Thou liest; I can.

Laun. I will try thee. Tell me this: Who Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather. Laun. O illiterate loiterer. It was the son of thy grandmother. This proves that thou canst not read.

Speed. Come, fool, come; try me in thy Laun. [Handing over the paper] There; and Saint Nicholas be thy speed.

Speed. [Reads] 'Inprimis: She can milk.'

Speed. 'Item: She can wash and scour.' Laun. A special virtue; for then she need not be wash'd and scour'd.

Speed. 'Item: She can spin.'
Laun. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Speed. 'Item: She hath many nameless virtues.

Laun. That's as much as to say 'bastard virtues'; that indeed know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Speed. 'Item: She is not to be kiss'd fasting, in respect of her breath.'

Laun. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast. Read on.

Speed. 'Item: She hath a sweet mouth.' Laun. That makes amends for her sour breath. Speed. 'Item: She doth talk in her sleep."

Laun. It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in her talk.

Speed. 'Item: She is slow in words.' Laun. O villain, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue. I pray thee, out with't; and place it for her chief virtue.

Speed, 'Item: She is proud,'

Laun. Out with that too; it was Eve's Speed. 'Item: She hath no teeth.'

Laun. I care not for that neither, because Laun. Well, the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. 'Item: She will often praise her

Laun. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.

Speed. 'Item: She is too liberal.' Laun. Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ down she is slow of; of her purse she shall not, for that I'll keep shut. Now of another thing she may, and that cannot I help. Well, proceed.

Speed. 'Item: She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more Laun. Stop there; I'll have her; she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article. Rehearse that once more. Speed. 'Item: She hath more hair than wit '-

Laun. More hair than wit. It may be; I'll prove it: the cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit is more than the wit, for the greater hides the less. What's Speed. 'And more faults than hairs'-Laun. That's monstrous. O that that were out!

Speed. ' And more wealth than faults.' Laun. Why, that word makes the faults gracious. Well, I'll have her; an if it be a match, as nothing is impossible-

Speed. What then? 360 Laun. Why, then will I tell thee—that thy master stays for thee at the Northgate.

Speed. For me? Laun. For thee! ay, who art thou? He hath stay'd for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him? Laun. Thou must run to him, for thou hast stay'd so long that going will scarce serve the turn. 368

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? Pox of your love letters!

Laun. Now will he be swing'd for reading my letter. An unmannerly slave that will thrust himself into secrets! I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction. IExit.

Scene II. Milan. The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke and Thurio.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love you Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.

Enter PROTEUS.

How now, Sir Proteus! Is your countryman,

According to our proclamation, gone? Pro. Gone, my good lord. Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.

Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks

Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loath to do:

Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage him,

Your slander never can endamage him; Therefore the office is indifferent.

Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord: if I can do it

It follows not that she will love Sir Thurio. Thu. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him.

Lest it should ravel and be good to none. You must provide to bottom it on me: Which must be done by praising me as this kind. Because we know, on Valentine's report,

You are already Love's firm votary And cannot soon revolt and change your mind.

Enter VALENTINE and SPEED.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about ye;

If not, we'll make you sit, and rifle you. Speed. Sir, we are undone; these are the villains

That all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends-

1 Out. That's not so, sir; we are your

2 Out. Peace! we'll hear him.

3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we; for he is a proper man.

Val. Then know that I have little wealth to lose;

A man I am cross'd with adversity: My riches are these poor habiliments,

Of which if you should here disfurnish me, You take the sum and substance that I have.

2 Out. Whither travel you? Val. To Verona.

1 Out. Whence came you?

Val. From Milan. 3 Out. Have you long sojourn'd there? Val. Some sixteen months, and longer might have stay'd, If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. 1 Out. What, were you banish'd thence?

Val. I was. 2 Out. For what offence?

Val. For that which now torments me to rehearse:

But yet I slew him manfully in fight, Without false vantage or base treachery.

done so.

Thu. And thy advice this night I'll put in But were you banish'd for so small a fault? Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

2 Out. Have you the tongues?

Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy,

Or else I often had been miserable. 3 Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood's fat friar.

This fellow were a king for our wild faction! 1 Out. We'll have him. Sirs, a word.

Speed. Master, be one of them; it 's an honourable kind of thievery.

Val. Peace, villain!

2 Out. Tell us this: have you anything to take to?

Val. Nothing but my fortune.

3 Out. Know, then, that some of us are gentlemen.

Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth Thrust from the company of awful men; Myself was from Verona banished For practising to steal away a lady,

2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentle-

Who, in my mood, I stabb'd unto the heart. 1 Out. And I for such-like petty crimes

2 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,

Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you.

Are you content to be our general-To make a virtue of necessity.

And live as we do in this wilderness? 3 Out. What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our consort?

Say 'ay' and be the captain of us all. We'll do thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,

Love thee as our commander and our king. 1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy thou diest. 2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer'd.

Val. I take your offer, and will live with you,

Provided that you do no outrages

On silly women or poor passengers. 3 Out. No, we detest such vile base practices.

I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent; Come, go with us; we'll b ing thee to our crews.

And show thee all the treasure we have got: 1 Out. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose. [Exeunt Scene II. Milan. Outside the Duke's palace, under Silvia's window.

Enter PROTEUS.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine.

And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.
Under the colour of commending him
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;

When to her beauty I commend my vows, She bids me think how I have been forsworn In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd; And notwithstanding all her sudden quips, The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,

Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love 14

The more it grows and fawneth on her still.

Enter THURIO and Musicians.

But here comes Thurio. Now must we to her window,

And give some evening music to her ear.
Thu. How now, Sir Proteus, are you crept before us?

Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio; for you know that love

Will creep in service where it cannot go. 20
Thu. Ay, but I hope, sir, that you love not here.

Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.

Thu. Who? Silvia?

Pro. Ay, Silvia—for your sake.
Thu. I thank you for your own. Now, gentlemen,

Let's tune, and to it lustily awhile.

Enter at a distance, Host, and Julia in boy's clothes.

Host. Now, my young guest, methinks you're allycholly; I pray you, why is it?
Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.

Host. Come, we'll have you merry; I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentleman that you ask'd for.

Jul. But shall I hear him speak?
Host. Ay, that you shall. [Music plays.
Jul. That will be music.
Host. Hark, hark!

Jul. Is he among these?

Host. Ay; but peace! let's hear 'em.

Song.

Who is Silvia? What is she, That all our swains commend her? Holy, fair, and wise is she;

The heaven such grace did lend her.

That she might admired be.

Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness.
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness;
And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling.
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now, are you sadder than you were before? How do you, man? The music likes you not.

Jul. You mistake; the musician likes me not. 55

Host. Why, my pretty youth? Jul. He plays false, father.

Host. How, out of tune on the strings?

Jul. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.

60

Host. You have a quick ear.

Jul. Ay, I would I were deaf; it makes me have a slow heart.

Host. I perceive you delight not in music. Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so. 65 Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!

Jul. Ay, that change is the spite.

Ho.'. You would have them always play but one thing?

Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.

But, Host, doth this Sir Proteus, that we talk on, 70

Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me: he lov'd her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce? 74
Host. Gone to seek his dog, which tomorrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Júl. Peace, stand aside; the company parts.

Pro. Sir Thurio, fear not you; I will so plead 78

That you shall say my cunning drift excels.

Thu. Where meet we?

Pro. At Saint Gregory's well.
Thu. Farewell.
[Exeunt Thurio and Musicians.

Enter SILVIA above, at her window.

Pro. Madam, good ev'n to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen.

Who is that that spake?

Pro. One, lady, it you knew his pure heart's truth,

You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your think 'tis almost day. servant.

Sil. What's your will?

That I may compass yours. Pro. Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this.

That presently you hie you home to bed. 90 Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disloyal man, Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless,

To be seduced by thy flattery That hast deceiv'd so many with thy vows? Return, return, and make thy love amends For me, by this pale queen of night I swear, I am so far from granting thy request That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit.

And by and by intend to chide myself Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady ;

But she is dead.

speak it;

For I am sure she is not buried.

Sil. Say that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,

Survives, to whom, thyself art witness. 105 I am betroth'd; and art thou not asham'd To wrong him with thy importunacy?

Pro. I likewise hear that Valentine is Sil. And so suppose am I; for in his grave Assure thyself my love is buried. Pro. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth. Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call hers thence:

Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.

Jul. [Aside] He heard not that. Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate, Vouchşafe me yet your picture for my love, The picture that is hanging in your chamber:

To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep; For, since the substance of your perfect self Is else devoted, I am but a shadow; And to your shadow will I make true love. Jul. [Aside] If 'twere a substance, you would, sure, deceive it And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loath to be your idol, sir; But since your falsehood shall become you

To worship shadows and adore false shapes, Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it; And so, good rest.

As wretches have o'ernight That wait for execution in the morn.

Jul. Host, will you go?

Host. By my halidom, I was fast asleep. Jul. Pray you, where lies Sir Proteus? Host Marry, at my house. Trust me, I

Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest nizht

That e'e. I watch'd, and the most heaviest. Exeunt.

Scene III. Under Silvia's window.

Enter EGLAMOUR. Egl. This is the hour that Madam Silvia

Entreated me to call and know her mind; There's some great matter she'd employ me

Madam madam!

Enter SILVIA above, at her window.

Sil. Who calls?

Egl. Your servant and your friend; One that attends your ladyship's command. Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good morrow!

Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself! Jul. [Aside] 'Twere false, if I should According to your ladyshap's impose, I am thus early come to know what service It is your pleasure to command me in. Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman— Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not-Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd. Thou art not ignorant what dear good will I bear unto the banish'd Valentine: Nor how my father would enforce me marry Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors. Thyself hast lov'd; and I have heard thee say No grief did ever come so near thy heart As when thy lady and thy true love died, 20 Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.

Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine, To Mantua, where I hear he makes abode: And, for the ways are dangerous to pass, I do desire thy worthy company, Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour, But think upon my grief, a lady's grief, And on the justice of my flying hence To keep me from a most unholy match, Which heaven and fortune still rewards with plagues.

I do desire thee, even from a heart As full of sorrows as the sea of sands. To bear me company and go with me; If not, to hide what I have said to thee, 35 That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances;

Which since I know they virtuously are plac'd,

I give consent to go along with you, Recking as little what betideth me [Exeunt Proteus and Silvia. As much I wish all good befortune you. 230 When will you go?

This evening coming. Egl. Where shall I meet you?

Sil. At Friar Patrick's cell. Where I intend holy confession.

Egl. I will not fail your ladyship. Good morrow, gentle lady.

Sil. Good morrow, kind Sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Under Silvia's window. Enter LAUNCE, with his dog.

Laun. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hardone that I brought up of a puppy; one that I sav'd from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely 'Thus I would teach a dog'. I was sent to deliver him as a present to Mistress Silvia from my master; and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber. but he steps me to her trencher and steals her capon's leg. O, 'tis a foul thing when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies! I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hang'd for't; sure as I live, he had suffer'd You shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentleman-like dogs under the Duke's table: he had not been there, bless the mark, a pissing while but all the chamber smelt Out with the dog' says one; 'What cur is that?' says another; 'Whip him out' says the third; 'Hang him up' says the Duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs. Friend,' quoth I 'you mean to whip the dog.' 'Ay, marry do I' quoth he. 'You do him the more wrong;' quoth I ''twas I did the thing you wot of.' He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for his servant? Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stol'n, otherwise he had been executed; I have stood on the pillory for geese he hath kill'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for't. Thou think'st not of this now. Nay, I remember the trick you serv'd me when I took my leave of Madam Silvia. Did not I bid thee still mark me and do as I do? When didst thou see me heave up my leg and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? Didst thou ever see me do such a trick? 36

Enter PROTEUS and JULIA in boy's clothes.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well.

And will employ thee in some service presently.

Jul. In what you please; I'll do what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt. [To Launce] How now, you whoreson peasant! Where have you been these two days loitering?

Laun. Marry, sir, I carried Mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

Pro. And what says she to my little

Laun. Marry, she says your dog was a cur, and tells you currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she receiv'd my dog?

Laun. No, indeed, did she not; here have I brought him back again.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from Laun. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stol'n from me by the hangman's boys in the market-place; and then I offer'd her mine own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Go, get thee hence and find my dog again,

Or ne'er return again into my sight. Away, I say. Stayest thou to vey me here?

[Exit Launce. A slave that still an end turns me to shame! Sebastian, I have entertained thee, Partly that I have need of such a youth 60 That can with some discretion do my business.

For 'tis no trusting to youd foolish lout. But chiefly for thy face and thy behaviour, Which, if my augury deceive me not, Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth: Therefore, know thou, for this I entertain thee.

Go presently, and take this ring with thee, Deliver it to Madam Silvia-She lov'd me well deliver'd it to me.

Jul. It seems you lov'd not her, to leave her token.

She is dead, belike? Pro. Not so; I think she lives.

Jul. Alas! Pro. Why dost thou cry ' Alas '?

Jul. I cannot choose But pity her.

Wherefore shouldst thou pity her? Pro. Jul. Because methinks that she lov'd you as well

As you do love your lady Silvia. She dreams on him that has forgot her love: You dote on her that cares nor for your love.

'Tis pity love should be so contrary; And thinking on it makes me cry 'Alas!' Pro. Well, give her that ring, and therewithal

Your message done, hie home unto my chamber.

Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary. [Exit Proteus.

Jul. How many women would do such a message?

Alas, poor Proteus, thou hast entertain'd A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs. Alas, poor fool, why do I pity him That with his very heart despiseth me? Because he loves her, he despiseth me; Because I love him, I must pity him.

me, To bind him to remember my good will; -

And now am I, unhappy messenger, To plead for that which I would not obtain.

To carry that which I would have refus'd, To praise his faith, which I would have disprais'd.

I am my master's true confirmed love, But cannot be true servant to my master Unless I prove false traitor to myself. Yet will I woo for him, but yet so coldly As, heaven it knows, I would not have him When she did think my master lov'd her speed.

Enter SILVIA, attended.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you be my mean

To bring me where to speak with Madam Silvia.

Sil. What would you with her, if that I be she?

patience

Sil. From whom? Jul. From my master, Sir Proteus, madam. Sil. O, he sends you for a picture?

Jul. Ay, madam.

Sil. Ursula, bring my picture there. Go, give your master this. Tell him from me,

One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget.

Would better fit his chamber than this shadow.

Jul. Madam, please you peruse this letter. Pardon me, madam; I have unadvis'd Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. This is the letter to your ladyship.

Sil. I pray thee let me look on that again. Jul. It may not be; good madam, pardon me.

Sil. There, hold!

I will not look upon your master's lines. I know they are stuff'd with protestations, break

Jul. Madam, he sends your ladyship this

Sil. The more shame for him that he sends it me;

For I have heard him say a thousand times His Julia gave it him at his departure. 131 Though his false finger have profan'd the ring, Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong. Jul. She thanks you.

Sil. What say'st thou?

Jul. I thank you, madam, that you tender her.

This ring I gave him, when he parted from Poor gentlewoman, my master wrongs her much.

Sil. Dost thou know her?

Jul. Almost as well as I do know myself. To think upon her woes, I do protest That I have wept a hundred several times.

Sil. Belike she thinks that Proteus hath forsook her.

Jul. I think she doth, and that's her cause of sorrow.

Sil. Is she not passing fair?

Jul. She hath been fairer, madam, than

She, in my judgment, was as fair as you; But since she did neglect her looking-glass And threw her sun-expelling mask away, The air hath stary'd the roses in her cheeks And pinch'd the lily-tincture of her face.

That now she is become as black as I. 152 Sil. How tall was she? Jul. About my stature; for at Pentecost.

Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your When all our pageants of delight were play'd. To hear me speak the message I am sent on. Our youth got me to play the woman's part. And I was trimm'd in Madam Julia's gown: Which served me as fit, by all men's judg-

As if the garment had been made for me; Therefore I know she is about my height. And at that time I made her weep agood, For I did play a lamentable part. Madam, 'twas Ariadne passioning For Theseus' persury and unjust flight:

Which I so lively acted with my tears That my poor mistress, moved therewithal, Wept bitterly; and would I might be dead If I in thought felt not her very sorrow.

Sil. She is beholding to thee, gentle youth.

Alas, poor lady, desolate and left! I weep myself, to think upon thy words. Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee

For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'st her.

Faiewell. [Exit Silvia with attendants. Jul. And she shall thank you for't, it e'er you know her.

A virtuous gentlewoman, mild and beautiful!

I hope my master's suit will be but cold, Since she respects my mistress' love so much.

Alas, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture; let me see. I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine rist
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love, 180
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.

Her eyes are grey as glass, and so are mine;

Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high.

189

What should it be that he respects in her

But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond Love were not a blinded
god?

Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,

For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form, Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd!

And were there sense in his idolatry
My substance should be statue in thy stead.

I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake, That us'd me so; or else, by Jove I vow, I should have scratch'd out your unseeing

To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. Milan. An abbey. Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky.

And now it is about the very hour That Silvia at Friar Patrick's cell should meet me.

She will not fail, for lovers break not hours Unless it be to come before their time, 5 o much they spur their expedition.

Enter SILVIA.

See where she comes. Ladv, a happy evening!

Sil. Amen, amen! Go on, good Eglamour,

Out at the postern by the abbey wall;
I fear I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not. The forest is not three leagues off;

If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Milan. The Duke's paloce.

Enter Thurio, Protels, and Julia as Sebastian.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?

Pro. O, sir, I find her milder than she was; And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Thu. What, that my leg is too long? Pro. No; that it is too little.

Thu. I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder.

Jul. [Aside] But love will not be spurr'd to what it loathes.

Thu. What says she to my face?

Pro. She says it is a fair one.

Thu. Nay, then, the wanton lies; my face is black.

Pro. But pearls are fair; and the old saving is:

Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies' eves.

Jul. [Aside] 'Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies' eyes;

For I had rather wink than look on them.
Thu. How likes she my discourse? 15
Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.

Thu. But well when I discourse of love and peace?

Jul. [Aside] But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

Thu. What says she to my valour? 19
Pro. O, sir, she makes no doubt of that.
Jul. [Aside] She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

Thu What says she to my birth?

Pro. That you are well deriv'd.

Jul. [Aside] True; from a gentleman to a fool.

Thu Considers she my possessions?

Pro. O, ay; and pities them.

Thu. Wherefore? Jul. [Aside] That such an ass should owe them. Pro. That they are out by lease.

Jul. Here comes the Duke.

Fnter Duke.

Duke. How now, Sir Proteus! how now, Thurio!

Which of you day Sir Eglamour of late?

Which of you saw Sir Eglamour of late? Thu. Not I.

Pro. Nor I.

Duke. Saw you my daughter?
Pro. Neither.

Duke. Why then, She's fled unto that peasant Valentine;

And Eglamour is in her company. 36
'Tis true; for Friar Lawrence met them both

As he in penance wander'd through the forest;

30

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was. This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,

But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it; Besides, she did intend confession At Patrick's cell this even; and there she And to the nightingale's complaining notes was not.

These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence:

Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse. But mount you presently, and meet with

Upon the rising of the mountain foot That leads toward Mantua, whither they are fled.

Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me. [Exit.

Thu. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl That flies her fortune when it follows her. I'll after, more to be reveng'd on Eglamour Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love

Than hate of Eglamour, that goes with her. IExit.

Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love Than hate for Silvia, that is gone for love.

[Exit.

The frontiers of Mantua. SCENE III. The forest.

Enter Outlaws with SILVIA.

1 Out. Come, come,

Be patient; we must bring you to our captain.

Sil. A thousand more mischances than this one

Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

with her ?

2 Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us.

But Moyses and Valerius follow him. Go thou with her to the west end of the wood;

There is our captain; we'll follow him that's fled. The thicket is beset; he cannot 'scape.

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave; Fear not; he bears an honourable mind, And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine, this I endure for thee! Exeunt.

Scene IV. Another part of the forest. Enter VALENTINE.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man I

I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.

Here can I sit alone, unseen of any, Tune my distresses and record my woes. O thou that dost inhabit in my breast, Leave not the mansion so long tenantless. Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall And leave no memory of what it was! Repair me with thy presence, Silvia;

Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain.

What halloing and what stir is this to-day? These are my mates, that make their wills their law.

Have some unhappy passenger in chase. 15 They love me well; yet I have much to do To keep them from uncivil outrages.

Withdraw thee, Valentine. Who's this comes here? [Steps aside.

Enter PROTEUS, SILVIA, and JULIA as Sebastian.

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for Though you respect not aught your servant doth.

To hazard life, and rescue you from him That would have forc'd your honour and your love.

Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look:

A smaller boon than this I cannot beg. And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give. Val. [Aside] How like a dream is this I see and hear!

Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile. Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am!

Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I 2 Out. Come, bring her away. 5 came; 1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was But by my coming I have made you happy.

Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.

Jul. [Aside] And me, when he approacheth to your presence.

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion. I would have been a breakfast to the beast Rather than have false Proteus rescue me. O, heaven be judge how I love Valentine. Whose life's as tender to me as my soul!

And full as much, for more there cannot be. I do detest false, perjur'd Proteus.

Therefore be gone; solicit me no more. 40 Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,

Would I not undergo for one calm look? O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd, When women cannot love where they're belov'd!

Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's belov'd! Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love. For whose dear sake thou didst then rend to deliver a ring to Madam Silvia, which, thy faith

Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury, to love me. Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou'dst two.

And that's far worse than none; better have none

Than plural faith, which is too much by

Thou counterfest to thy true friend! In love. Pro.

Who respects friend?

All men but Proteus. Sil. Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words

Can no way change you to a milder form. I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end. And love you 'gainst the nature of loveforce ye.

Sil. O heaven!

I'll force thee yield to my desire. Pro. Val. Ruffian! let go that rude uncivil touch:

Thou friend of an ill fashion!

/alentine! Pro. Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love-

For such is a friend now; treacherous man. Thou hast beguil'd my hopes; nought but mine eve

Could have persuaded me. Now I dare not

I have one friend alive: thou wouldst disprove me.

Who should be trusted, when one's own right hand

Is perjured to the bosom? Proteus, I am forry I must never trust thee more, But count the world a stranger for thy sake. The private wound is deepest. O time most accurst!

'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst!

Pro. My shame and guilt confounds me. Forgive me, Valentine; if hearty sorrow Be a sufficient ransom for offence, I tender 't here; I do as truly suffer As e'er I did commit.

Then I am paid; Val. And once again I do receive thee honest. Who by repentance is not satisfied

Is nor of heaven nor earth, for these arc pleas'd;

By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd.

And, that my love may appear plain and free,

All that was mine in Silvia I give thee. Jul. O me unhappy! [Swoons. Pro. Look to the boy.

Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now! What's the matter? Look up; speak.

Jul. O good sir, my master charg'd me I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

out of my neglect, was never done.

Pro. Where is that ring, boy? Jul. Here 'tis; this is it.

Pro. How! let me see. Why, this is the ring I gave to Julia.

Jul. O, cry you mercy, sir, I have mistook;

This is the ring you sent to Silvia. Pro. But how cam'st thou by this ring?

At my depart I gave this unto Julia. Jul. And Julia herself did give it me:

And Julia herself have brought it hither. Pro. How! Julia!

Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,

And entertain'd 'em deeply in her heart. How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root!

O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush! Be thou asham'd that I have took upon

Such an immodest raiment-if shame live In a disguise of love,

It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,

Women to change their shapes than men their minds.

Pro. Than men their minds! 'tis true. O heaven, were man But constant, he were perfect! That one error

Fills him with faults; makes him run through all th' sins:

Inconstancy falls off ere it begins. What is in Silvia's face but I may spy 114 More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye?

Val. Come, come, a hand from either. Let me be blest to make this happy close; 'Twere pity two such friends should be long foes. Pro. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for ever.

.Ital. And I mine. Enter Outlaws, with DUKE and THURIO.

Out. A prize, a prize, a prize!

Val. Forbear, forbear, I say; it is my lord the Duke.

Your Grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd. Banished Valentine.

Sir Valentine! Duke. Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine. Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death:

Come not within the measure of my wrath; Do not name Silvia thine; if once again, Verona shall not hold thee. Here she stands Take but possession of her with a touch-I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I; I hold him but a fool that will endanger His body for a girl that loves him not. 134

Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,

Are men endu'd with worthy qualities; Forgive them what they have committed

And let them be recall'd from their exile:

Duke. The more degenerate and base art. They are reformed, civil, full of good. 156 And fit for great employment, worthy lord. Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them and thee:

With our discourse to make your Grace to smile.

What think you of this page, my lord? Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he blushes.

Val. I warrant you, my lord-more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying? Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Windsor. Before Page's house. Enter JUSTICE SHALLOW, SLENDER and SIR HUGH EVANS.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star Chamber matter of it; if he were twenty Sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slen. In the county of Gloucester, Justice of Peace, and Coram.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and Custalorum.

Slen. Ay, and Ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, Master Parson, who writes himself 'Armigero' in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation- 'Armigero'.

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slen. All his successors, gone before him, hath done't; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white luces in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Evans. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

Shal. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Slen. I may quarter, coz. Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marring indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

24 Evans. Yes, py'r lady! If he has a quarter she has good gifts. of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures; but possibilities, is goot gifts, that is all one. If Sir John Falstaff have Shal. Well, let us see ho committed disparagements unto you, I am Is Falstaff there?

of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compremises between you.

Shal. The Council shall hear it: it is a riot.

Evans. It is not meet the Council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot; the Council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizaments in that.

Shal. Ha! o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Evans. It is petter that friends is the sword and end it; and there is also another device in my prain, which peradventure prings goot discretions with it. There is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master George Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slen. Mistress Anne Page? She has

brown hair, and speaks small like a woman. Evans. It is that fery person for all the orld, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of moneys, and gold, and silver, is her grandsire upon his death's-bed -Got deliver to a joyful resurrections!give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old. It were a goot motion if we leave our pribbles and prabbles, and desire a marriage between Master Abraham and Mistress Anne Page.

Shal. Did her grandsire leave her seven hundred pound?

Evans. Ay, and her father is make her a petter penny. Shal. I know the young gentlewoman;

Evans. Seven hundred pounds,

Shal. Well, let us see honest Master Page. 59

53

Fuans. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a har as I do despise one that is false; or as I despise one that is not true. The knight Sir John is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door for Master Page. [Knocks] What, hoa! Got pless your house here!

Page. [Within] Who's there?

Enter PAGE.

Evans. Here is Got's plessing, and your friend, and Justice Shallow; and here young Master Slender, that peradventures shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Page. I am glad to see your worships well. I thank you for my venison, Master Shallow. Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; much good do it your good heart! I wish'd your venison better; it was ill kill'd. How doth good Mistress Page ?- and I thank you always with my heart, la! with my heart.

Page Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no.

Page. I am glad to see you, good Master Slender.

Slen. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say he was outrun on Cotsall.

Page. It could not be judg'd, sir.

Slen. You'll not confess, you'll not con-

Shal. That he will not. 'Tis your fault; 'tis your fault; 'tis a good dog.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog. Can there be more said? He is good, and fair. Is Sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Evans. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, Master Page. Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it. Shal. If it be confessed, it is not redressed; is not that so, Master Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed he hath; at a word, he hath, believe me; Robert Shallow, esquire, saith he is wronged.

Enter SIR JOHN FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH. NYM and PISTOL.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll complain of me to the King? Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, kill'd my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kiss'd your keeper's daughter.

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answer'd. Fal. I will answer it straight: I have done all this. That is now answer'd. Shal. The Council shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if it were known in counsel: you'll be laugh'd at.

Evans. Pauca verba, Sir John; goot worts. Fal. Good worts! good cabbage! Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your conycatching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tayern, and made me drunk, and afterward pick'd my pocket.

Bard. You Banbury cheese! Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus! Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pauca, pauca; slice! That's my humour.

Slen. Where's Simple, my man? Can you tell, cousin?

Evans. Peace, I pray you. Now let us understand. There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand: that is, Master Page, fidelicet Master Page; and there is myself, fidelicet myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Page. We three to hear it and end it between them.

Evans. Fery goot. I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards ork upon the cause with as great discreet v as we can.

Fal. Pistol!

Pist. He hears with ears.

Evans. The tevil and his tam! What phrase is this, 'He hears with ear'? Why, it is affectations. 135

Fal. Pistol, did you pick Master Slender's

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he-or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else!--of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shove!boards that cost me two shilling and two pence apiece of Yead Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Evans. No, it is false, if it is a pick-purse. Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner! Sir John, and master mine,

I combat challenge of this latten bilbo. Word of denial in thy labras here!

Word of denial! Froth and scum, thou

Slen. By these gloves, then, 'twas he. 149 Nym. Be avis'd, sir, and pass good humours; I will say 'marry trap' with you, if you run the nuthook's humour on me: that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then, he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, Scarlet and John? Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Evans. It is his five senses; fie, what the ignorance is!

Bard. And being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashier'd; and so conclusions pass'd

Enter Mistress Anne Page with wine; MISTRESS FORD and MISTRESS PAGE, following.

Page. How now, Mistress Ford! Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met; by your leave, good Kisses her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome. Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner; come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness. [Exeunt all but Shallow, Slender, and Evans.

Slen. I had rather than forty shillings I had my Book of Songs and Sonnets here.

Enter SIMPLE.

How now, Simple! Where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the Book of Riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Book of Riddles! Why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Allhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?

186 Shal. Come, coz; come, coz; we stay for you. A word with you, coz; marry, Anne. The dinner is on the table; this, coz: there is, as 'twere, a tender, a father desires your worships' company. kind of tender, made afar off by Sir Hugh 100

Shal. Nay, but understand me.

Slen. So I do, sir.

Evans. Give ear to his motions: Master Slender, I will description the matter to 106 you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says; I pray you pardon me; he's a forsooth. Go, sirrah, for all you are my justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

Evans. But that is not the question. The question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. Ay, there's the point, sir.

Evans. Marry is it; the very point of it:

to Mistress Anne Page. Slen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands. Evans. But can you affection the oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold that the lips is parcel of the mouth. Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Shal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Slen. I hope, sir, I will do as it shall become one that would do reason.

Evans. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies ! you must speak possitable, if you can carry her your desires towards her. Will you, upon Shal. That you must.

Slen. I will do a greater thing than that upon your requist, cousin, in any reason.

Shal. Nav. conceive me, conceive me. sweet coz; what I do is to pleasure you, coz. Can you love the maid?

Slen. I will marry her, sir, at your request: but if there be no great love in the beginning, vet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married and have more occasion to know one another. I hope upon familiarity will grow more contempt. But if you say marry her', I will marry her; that I am freely dissolved, and dissolutely.

Evans. It is a fery discretion answer, save the fall is in the ord 'dissolutely': the ort is, according to our meaning, ' resolutely'; his meaning is good.

Shal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well. Slen. Av, or else I would I might be hang'd, la!

Re-enter ANNE PAGE.

Anne. I pray you, sır, walk in.

Slen. I had rather walk here, I thank you. I bruis'd my shin th' other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence -three veneys for a dish of stew'd prunesand, I with my ward defending my head, he hot my shin, and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? Be there bears i' th' town?

Anne. I think there are, sir; I heard them talk'd of.

Slen. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man in England. You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?

Anne. Ay, indeed, sir. 267
Slen. That's meat and drink to me now. have seen Sackerson loose twenty times, and have taken him by the chain; but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it that it pass'd; but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favour'd rough things.

Re-enter PAGE.

Page. Come, gentle Master Slender, come; we stay for you.

Slen. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir. 275 Page. By cock and pie, you shall not choose, sir! Come, come.

Slen. Nay, pray you lead the way.

Slen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.

Anne. Not I, sir; pray you keep on. Sle 1. Truly, I will not go first; truly, la! I will not do you that wrong.

Anne. I play you, sir.

Slen, I'll rather be unman terly than troublesome. You do yourself wrong indeed, la ' [Exeunt.

SCINE II. Before Page's house.

Enter SIR HUGH EVANS and SIMPLE.

Evans. Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius' house which is the way; and there dwells one Mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Sim. Well, sir.

SCENE III. The Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, PISTOL and ROBIN.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter!

Host. What says my bully rook? Speak scholarly and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a week.

Host. Thou'rt an emperor—Cæsar, Keiser. and Pheazar. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall tap; said I well, bully Hecter

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host, I have exole; let lam follow. [To Barda bhi Let me see thee froth and lime. I am at a word : follow. Exit Host.

Fal. Bardolph, tollow him. A tapster is a good trade; an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a wither'd serving-man a fresh tapsier. Go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have desir'd: I will thrive.

Pist. O base Hungarian wight! Wilt thou the spigot wield? Exit Bardolph. Nym. He was gotten in drink. Is not the humour conceited?

Fal. I am glad I am se acquit of this tinder-box: his thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful singer-he Pist. 'Convey' the wise it call. 'Steal' foh! A fico for the phrase!

Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels. Pist. Why, then, let kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy; I must conycatch: I must shift.

Pist. Young ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town? Pist. I ken the wight; he is of substance good. Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

37
Fal. No quips now, Pistol. Indeed, I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's 5 wife; I spy entertainment in her; she Evans. Nay, it is petter yet. Give her this discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation; I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be English'd rightly, is 'I am Sir John Falstaff's '.

Pist. He hath studied her well, and translated her will out of honesty into English. Nym. The anchor is deep; will that humour pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legion of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain: and 'To Nym. The humour rises; it is good, humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her; and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious œillades: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine Nym. I thank thee for that humour. Fal. O, she did so course o'er inv exteriors with such a greedy intention that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass! Here's another letter to her. She bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty. I will be cheaters to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear thou this letter to Mistress Page; and thou this to Mistress Ford. We will thrive, lads, we will threve.

Scene IV. Doctor Caus's house.

Enter MISTRLSS QUICKLY, SIMPLE and RUGBY.

Quick. What, John Rugby! I pray thee go to the casement and see if you can see my master, Master Doctor Caius, coming. If ne do. i' faith, and find anybody in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience and the King's English.

Rug. I'd go watch.

Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. [Exit Rugby] An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale nor no breed-bate; his worst tault is that he is given to prayer: he is something peevish that way; but nobody but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Simple you say your name is?

Sim. Av, for fault of a better. Quick. And Master Slender's your master?

Sim. Av, forsooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring-knife?

Sim. No, forsooth; he hath but a little whey face, with a little yellow beard, a Camcolour'd beard.

Quick. A softly-sprighted man, is he not? Sim. Av, torsooth; but he is as tall a man of his hands as any is between this and his head; he hath rought with a warrener. -5 Quick. How say you? O, I should remember him. Does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he. Quick. Well heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell Master Parson Evans I will do what I can for your master. Anne Re-enter Rugby.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master. Quick. We shall all be shent. Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet] He will not stay long. What, John Rugby! John! what John, I say! Go, John, go inquire for my master; I doubt he be not well that he comes not home. [Singing

And down, down, adown-a, etc.

Enter DOCTOR CAIUS.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like des toys. Pray vou, go and vetch me in my closet un boitier vert—a box, a green-a box. Do intend vat I speak? A gieen-a box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth, I'll fetch it you. [Aside] I am glad he went not in humself; if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud. Je m'en vais à la cour—la grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir?

Caius. Ou:; mette le au mon pocket: dépêche, quickly. Vere is dat knave, Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, sir.

Catus. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby. Come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to the court.

Rug. 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porch. 55 Caius. By my trot, I tarry too long. Od's me! Qu'ai j' oublié? Dere is some simples in my closet dat I vill not for the varld I shall leave behind.

Quick. Ay me, he'll find the young man

there, and be mad!

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet? Villainy! larron! [Pulling Simple out] Rugby, my rapier!

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caius. Wherefore shall I be content-a? Quick. The young man is an honest man. Caius. What shall de honest man do in my closet? Dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

67

Quick. I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic; hear the truth of it. He came of an errand to me from Parson Hugh.

Caius. Vell?

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue. Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mistress Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la! but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you? Rugby, baillez me some paper. Tarry you a little-a-while. [Writes.

Quick. [Aside to Simple] I am glad he is so quiet; if he had Leen throughly moved, you should have heard him so loud and so melancholy. But notwithstanding, man, I'll do you your master what good I can; and the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, my master—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wing, brew, bake, scour, draw meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself—

Sim. [Aside to Quickly] 'Tis a great charge to come under one body's hand.

Quick. [Aside to Simple] Are you avis'd o' that? You shall find it a great charge; and to be up early and down late; but notwithstanding—to tell you in your ear, I would have no words of it—my master himself is in love with Mistress Anne Page; but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind—that's neither here nor there.

Caus. You jack'nape; give-a this letter to Sir Hugh; by gar, it is a shallenge; I will cut his troat in de park; and I will teach a scurvy jack-a-nape priest to meddle or make. You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here. By gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to throw at his dog. [Exil Simple.

Quick. Alas, he speaks but for his friend. Caius. It is no matter-a ver dat. Do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself? By gar, I vill kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed mine host of de Jarteer to measure our weapon. By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate. What the good-year!

Caus. Rugby, come to the court with me. By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door. Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Exeunt Caius and Rugby. Quick. You shall have—An fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that; never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do; nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Fent. [Within] Who's within there? ho! Quick. Who's there, I trow? Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter FENTON.

Fent. How now, good woman, how dost thou?

Quick. The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? How does pretty Mistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, think'st thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in His hands above; but notwithstanding, Master Fenpany! What should I say to him? I was ton, I'll be swoin on a book she loves you. then frigal of my mirth. Heaven forgive Have not your worship a wart above your me! Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliaeye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that? Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale; good faith, it is such another Nan; but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread. We had an hour's talk of that wart; I shall never laugh but in that maid's company! But, indeed, she is given too much to allicholy and musing; but for you-well,

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold. there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf. If thou seest her before me, commend me.

Quick. Will I? I'faith, that we will: and I will tell your worship more of the wart the next time we have confidence; and of other wooers.

Fent. Well, farewell: I am in great haste

Quick. Farewell to your worship. [Exit Fenton] Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does. Out upon 't, what have I forgot? Exit.

ACT TWO

Scene I. Before Page's house. Enter MISTRESS PAGE, with a letter.

Mrs. Page. What! have I scap'd loveletters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me

Reads. see. 'Ask me no reason why I love you; for though Love use Reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I; go to, then, there's sympathy. You are merry, so am I: ha! ha! then there's more sympathy. You love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, Mistress Page-at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice—that I love thee. I will not say, Pity me: 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, Love me. By me, Thine own true knight, By day or night, Or any kind of light, With all his might. For thee to fight,

JOHN FALSTAFF.'

What a Herod of Jewry is this! O wicked, wicked world! One that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pick'd-with the devil's name!—out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my comment for the putting down of men. How shall I be reveng'd on him? for reveng'd I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter MISTRESS FORD.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me. I was going to your house.

Mis. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill. Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that;

I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do, then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary. O Mistress Page, give me some counsel.

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman? Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour!

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman; take the honour. What is it? Dispense with trifles; what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What? Thou liest. Sir Alice Ford! These knights will hack; and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn daylight. Here. read, read; perceive how I might be knighted. I shall think the worse of fat men as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking. And yet he would not swear; prais'd women's modesty, and gave such orderly and wellbehaved reproof to all uncomeliness that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the Hundredth Psalm to the tune of 'Greensleeves'. What tempest, I trow, threw this whale, with so many tuns of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease. Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs. To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names-sure, more!-and these are of the second edition. He will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press when he would put Believe it. Page: he speaks sense. us two. I had rather be a giantess and he under Mount Pelion. Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not; it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some strain in me that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. 'Boarding' call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I; if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. Let's be reveng'd on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a fine-baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses to mine host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villainy against him that may not sully the chariness of our honesty. O that my husband saw this letter! It would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman. Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greasy knight. Come hither. [They retire.

Enter FORD with PISTOL, and PAGE with N. M.

Ford. Well, I hope it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtal dog in some affairs.

[Exit Pistol. Ford. [Aside] I will be patient; I will find out this.

Nym. [To Page] And this is true; I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged the very hand, the very words. What doth me in some humours; I should have borne the humour'd letter to her; but I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the short and the long.

My name is Corporal Nym; I speak, and I avouch:

'Tis true. My name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife.

Adieu! I love not the humour of bread and cheese; and there's the humour of it. Adieu.

dieu. [Exit Nym. Page. 'The humour of it' quoth 'a! Here's a fellow frights English out of his wits.

Ford. I will seek out Falstaff.

Page, I never heard such a drawling, affecting rogue.

Ford. If I do find it—well.

Page. I will not believe such a Cataian though the priest o' th' town commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow. Well. [Mistress Page and Mistress Ford come forward.

Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George? Hark you.

Mrs. Ford. How now, sweet Frank, why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy! I am not melancholy. Get you home; go.

Mrs. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head now. Will you go, Mistress Page ? 130

Host. My hand, bully; thou shalt have egress and regress-said I well ?-and thy name shall be Brook. It is a merry knight. Will you go, Mynheers? 196

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier. Shal. Tut, sir, I could have told you

Page. Hang 'em, slaves! I do not think more. In these times you stand on distance, the knight would offer it; but these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

The first the state of the tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, boys, here, here! Shall we

Page. Have with you. I had rather hear them scold than fight.

Exeunt all but Ford. Foid. Though Page be a secure tool, and cannot put off my opinion so easily. She was in his company at Page's house, and what they made there I know not. Well, I will look further into 't, and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed. [Exit.

Scene II. A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter FALSTAFF and PISTOL.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny. Pist. I will retort the sum in equipage.

Fal. Not a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world's mine oyster,

Which I with sword will open.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance to pawn. I have grated upon my good friends for three repnieves for you and your coachfellow, Nym; or else you had look'd through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. I am damn'd in hell for swearing to gentlemen my friends you were good soldiers and tall fellows; and when Mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan, I took 't upon mine honour thou hadst it not.

Pist. Didst not thou share? Hadst thou not fifteen pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason. Think'st thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you. Go-a short knife and a throng !- to your manor of Pickt-hatch; go. You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue! You stand upon your honour! Why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the terms of my honour precise. I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of God on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will ensconce your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phrases, and your bold-beating oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it. you!

Pist. I do relent; what would thou more of man?

Enter ROBIN.

with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter MISTRESS OUICKLY.

Quick. Give your worship good morrow. Fal. Good morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship. Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I'll be sworn;

As my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. I do believe the swearer. What with me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman; and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one Mistress Ford, sir-I pray, come a little nearer this ways. I myself dwell with Master Doctor Caius. 41

Fal. Well, on: Mistress Ford, you say-Quick. Your worship says very true. I pray your worship come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee nobody hears mine own people, mine own people.

make them his servants!

Fal. Well; Mistress Ford, what of her? Quick. Why, sir, she's a good creature. Lord, Lord, your worship's a wanton! Well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I

Fal. Mistress Ford: come. Mistress Ford-

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it: you have brought her into such a canaries as 'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lav at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift, smelling so sweetly, all musk, and so rushling, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could neve- get an eyewink of her. I had myself twenty angels given me this morning; but I defy all angels, in any such sort, as they say, but in the way of honesty; and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all; and yet there has been earls, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one

Fal. But what says she to me? Be brief, my good she-Mercury.

Quick. Marry, she hath receiv'd your letter; for the which she thanks you a Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak thousand times; and she gives you to notify that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven. 76

Fal. Ten and eleven?

30

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot of. Master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him! He's a very jealousy man; she leads a very frampold life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven. Woman, commend

Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship. Mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too; and let me tell you in your ear, she's as fartuous a civil modest wife, and one, I tell you, that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, whoe'er be the other: and she bade me tell your worship that her husband is seldom from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms, la! Yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee; setting the Quick. Are they so? God bless them, and attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for 't! Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife and Page's wife acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest indeed! They have not so little grace, I hope-that were a trick indeed! But Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page of all loves. Her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page; and truly Master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does; do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list. rise when she list, all is as she will; and truly she deserves it; for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so then; and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and in any case have a nay-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any for 'tis not good that children thing; should know any wickedness. Old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well; commend me to them both. There's my purse; I am yet thy debtor. Boy, go along with this woman. [Exeunt Quickly and Robin] This news distracts me.

Pist. [Aside] This punk is one of Cupid's discover a thing to you, wherein I must fights;

Give fire; she is my prize, or ocean whelm them all!

[Exit Pistol. Fal. Say'st thou so, old Jack; go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee. Let them say 'tis grossly done: so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Sir John, there's one Master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you: and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.

Fal. Call him in. [Exit Bardolph] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflows such liquor. Ah, ha! Mistress Ford and Mistress Page, have I encompass'd you? Go to; via!

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with FORD disguised.

Ford. Bless vou, sir!

Fal. And you, sir! Would you speak Pursuing that that flies, and flying what with me?

Ford. I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome. What's your will? Give us leave, drawer. [Exit Bardolph.

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good Master Brook, I desire more ecquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir John, I sue for yoursnot to charge you; for I must let you understand I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are; the which hath something embold'ned me to this unseason'd intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me; if you will help to bear it, Sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Fal. Speak, good Master Brook; I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar-I will be brief with you—and you have been carriers; very much lay open mine own imperfec-Clap on more sails; pursue; up with your tion; but, good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my foilies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of vour own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith you yourself know how easy is it to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long lov'd her, and, I proyou, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doting observance; engross'd opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her; not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many to know what she would have given; briefly, I have pursu'd her as love hath pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind or in my means, meed, I am sure, I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this: Love like a shadow flies when substance love pursues ;

pursues '.

Fal. Have you receiv'd no promise of satisfaction at her hands? Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importun'd her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love.

Ford. Like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allow'd for your many war-like, courtlike, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it. There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of a man long known to me, though I had your time in exchange of it as to lay an never so good means as desire to make amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's myself acquainted with you. I shall wife; use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may hour is fix'd; the match is made. Would as soon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my duft. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour that the folly of my soul dares not present itself; she is too bright to be look'd against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves: I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattl d against me. What say you to 't, Sir John?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O good sir!

Fal. I say you shall. Ford, Want no money, Sir John; you shall want none.

Fal. Want no Mistress Ford, Master Brook; you shall want none. I shall be with her, I may tell you, by her own appointment; even as you came in to me her assistant, or go-between, parted from me; I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous lascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know Low I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance.

Do you know Ford, sir?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not; yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous wittolly knave hath masses of money; for the which his wife seems to me well-favour'd. I will use her as the key of the cuckold! rogue's coffer; and there's my harvesthome.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits: I will awe him with my cudgel; it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns. Master Brook, thou shalt know I will predominate over the peasant, and thou shalt he with his wife. Come to me soon at night. Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, Master Brook, shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Come to me soon at night. Exit. 255

Ford. What a damn'd Epicurean rascal is this! My heart is ready to crack with impatience. Who says this is improvident any man have thought this? See the hell of having a false woman! My bed shall be abus'd, my coffers ransack'd, my reputawhat you would enjoy? Methinks you tion gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names! Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbason, well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends. But cuckold! Wittol! Cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass; he will trust his wife: he will not be jealous; I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua-vitæ bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself. Then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect. they will break their hearts but they will effect. God be prais'd for my jealousy! Eleven o'clock the hour. I will prevent this, detect my wife, be reveng'd on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! Exit. 270

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius, Jack Rugby!

Rug. Sir?

Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack? Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that Sir

Hugh promis'd to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul dat he is no come; he has pray his Pible well dat he is no come; by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him if he came. Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead so as I vill kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I vill tell you how I vill kill him.

Rug. Alas, sir, I cannot fence! Carus. Villainy, take your rapier. Rug. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Host, Shallow, Slender and Page.

15

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor! Shal. Save you, Master Doctor Caius I Page. Now, good Master Doctor!

Slen. Give you good morrow, sir. Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that me have stay six or seven, two tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, Master Doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, Master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, Master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, Master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, Master Page.

Page. 'Tis true, Master Shallow. 45 Shal. It will be found so, Master Page. Master Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace; you have show'd yourself a wise physician, and Sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me. Master Doctor.

Host. Pardon, Guest Justice. A word,

Caius, Clapper-de-claw! Vat is dat? 60 Host. That is, he will make thee amends. Caius. By gar, me do look he shall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me vill have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to 't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And, moreover, bully-but first: [Aside to the others] Master Guest, and Master Page, and eke Cavaleiro Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore. 68

Page. [Aside] Sir Hugh is there, is he? Host. [Aside] He is there. See what humour he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well? Shal. [Aside] We will do it.

Caus. By gar, me dank you vor dat; by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page. Said I well? Carus. By gar, 'tis good; vell said.

Host. Let us wag, then. Casus. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

ACT THREE

Scene I. A field near Frogmore.

Enter SIR HUGH EVANS and SIMPLE.

Evans. I pray you now, good Master Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you look'd for Master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physic?

Sim. Marry, sir, the pittie-ward, the park-ward; every way; old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.

Evans. I most fehemently desire you you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, sir.

[Exit. Evans. Pless my soul, how full of chollors I am, and trempling of mind! I shall be glad if he have deceived me. How melancholies I am! I will knog his urinals about his knave's costard when I have goot opportunities for the ork. Pless my soul! ISings.

Mercy on me! I have a great dispositions to cry. Sings.

Melodious birds sing madrigals— Whenas I sat in Pabylon-And a thousand vagram posies. To shallow, etc.

Re-enter SIMPLE.

Sim. Yonder he is, coming this way, Sir Hugh. [Sings. Evans. He's welcome.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls-

Heaven prosper the right! What weapons is he?

Sim. No weapons, sir. There comes my Caius. By gar, me vill kill de priest; for master, Master Shallow, and another gentle-

Evans. Prav vou give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms. Takes out a book.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Shal. How now, Master Parson! Good morrow, good Sir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Slen. [Aside] Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Evans. Pless you from his mercy sake, all of you!

Shal. What, the sword and the word! Do you study them both, Master Parson? Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatic day!

Evans. There is reasons and causes for it. Page. We are come to you to do a good office, Master Parson. Evans. Fery well; what is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who, belike having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw. 50

Shal. I have lived fourscore years and upward; I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own Evans. What is he?

Page. I think you know him: Master the renowned French Doctor Caius, physician.

Evans. Got's will and his passion of my lu art! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why

Evans. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen, and he is a knave besides-a cowardly knave as you would desires to be acquainted withal. . 62

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Slen. [Aside] O sweet Anne Page! Shal. It appears so, by his weapons. Keep them asunder; here comes Doctor Pray you follow. Caros.

Enter Host, Cajus, and Rugby.

Shal. So do you, good Master Doctor. 69 Host. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me speak a word with your ear. Verefore vill you not meet-a me?

Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you use your patience; in good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, let us go you?

man, from Frogmore, over the stile, this not be laughing-stocks to other men's humours: I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends. [Aloud] I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogscomb for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable! Jack Rugby-mine Host de Jarteer-have I not stay for him to kill him? Have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Evans. As I am a Christians soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed. I'll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.

Host. Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul, French and Welsh, soul-curer and body-

Casus. Ay, dat is very good! excellent! Host. Peace. I say. Hear mine host of the Garter. Am I politic ? am I subtle ? am I a Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? No; he gives me the potions and the motions. Shall I lose my parson, my priest, my Sır Hugh? No; he gives me the proverbs and the noverbs. Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so. Give me thy hand, celestial; so. Boys of art. I have deceiv'd you both; I have directed you to wrong places; your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue. Come, lay their swords to pawn. Follow me, lads of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad host. Follow, gentlemen, follow.

Slen. [Aside] O sweet Anne Page! [Exeunt all but Caius and Evans. Caius. Ha, do I perceive dat? Have you make-a de sot of us, ha, ha?

Evans. This is well; he has made us his vlouting-stog. I desire you that we may be friends; and let us knog our prains together to be revenge on this same scall, scurvy, cogging companion, the host of the Garter.

Cair: By gar, with all my heart. He promise to bring me where is Anne Page; by gar, he deceive me too.

Erans. Well, I will smite his noddles. [Exeunt.

Scene II. The street in Windsor.

Enter MISTRESS PAGE and ROBIN.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?

Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man than follow him like a dwarf. 5 Mrs. Page. O, you are a flattering boy;

now I see you'll be a courtier.

Enter FORD.

Ford. Well met, Mistress Page. Whither

Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife. Is she at home?

Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of company. I think, it marıy.

Mrs. Page. Be sure of that-two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weathercock? Page. I cannot tell what the Mrs. dickens his name is my husband had him of. What do you call your knight's name, sirrah?

Rob. Sir John Falstaff. Ford. Sir John Falstaff!

Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on 's name. There is such a league between my good man and he! Is your wife at home indeed?

Ford. Indeed she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir. I am sick till I see her. [Exeunt Mrs. Page and Robin.

Ford. Has Page any brains? Hath he any eyes? Hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty mile as easy as a cannon will shoot pointblank He pieces out his wife's twelve score. inclination; he gives her folly motion and advantage; and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this show'r sing in the wind. And Falstaff's boy with her! Good plots! They are laid; and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming Mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Actæon; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim. [Clock strikes] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me cearch; there I shall find Falstaff. I shall be rather prais'd for this than mock'd: for it is as positive as the earth is firm that Falstaff is there. I will go.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, SLENDER, HOST, SIR HUGH EVANS, CAIUS, and RUGBY.

Shal., Page, &c. Well met, Master Ford. Ford. Trust me, a good knot; I have good cheer at home, and I pray you all go with me.

Shal. I must excuse myself, Master Ford. Slen. And so must I, sir; we have appointed to dine with Mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.

Shal. We have linger'd about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer. 51

Page.

Page. You have, Master Slender; I stand wholly for you. But my wife, Master Doctoi, is for you altogether.

Caus. Ay, be-gar; and de maid is your husbands were dead, you two would love-a me; my nursh-a Quickly tell me so 12 mush.

Host. What say you to young Master Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eves of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holiday, he smells April and May; he will carry 't, he will carry 't; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry 't.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Poins; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance; if he take her, let him take her simply; the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport: I will show you a monster. Master Doctor, you shall go; so shall you, Master Page; and you, Sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well; we shall have the freer wooing at Master Page's. [Exeunt Shallow and Slender. Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon. [Exit Ruzby. Host. Farewell, my hearts; I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Exit Host. Ford. [Aside] I think I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentles?

All. Have with you to see this monster. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Ford's house.

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert! Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly! Is the buck-basket-

Mrs. Ford. I warrant. What, Robin, I say!

Enter Servants with a basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down. Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge;

we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and, without any pause or staggering, take this basket on your shoulders. That done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whitsters in Slen. I hope I have your good will, father Datchet Mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames side. 13

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I ha' told them over and thing in me, over; they lack no direction. Be gone, Fal. What and come when you are call'd.

16 persuade to [Exeunt Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter ROBIN.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyas-musket, what news with you?

Rob. My master Sir John is come in at your back-door, Mistress Ford, and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-Lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn. My master knows not of your being here, and hath threat'ned to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou 'rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so. Go tell thy master I am alone. [Exit Robin] Mistress Page, remember you your cue.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, hiss me. [Exit Mrs. Page.

act it, hiss me. [Exit Mrs. Page. Mrs. Ford. Go to, then; we'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpion; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel?

Why, now let me die, for I have liv'd long enough; this is the period of my ambition. O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O sweet Sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, Mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish; I would thy husband were dead; I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, Sir John? Alas,

I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else, nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a tyrant to say so; thou wouldst make an absolute courtier, and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wert, if Fortune thy foe were, not Nature, thy friend. Come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such

Fal. What made me love thee? Let that persuade thee there's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping hawthorn-buds that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Buckleisbury in simple 'time; I cannot; but I love thee, none but thee; and thou deserv'st it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir; I fear you love Mistress Page.

Fal. Thou mightst as well say I love to walk by the Counter-gate, which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it. 70 Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind. 73 Rob. [Wuthin] Mistress Ford, Mistress Ford! here's Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowing and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. Sne shall not see me; I will ensconce me behind the arras.

78

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so; she's a very tattling woman. [Falstaff hides himself.

Re-enter MISTRESS PAGE and ROBIN.

What's the matter? How now!

Mrs. Page. O Mistress Ford, what have you done? You're sham'd, y'are overthrown, y'are undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good Mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, Mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion?
Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion?
Out upon you, how am I mistook in you!

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas, what's the matter? Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a genti-man that he says is here now in the house, by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence. You are undone.

Mrs. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so that you have such a man here; but 'tis most that you have such a man here; but 'tis most that Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you. If you ant to know yourself clear, why, I am glad of it; solute but if you have a friend here, convey, y foot convey him out. Be not amaz'd; call all o thy your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for were, ever.

st Mrs. Ford. What shall I do? There is a 56 gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame so much as his peril. I had rather than a thousand pound he were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame, never stand ' you had rather, and 'you had rather '! Your husband's here at hand; bethink you of some conveyance; in the house you cannot hide him. O. how have you deceiv'd me! Look, here is a basket; if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here: and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking, or-it is whitingtime-send him by your two men to Datchet Mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there.

What shall I do?

Fal. [Coming forward] Let me see 't, let me see 't. O. let me see 't! I'll in. I'll in: follow your friend's counsel; I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What, Sir John Falstaff! [Aside to Falstaff] Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. [Aside to Mrs. Page] I love thee and none but thee; help me away.-Let me creep in here; I'll never-

IGets into the basket: they cover him with foul linen.

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy. Call your men, Mistress Ford. You dissembling knight!

Mrs. Ford. What, John! Robert! John! Exit Robin.

Re-enter Servants.

Go, take up these clothes here, quickly; where's the cowl-staft? Look how you drumble. Carry them to the laundress in Datchet Mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh EVANS.

Ford. Pray you come near. If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I deserve it. How now, whither bear you this?

Serv. To the laundress, forsooth. Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? You were best You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck? I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck! ay, buck! I warrant you, buck; and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exeunt Servants with the basket Gentlemen, I have dream'd to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys; ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out. 11'11 warrant we'll unkennel the fox. Let me stop this way first. [Locking the door] So, now uncape. 145 men, you shall see sport anon; follow me. gentlemen. IExu. Evens. This is fery fantastical humours and jealousies.

Page. Good Master Ford, be contented; you wrong yourself too much.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no the fashion of France; it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search.

lency in this? Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or Sir John. Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in when your husband ask'd who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest cascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here, for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that, and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff. His dissolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrion, Mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water, and give him another hope, to betray him to a_other punishment?

Mrs. Page. We will do it; let him be sent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter FORD, PAGE, CAIUS, and SIR HUGH EVANS.

Ford. I cannot find him; may be the knave bragg'd of that he could not compass. Mrs. Page. [Aside to Mrs. Ford] Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. You use me well, Master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so. Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen. Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, Master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it. Evans. If there be any pody in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment! Caius. Be gar, nor I too; there is no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, Master Ford, are you not asham'd? What spirit, what devil suggests Ford. True, Master Page. Up, gentle- this imagination? I would not ha your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Cannot attain it, why then-hark you Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, Master Page; I suffer For it

Evans. You suffer for a pad conscience. Your wife is as honest a omans as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Casus. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well, I promis'd you a dinner. Come, come, walk in the Park. I pray you pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you why I have done this. Come, wife, come, Mistress Page; I pray you pardon me; pray heartly, pardon me.

Page Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you tomorrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a-birding together: I have a tine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so? 207

Ford. Any thing.

Trans If there is one, I shall make two in the company. Ca us. If there be one or two, I shall make a the turd. Find. Pray you go, Master Page.

Frans. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine host. Carus. Dat is good: by gar, with all my Scene IV. Before Page's house.

Enter FENTON and ANNE PAGE.

Fent. I see I cannot get thy father's love: Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas, how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself. He doth object I am too great of birth; And that, my state being gall'd with my expense,

I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Besides these, other bars he lays before me, My riots past, my wild societies; And tells me 'tis a thing impossible

I should love thee but as a property. Anne. May be he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come!

Albeit I will confess thy father's wealth Was the first motive that I woo'd thee. Anne ;

Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value

Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags; And 'tis the very riches of thyself That now I aim at.

Gentle Master Fenton. Anne. Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir. If opportunity and humblest suit

[They converse apart. hither

> Enter Shallow, Slender, and MISTRESS QUICKLY.

Shal. Break their talk, Mistress Quickly: my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slen. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on 't: 'slid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not dismay'd. Slen. No, she shall not dismay me. I care not for that, but that I am afeard.

Quick. Hark ye, Master Slender would speak a word with you. Anne. I come to him. [Aside] This is my father's choice. O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults

Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

And how does good Master Quick. Fenton? Pray you, a word with you. 35 Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hadst a father!

Slen. I had a father, Mistress Anne; my uncle can tell you good jests of him. Pray you, uncle, tell Mistress Anne the jest how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you. Slen. Av. that I do: as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slen. Ay, that I will come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a squire. Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good Master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz; I'll leave you.

Anne. Now, Master Slender-Slen. Now, good Mistress Anne-

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will! 'Od's heartlings, that's a pretty jest indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, Master Slender, what would you with me?

Slen. Truly, for mine own part I would little or nothing with you. Your father and my uncle hath made motions; if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole! They can tell you how things go better than I can. You may ask your father; here he comes.

Why, how now, what does Master Fenton here?

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt inv house.

I told you sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Fent. Nay, Master Page, be not im-

Mrs. Page. Good Master Fenton, come net to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir. will you hear me?

No, good Master Fenton. Page. Come, Master Shallow; come, son Slender, Knowing my mind, you wrong me, Master Fenton.

[Exeunt Page. Shallow, and Slender Quick. Speak to Mistress Page.

Fent. Good Mistress Page, for that I love your daughter In such a righteous fashion as I do.

Perforce, against all checks, rebukes, and manners.

I must advance the colours of my love, 80 And not retire. Let me have your good will. Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to vond fool.

Mis. Page I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.

Quick. That's my master, Master Doctor. Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick i' th' earth.

And bowl'd to death with turnips.

Mis. Page. Come, trouble not yourself.
Good Master Fenton.

I will not be your friend, not enemy: My daughter will I question how she loves

And as I find her, so am I affected: Till then, farewell, sir; she must needs go in;

Her father will be angry.

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress; farewell, Nan.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne. Quick. This is my doing now: 'Nay,' said I 'will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? Look on Master Fenton'. This is my doing.

Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee,

once to-night

Give my sweet Nan this ring. There's for thy pains.

Quick. Now Heaven send thee good fortune! [Exit Fenton] A kind heart he hath; a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But vet I would my master had Mistress Anne; or I would Master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would Master Fent in had her; I will do what I can for them all three, for so I have promis'd, and I'll be as good as my word; but speciously for Master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses. What a beast am I to slack it! [Exit.

Scene V. The Gater Inn.

Eiter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, I say ! Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in 't. [Exit Bard.] Have I liv'd to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be serv'd such another trick, I il have my brains ta'en out and butter'd, and give them to a dog for a newyear's gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drown'd a blind bitch's puppies, fifteen i' th' litter; and you may know by my size that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell I should down. I had been drown'd but that the shore was shelvy and shallow-a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been when I had been swell'd! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with sack.

Bard. Here's Mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold as if I had swallow'd snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Enter MISTRESS OUICKLY.

Quick. By your leave: I cry you mercy. Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices. Go. brew me a pottle of sack finely.

Bard. With eggs, sir?

Fal. Simple of itself; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. [Exit Bardolph] How now! Quick. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from Mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough; I was thrown into the ford; I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day, good heart, that was not her fault! She does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection. 35 Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a-birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine; I must carry her word quickly. She'il make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well. I will visit her. Tell her so: and bid her think what a man is. Let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, thou?

Ouick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone; I will not miss her. Quick. Peace be with you, sir. [Exit. Fal. I marvel I hear not of Master Brook; he sent me word to stay within. I like his money well. O, here he comes.

Enter FORD disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir!

Fal. Now, Master Brook, you come to know what hath pass'd between me and Ford's wife?

Ford. That, indeed, Sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you: I was at her house the hour she appointed Ford. And sped you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, Master Brook. Ford. How so, sir; did she change her determination?

Fal. No, Master Brook; but the peaking cornuto her husband, Master Brook, dwelling in a continual 'larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embrac'd, kiss'd, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one Mistress Page, gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, in her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they convey'd me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket! Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket! Ramm'd me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, greasy napkins, that, Master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there? Fal. Nay, you shall hear, Master Brook, what I have suffer'd to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus cramm'd in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were call'd forth by their mistress to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet Lane; they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their master in the door; who ask'd them once or twice what they had in their basket. I quak'd for fear lest the lunatic knave would have search'd it; but Fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well, on went he for a search, and away went I Master Brook-I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first, an intolerable fright to be detected with a jealous 10tten bell-wether; next, to be compass'd like a good bilbo in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head; and then, to be stopp'd in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own Think of that-a man of my grease. kidney. Think of that-that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. It was a miracle to scape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than halfstew'd in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe: think of that-hissing hot. Think of that, Master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffer'd all this. My suit, then, is desperate; you'll undertake her no more.

Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a-birding; I have received from her another embassy of meeting; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, Master Brook.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir. Fal. Is it? I will then address me to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I and the conclusion shall crowned with your enjoying her. Adieu. You shall have her, Master Brook; Master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit. 122

Ford. Hum! ha! Is this a vision? Is this a dream? Do I sleep? Master Ford, awake; awake, Master Ford. There's a hole made in your best coat, Master Ford. This 'tis to be married; this 'tis to have linen and buck-baskets! Well, I will proclaim myself what I am; I will now take the lecher; he is at my house. He cannot scape me; 'tis impossible he should; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purse nor into a pepper box. But, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not shall not make me tame. If I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me-I'll be horn mad. [Exit. 131

Scene I. Windsor. A street.

Enter MISTRESS PAGE, MISTRESS QUICKLY. and WILLIAM.

Mrs. Page. Is he at Master Ford's already, think'st thou? Quick. Sure he is by this; or will be presently: but truly he is very courageous mad about his thiowing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mis. Page. I'll be with he, by and by : I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look where his master comes; 'tis a playing day, I see.

Enter SIR HUGH EVANS.

How now, Sir Hugh, no school to-day? Evans. No; Master Slender is let the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart! 12 Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says my son profits nothing in the world at his book; I pray you ask him some questions in his accidence.

Evans. Come hither, William; hold up your head; come.

Mis. Page. Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; answer your master; be not Evans. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will, Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say 'Od's nouns'.

Evans. Peace your tattlings. What is fair', William?

Will. Pulcher.

Quick. Polecats! There are fairer things than polecats, sure.

Evans. You are a very simplicity oman: I pray you, peace. What is 'lapis', William?

Will. A stone.

Evans. And what is 'a stone', William?

Will. A pebble.

Evans. No, it is 'lapis'; I pray you remember in your prain.

Will. Lapis.

Evans. That is a good William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun, and be thus declined: Singulariter, nominativo; hic, hæc, hoc.

Evans. Nominativo, hig, hag, hog; pray you, mark: genitivo, hujus. Well, what is your accusative case?

Will. Accusativo, hinc.

Evans. I pray you, have your remembrance, child. Accusativo, hung, hang, hog.

Quick. ' Hang-hog' is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Evans. Leave your prabbles, oman. What is the focative case, William? Will. O—vocativo, O.

Evans. Remember, William: focative is caret.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Evans. Onian, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace.

Enais What is your genitive case plural, William ?

Will Genitive case?

Evans. Ay.

Will. Genitive: horum, harum, horum, 55 Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case: fie on hei! Never name hei, child, if she be a whore.

Erans. For shame, oman.

Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words He teaches him to hick and to hack, which the ''ll do fast enough of themselves; and to call 'horum'; fie upon you!

Evans. Oman, art thou lunatics? Hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers of the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Puthee hold thy neace.

Evans. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

Will. Forsooth, I have forgot. Evans. It is qui, quæ, quod; if you forget your qui's, your que's, and your quod's, you must be preeches. Go your ways and play; go. Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was. Exam. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, Victross Page

Mrs. Page. Adieu. good Sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh! Get you home, boy. Come, we stay too long.

SCENE II. Ford's house.

Enter FALSTATE and MISTRESS FORD.

Fal. Mistress Fold, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance. I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a han's breadth; not only, Mistress Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accourrement, complement. and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mis. Ford. He's a-birding, sweet Sir John.

Mis. Page. [Within] What hoa, gossip Ford, what hoa!

Mrs. Ford. Step into th' chamber. Sir John. [Exit Falstaff.

Enter MISTRLSS PAGE.

Mrs. Page How now, sweetheart, who's at home besides yourself? Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people. Mis. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly. [Aside to her] Speak louder.

Mis. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Fold. Why?

is in his old lunes again. He so takes on vonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets hunself on the forehead, crying 'Peer-out, peer-out!' that any madness I ever yet beheld seem'd but tameness, civility, and patience, to this his distemper he is in now. I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him? 25 Mis. Page. Of none but him; and swears he was carried out, the last time he search'd for him, in a basket; protests to my husband he is now here; and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion. But I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own foolery.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, Mistress

Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by, at street end; he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone: the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then, you are utterly sham'd, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you! Away with him, away with him; better shame than murder.

Mrs. Ford. V'hich way should he go? How should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Re-enier Falstaff.

Fal. No, I'll come no more i' th' basket. May I not go out ere he come?

Mis. Page. Alas, three of Master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?

Fal. What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mis. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces.

Mrs. Page. Creep into the kiln-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note. There is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. I'll go out then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, Sir John. Unless you go out disguis'd.

Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him? Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I know not! There is no woman's gown big enough for hun; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muiller, and a kerchief, and so escape. 60

Ful. Good hearts, devise something; any extremity rather than a mischief.

Mis. Fold. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brainford, has a gown above, 64 Mis. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is; and there's her thrumm'd hat, and her muffler too. Run up, Sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go. go. sweet Sir John. Mistress Page and I will look some linen for vour head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick; we'll come dress you straight. Put on the gown the [Exit Falstaff. while.

Mrs. Ford. I would my husband would meet him in this shape; he cannot abide the old woman of Brainford: he swears she's a witch, forbade her my house, and hath threat'ned to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel; and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming? Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness is he; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence. 80

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, Master Page, have you any way then to unfool me agam? Set down the basket, villain! Somebedy call my wife. Youth in a basket! O von pand rly rascals, there's a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Now shall the devil be sham'd. What, wife, I say! Come, come forth; behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes, Master Ford; you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinion'd.

Evans. Why, this is lunatics. This is mad as a mad dog.

Shal. Indeed. Master Ford, this is not well, indeed.

Ford. So say I too, sir.

Re-enter MISTRESS FORD.

Come hither, Mistress Ford; Mistress Ford. the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Ford, Well said, brazen-face : hold it out.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why?

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one convey'd out of my house yesterday in this basket. Why may not he be there a rain? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable. Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a flea's death.

Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, Master Ford; this wrongs you.

Evans. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart; this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for. 140 Page. No, nor nowhere else but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time. If I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity; let me for ever be your table sport; let them say of me 'As jealous as Ford, that search'd a hollow walnut for his wife's leman'. Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What, hoa, Mistress Page! Come you and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman? What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brainford. 150

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is sure scar'd out of him; if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have serv'd him?

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, And let us two devise to bring him thither. them vizards.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes that Heine the Hunter.

Sometime a keeper here in Windsor Forest. Doth all the winter-time, at still midnight, Walk round about an eak, with great ragg'd horns:

And there he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle.

And makes milch-kine vield blood, and shakes a chain

This tale of Herne the Hunter for a truth. Page. Why vet there want not many that do tear In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak.

But what of this?

Marry, this is our device-Mis. Ford. That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Disguis'd, like Herne, with huge hoins on his head.

Page Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come.

And in this shape. When you have brought hun thither.

What shall be done with him? What is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus: Nan Page my daughter, and my little son. And three or four more of their growth. we'll dress

Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white,

With rounds of waven tapers on their heads, And rattles in their hands; upon a sudden, As Falstaff, she, and I, are newly met, 51 Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once With some diffused song; upon their sight We two in great amazedness will fly.

Then let them all encircle him about, And fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight: And ask him why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred paths he dares to tread In shape profane.

Mis. Ford. And till he tell the truth. Let the supposed tairies pinch him sound. And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known, We'll all present ourselves; dis-horn the spirit,

And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must Be practis'd well to this or they'll nev'r

Evans. I will teach the children their behaviours; and I will be like a jack-anapes also, to burn the knight with my taber. Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go buy Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the Queen of all the Fairies.

Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That silk will I go buy. [Aside] And in that time

Shall Master Slender steal my Nan away, And marry her at Eton.—Go, send to Falstaff straight SCENE V. The Garter Inn.

Enter HOST and SIMPLE.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? What, thick-skin? Speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

John Falstaff from Master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed and truckle-bed, 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new. Go, knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropopha-ginian unto thee. Knock, I say.

Sira. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber; I'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman? The knight may be robb'd. I'll call. Bully knight! Bully Sir John! Speak from thy lungs military. Art thou there? It is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [Above] How now, mine host? Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar tarries the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend; my chambers are honourable. Fie, privacy, fie!

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it. Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir? 31 Fal. Marry, she says that the very same man that beguil'd Master Slender of his chain cozen'd him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself: I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? Let us know.

Host. Av. come: quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Ful. Conceal them, or thou diest. Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about Mistress Anne Page: to know if it were my master's fortune to have her or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sum What, sir? 45 Fal. To have her, or no. Go; say the Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with Sir that hath taught me more wit than ever I learn'd before in my life; and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Out. alas, sir. cozenage, mere côzenage!

Host. Where be my horses? Speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set spurs and away, like German devils. three three Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the Duke, villain; do not say they be fled. Germans are honest men.

Enter SIR HUGH EVANS.

Evans. Where is mine host? Host. What is the matter, sir?

Fal. There was, mine host, an old fat ments. There is a friend of mine come to that has cozen'd all the hosts of Readins. of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you; you are wise, and full of gibes and vloutingstogs, and 'tis not convenient you should mind is heavy; I will give over all. be cozened. Fare you well. IExit.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine host de Jarteer? Host. Here, Master Doctor, in perplexity and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat: but it is tell-a me dat you make grand preparation for a Duke de Jamany. By my trot, dere is no duke that the court is know to come: I tell you for good will. Adieu.

Host. Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight; lam undone. Fly, run, hue and cry, villain; I am undone.

[Exeunt Host and Bardolph. Fal. I would all the world might be cozen'd, for I have been cozen'd and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been wash'd and cudgell'd, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me; I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits till I were as crestfall'n as a dried pear. I never prosper'd since I forswore myself at primero. Well, if my wand were but long enough to say my Quick. From the two parties, forsooth. Fal. The devil take one party and his dam the other! And so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffer'd more for their sakes, more than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffer'd? Yes, warrant; speciously one of them; Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford. But that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber; you shall hear how things go, and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so cross'd.

Scene VI. The Garter Inn. Enter FENTON and HOST.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me: mv Fent. Yet hear me speak. Assist me in my purpose,

And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold more than your loss.

Host. I will hear you, Master Fenton; and I will, at the least, keep your counsel. Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you

ACT FIVE

Scene I. The Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mistress Quickly.

Fal. Prithee, no more prattling; go. I'll hold. This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Away.

Quick. I'll provide you a chain, and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns. 6 Fal. Away, I say; time wears; hold up your head, and mince. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.

Enter FORD, disguised.

How now, Master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, Master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, Master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him. Master Brook, that ever govern'd frenzy, I will tell you—he beat me grievously in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, Master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam; because I know also life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me; I'll tell you all, Master Brook. Since I pluck'd geese, play'd truant, and whipp'd top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately. Follow me. I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom tonight I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow. Strange things in hand, "aster Brook! Follow. 28 remember your parts. Be pold, I pray you;

SCENE II. Windson Park.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch i' th' Castle ditch till we see the 'ight of our fairies. Remember, son Siender, my daughter.

Slen. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with And here it iests—that you'll procure the her, and we have a nay-word how to know one another. I come to her in white and cry 'mum'; she cries 'budget'; and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too; but what needs either your mum or her budget? The white will decipher her well enough. It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me.

Scene III. A street leading to the Park. Enter MISTRESS PAGE, MISTRESS FORD, and DOCTOR CAIUS.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green; when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the Park; we two must go together. Caius. I know vat I have to do; adieu. 5

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter; but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies, and the Welsh devil, Hugh?

Mrs. Page. They are all couch'd in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscur'd lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amaz'd, he will be mock'd; if he be amaz'd, he will every way be mock'd.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely. Mrs. Page. Against such lewdsters and their lechery,

Those that betray them do no treachery. Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on. To the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.

Scene V. Another part of the Park.

Enter FALSTAFF disguised as Heine.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now the hot-blooded gods assist me! Remember Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa love set on thy horns. O powerful love that in some respects makes a beast a man in some other a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda O omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose! A fault done first in the form of a beast-O Jove, a heastly fault !- and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl-think on't, Jove, a foul fault! When gods have hot backs what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' th' forest. Send me a cool juttime, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my Enter Sir Hugh Evans like a satyr, Anne PAGE as a fairy, and Others as the Fairy Queen, fairies, and Hobgoblin; all with tabers.

Fairy Queen. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy, lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

Puck. Vile worm, thou wast o'erlook'd even in thy birth.

Fairy Queen. With trial-fire touch me for my love again; but I will always count his finger-end:

If he be chaste, the flame will back descend. And turn him to no pain; but if he stait. It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Puck. A trial, come.

Evans. Come, will this wood take fire? [They put the tapers to his fingers, and he starts.

Fal. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought they were not fames; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers. drove the grossness of the foppery into a receiv'd belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyine and reason, that they were fair es. See now how wit may be made a Jack-a-Lent when 'tis upon ill employment.

Evans. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pinse vou.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Evans. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English. Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it. that it wants matter to prevent so gross o'er-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh goat too? Shall I have a coxcomb of frieze? 'Tis time I were chok'd with a piece of toasted cheese.

Evans. Seese is not good to give putter; your belly is all putter.

Fal. 'Seese 'and 'putter'! Have I hv'd to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puff'd man?

Page. Old, cold, wither'd, and of intoleiable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife? Evans. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and metheglins, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme; you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welsh flannel; ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me; use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one Master Brook, that you Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; have cozen'd of money, to whom you above that you have suffer'd, I think to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house. where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee. Tell her Master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. [Aside] Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, Doctor Caius' wife.

Enter SLENDER.

Have you dispatch'd? Slen. Dispatch'd! I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know on't: would I were hang'd, la. else l

Page. Of what, son?

Slen. I came yonder at Eton to marry Mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy. If it had not been i' th' church, I would have swing'd him, or he should have swing'd me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir!-and 'tis a postmaster's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl. If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white and cried 'mum' and she cried 'budget' as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not

Anne, but a postmaster's boy.

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry. I knew of your purpose; turn'd my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the Doctor at the dean'ry, and there married.

Enter CAIUS.

Caius. Vere is Mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened; I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paysan, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page; by gar, I am cozened. 195

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in Caius. Ay, be gar, and 'tis a boy; be For he, to-night, shall lie with Mistress r, I'll raise all Windsor. [Exit Caius. Ford. [Exeunt. gar, I'll raise all Windsor.

Ford. This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me: comes Master Fenton.

Enter FENTON and ANNE PAGE.

How now, Master Fenton!

Anne. Pardon, good father. Good my mother, pardon.

Page. Now, Mistress, how chance you went not with Master Slender? Mrs. Page. Why went you not with Master Doctor, maid? Fent. You do amaze her. Hear the truth of it.

You would have married her most shamefully.

Where there was no proportion held in love. The truth is, she and I, long since contracted.

Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve 115.

Th' offence is holy that she hath committed: And this deceit loses the name of craft. Of disobedience, or unduteous title,

Since therein she doth evitate and shun 215 A thousand irreligious cursed hours,

Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amaz'd; here is no remedy.

In love, the heavens themselves do guide the state:

Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanc'd.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton. heaven give thee joy!

What cannot be eschew'd must be embrac'd.

Fal. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chas'd.

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no further. Master Fenton.

Heaven give you many, many merry days! Good husband, let us every one go home, And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire; Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be so. Sir John, 230 To Master Brook you yet shall hold your word:

THE SCENE: Vienna.

ACT ONE

Scene I. The Duke's palace. Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Escalus! Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold

Enter ANGELO

Duke. Look where he comes. Ang. Always obedient to your Grace's will.

I come to know your pleasure. Duke. Angelo. There is a kind of character in thy life That to th' observer doth thy history

Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings Are not thine own so proper as to waste 31 Thyself upon thy vartues, they on thee. Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues

Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike 35 As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd Escal. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

Scene II. A street.

Enter Lucio and two other Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the Duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the King.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen. Lucio. Thou conclud'st like the sanctimonious pirate that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scrap'd one out of the tab e.

2 Gent, 'Thou shalt not steal'? Lucio. Av. that he raz'd.

1 Gent. Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all that, in the thanksgiving before meat, do relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it. Lucio. I believe thee; for I think thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No? A dozen times at least. 20

1 Gent. What, in metre?
Lucio. In any proportion or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy; as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of ali grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet. Thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet; thou art good velvet; thou 'rt a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee. I had as hef be a list of an English kersey as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech. I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think I have done myself wrong, have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art ta nted or free.

Enter MISTRESS OVERDONE.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchas'd as many diseases under her 100f as come to-

2 Gent. To what, I pray? 46
1 Gent. Judge.
2 Gent. To three thousand do ours a year.

1 Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more. 1 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me, but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not, as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impiety has made a feast of thee.

1 Gent. How now! which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Mrs. Ov. Well, well! there's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you all.

1 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Mrs. Ov. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison? 'Tis not so. Mrs. Ov. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested : saw him carried away ; and, which is more, within these three days his head to be chopp'd off.

Lucio. But, after all this fooling. would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Mrs. Ov. I am too sure of it; and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, th s may be; he promis'd to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping. 2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gen!. But most of all agreeing with the proclamat on.

Lucio. Awav let's go learn the truth Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen. of it. Mrs. Ov. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter POMPEY.

How now! what's the news with you? 81 Pom. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Mrs. Ov. Well, what has he done?

Pom. A woman.

Mrs. Ov. But what's his offence? Pom. Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.

Mrs. Ov. What! is there a maid with child by him?

Pom. No; but there's a woman with maid by him. You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Mrs. Ov. What proclamation, man? Pom. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pluck'd down.

Mrs. Ov. And what shall become of those in the city?

Pom. They shall stand for seed; they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

Mrs. Ov. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Pom. To the ground, mistress. Mrs. Ov. Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of

Pom. Come, fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients. Though you change your place you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage, there will be pity taken on you; you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered. Mrs. Ov. What's to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let's withdraw.

Pom. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's Madam [Exeunt. Juliet.

Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, and Officers; Lucio following,

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to th' world?

Bear me to pisson, where I am committed. Prov. I do it not in evil disposition. But from Lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demigod Authority Make us pay down for our offence by weight The words of heaven: on whom it will, it will:

On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just. Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio, whence comes this restraint? Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio. liberty;

As surfeit is the father of much fast, So every scope by the immoderate use Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue. Like rats that ravin down their proper bane, A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die. Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom as the morality of imprisonment. offence, Claudio? What's thy Claud. What but to speak of would offend

Lucio. What, is't murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Lechery? Claud. Cail it so.

Prov. Away, sir; you must go.

Claud. One word, good friend. Lucio, a word with you.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good. Is lechery so look'd after?

Claud. Thus stands it with me: upon a true contract

I got possession of Julietta's bed. You know the lady she is fast my wife, Save that we do the denunciation lack Of outward order; this we came not to, Only for propagation of a dow'r Remaining in the coffer of her fr ends. From whom we thought it meet to hide our love Till time had made them for us. But it chances

The stealth of our most mutual entertainment.

With character too gross, is writ on Juliet. Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Unhappily, even so. 149 Claud. And the new deputy now for the Duke-Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness, Or whether that the body public be A horse whereon the governor doth ride, Who, newly in the seat, that it may know He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place, Or in his eminence that fills it up, I stagger in. But this new governor Awakes me all the enrolled penalties

Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by th' wall
160

So long that nineteen zodiacs have gone round

And none of them been worn; and, for a name,

Now puts the drowsy and neglected act Freshly on me. 'Tis surely for a name. 164

Lucio. I warrant it is; and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the Duke, and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service: This day my sister should the closter enter, And there receive her approbation; Acquaint her with the danger of my state; Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends

To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him.

I have great hope in that; for in her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect 176 Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art

When she will play with reason and discourse.

And well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack. I'll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio. L. .io. Within two hours. 186

Claud. Come, officer, away. [Exeunt.

Scene III. A monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought;

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee

To give me secret harbour hath a purpose More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends

Of burning youth.

Fri. May your Grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you

How I have ever lov'd the life removed, And held in idle price to haunt assemblies Where youth, and cost, a witless bravery keeps.

I have deliver'd to Lord Angelo, A man of stricture and firm abstinence, My absolute power and place here in Vienna,

And he supposes me travell'd to Poland; For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,

And so it is receiv'd. Now, pious sir, You will demand of me why I do this.

Fri. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes and most biting laws,

The needful bits and curbs to headstrong steeds,

Which for this fourteen years we have let slip;

Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave,

That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers, Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch,

Only to stick it in their children's sight 25

For terror, not to use, in time the rod Becomes more mock'd than fear'd; so our decrees,

Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead; And liberty plucks justice by the nose; The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart

Goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your Grace
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd:

And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd

Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful. Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope, 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them

For what I bid them do; for we bid this be done,

When evil deeds have their permissive pass And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed, my father.

I have on Angelo impos'd the office; 40 Who may, in th' ambush of my name, strike home,

And yet my nature never in the fight
To do in slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people. Therefore, I prithee.

Supply me with the habit, and instruct me How I may formally in person bear me Like a true friar. Moe reasons for this action

At our more leisure shall I render you. Only, this one: Lord Angelo is precise; 50 Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses

That his blood flows, or that his appetite Is more to bread than stone. Hence shall we see,

If power change purpose, what our seemers be. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. A nunnery.

Enter ISABELLA and FRANCISCA.

Isab. And have you nuns no farther privileges?

Fran. Are not these large enough? Isab. Yes, truly I speak not as desiring

But rather wishing a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.

Lucio. [Within] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls? Fran. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella, Turn you the key, and know his business of him;

You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn;

When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men

But in the presence of the prioress; Then, if you speak, you must not show your face. Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

He calls again; I pray you answer him. [Exit Francisca.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be. as those cheek-roses

Proclaim you are no less. Can you so stead

As bring me to the sight of Isabella, A novice of this place, and the fair sister To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab. Why her 'unhappy brother'? Let me ask

The rather, for I now must make you know I am that Isabella, and his sister. Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you.

Not to be weary with you, he's in prison. 25 Isab. Woe me! For what?

his judge, He should receive his punishment in thanks:

He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your story.

It is true. I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin 31 With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest.

Tongue far from heart-play with all virgins so:

I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted, By your renouncement an immortal spirit, And to be talk'd with in sincerity, As with a saint.

mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth. 'tis thus:

Your brother and his lover have embrac'd. As those that feed grow full, as blossoming That from the seedness the bare fallow brings

To teeming foison, even so her plenteous womb

Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry. Isab. Some one with child by him? My cousin Juliet?

Lucio. Is she your cousin?

Isab. Adoptedly, as school-maids change their names

By vain though apt affection.

Lucio. She it is. Isab. O, let him marry her!

Lucio. This is the point. The Duke is very strangely gone from hence:

Bore many gentlemen, myself being one, In hand, and hope of action; but we learn. By those that know the very nerves of state.

His givings-out were of an infinite distance

From his true-meant design. Upon his place.

And with full line of his authority. Governs Lord Angelo, a man whose blood Is very snow-broth, one who never feels The wanton stings and motions of the sense, But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge With profits of the mind, study and fast. 61 He—to give fear to use and liberty,

Which have for long run by the hideous law.

As mice by lions—hath pick'd out an act Under whose heavy sense your brother's

Falls into forfeit; he arrests him on it, And follows close the rigour of the statute To make him an example. All hope is gone, Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer

Lucio. For that which, if myself might be To soften Angelo. And that's my pith of business

> 'Twixt you and your poor brother. Isab. Doth he so seek his life?

Lucio. Has censur'd him Already, and, as I hear, the Provost hath A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what poor ability's in me 75

To do him good? Assay the pow'r you have. Lucio. Isab. My power, alas, I doubt!

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors, And make us lose the good we oft might win

By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo, Isab. You do blaspheme the good in And let him learn to know, when maidens and kneel.

All their petitions are as freely theirs As they themselves wou'd owe them. Isab. I'll see what I can do.

But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight: No longer staying but to give the Mother

Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you. Commend me to my Liother; soon at night I'll send him certain word of my success. Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu. 90 [Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. A hall in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Provost, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scarecrow of the law,

Setting it up to fear the birds of prey, And let it keep one shape till custom make it

Their perch, and not their terror.

Ay, but yet Let us be keen, and rather cut a little Than fall and bruise to death. Alas! this gentleman, Whom I would save, had a most noble father.

Let but your honour know,

Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue. That, in the working of your own affections, Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing,

Or that the resolute acting of our blood Could have attain'd th' effect of your own purpose,

Whether you had not sometime in your lıfe

Err'd in this point which now you censure officer. him.

And pull'd the law upon you.

'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,

Another thing to fall. I not deny The jury, passing on the prisoner's life, May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. What's open made to justice,

That justice seizes. What knows the laws That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant,

The jewel that we find, we stoop and take 't, Because we see it; but what we do not see We tread upon, and never think of it. You may not so extenuate his offence For I have had such faults: but rather tell

When I, that censure him, do so offend,

Men give like gods; but when they weep Let mine own judgment pattern out my death.

And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Where is the Provost? Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

See that Claudio Ang. Be executed by nine to-morrow morning; Bring him his confessor; let him be prepar'd;

For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage. Exit Provost.

Escal. [Aside] Well, heaven forgive him! and forgive us all!

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall; Some run from breaks of ice, and answer none.

And some condemned for a fault alone. 40

Enter ELBOW and Officers with FROTH and POMPEY.

Elb. Come, bring them away; if these be good people in a commonweal that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law; bring them awav.

Ang. How now, sir! What's your name, and what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor Duke's constable, and my name is Elbow; I do lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Well-what bene-Ang. Benefactors! factors are they? Are they not malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are; but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profanation in the world that good Christians ought to have. Escal. This comes off well; here's a wise

Ang. Go to; what quality are they of? Elbow is your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Pom. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow. Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir? A tapster, sir; parcelbawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that? Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour-

Escal. How! thy wife!

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman-Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accus'd in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanliness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone's means; but as she spit in his face, so she defied him.

Pom. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces? 85 Pom. Sir, she came in great with child; and longing, saving your honour's reverence, for stew'd prunes. Sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit dish, a dish of some three pence; your honours have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to; no matter for the dish, sır.

Pom. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right; but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, Master Froth, I could not give you three pence again—

Froth. No, indeed.

Pom. Very well; you being then, if you be rememb'red, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes—

Froth. Ay, so I did indeed.

Pom. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be rememb'red, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you—

Froth. All this is true.

Pom. Why, very well then-

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool. To the purpose: what was done to Elbow's wife that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Pom. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Pom. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir, a man of tourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas—was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Froth. All-hallond eve.

Pom. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir; 'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for winter.

Pom. Why, very well then; I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there; I'll take my leave.

And leave you to the hearing of the cause, Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo. Now, sir, come on; what was done to Flhow's wife once more?

Elbow's wife, once more?

Pom. Once?—sir. There was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Pom. I beseech your honour, ask me. 137 Escal. Well, sir, what did this gentleman to her?

To her?

Pom. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Doth your honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Pom. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well. Escal. Well, I do so.

145
Pom. Doth your honour see any harm in his face? Escal. Why, no.

Pom. I'll be suppos'd upon a book his face is the worst thing about him. Good then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right, constable; what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Pom. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Ēlb. Vārlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet; the time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Pom. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here, Justice or Iniquity? Is this true?

ou, Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor Duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, Escal. If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have your action of slander too. 173 Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses till thou know'st what they

Elb. Mairy, I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked variet, now, what's come upon thee: thou art to continue now, thou varlet: thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a Froth. Yes, an't please you, sir.

Esca'. So. What trade are you of, sir? Pom. A tapster, a poor widow's tapster. Escal. Your mistress' name?

Pom. Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Pom. Nine, sir; Overdone by the last. Escal. Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part. I never come into any room in a taphouse but I am drawn m.

Escal. Well, no more of it, Master Froth ; farewell. [Exit Froth] Come you hither to me, Master Tapster; what's your name, Master Tapster?

Pom. Pompey. Escal. What else?

Pom. Bum. sir.

Escal. Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that, in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the Great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a tapster. Are you not? Come, tell me true; it shall be the better for you.

Pom. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey—by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? Is it a lawful trade?

Pom. If the law would allow it, sir. Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Pom. Does your worship mean to geld and splay all the youth of the city?

Escal. No, Pompey. Pom. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they Come, sir.

or I'll have mine action of batt'ry on will to't then. If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.

> Escal. There is pretty orders beginning. I can tell you: it is but heading and hang-

Pom. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads; if this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it, after threepence a bay. If you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so.

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey; and, in requital of your prophecy, hark you: I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever-no. not for dwelling where you do; if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Cæsar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt. So for this time, Pompey, fare you well. 238

Pom. I thank your worship for your good counsel; [Aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine. 241 Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his Escal. Come hither to me, Master Elbow: come hither, Master Constable. How long have you been in this place of constable? Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought, by the readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say seven years together?

Elb. And a half, sir.

Escal. Alas, it hath been great pains to you! They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't. Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters; as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you, bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir? Escal. To my house. Fare you well. [Exit Elbow] What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with Just. I humbly thank you. Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio;

But there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe. It is but needful: Escal. Mercy is not itself that oft looks so:

Pardon is st.ll the nurse of second woe. 270 220 But yet, poor Claudio! There is no remedy. Scene II. Another room in Angelo's house. Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause: he will come straight.

I'll tell him of you.

Pray you do. [Exit Servani]

I'll know His pleasure; may be he will relent. Alas. He hath but as offended in a dream! All sects, all ages, smack of this vice; and he To die for 't!

Why dost thou ask again?

Lest I might be too rash; Under your good correction, I have seen 10 When, after execution, judgment hath Repented o'er his doom.

Go to; let that be mine. Ang. Do you your office, or give up your place,

And you shall well be spar'd.

I crave your honour's pardon. What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?

She's very near her hour.

Dispose of her Ang. To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd

Desires access to you.

Hath he a sister? Ang. Prov. Av. my good lord: a very virtuous maid.

And to be shortly of a sisterhood.

If not already.

Well, let her be admitted. Ang. [Exit Servant.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd: Let her have needful but not lavish means: There shall be order for't.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.

Prov. [Going] Save your honour! 25 Stay a little while. [To Isabella] Y'are welcome; what's your will? Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me. Ang.

Well; what's your suit? Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of iustice:

For which I would not plead, but that I And you were Isabel! Should it then be must:

For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter? Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:

I do beseech you, let it be his fault, And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside] Heaven give thee moving graces!

Ang. Condemn the fault and not the actor of it!

Why, every fault 's condemn'd ere it be done;

Mine were the very cipher of a function, To fine the faults whose fine stands in record,

Isab. O just but severe law! Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? Hadst I had a brother, then. Heaven keep your honour!

Lucio. [To Isabella] Give't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him,

Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold: if you should need a pin.

You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.

To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Maiden, no remedy. Ang. Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,

And neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy.

Ang. I will not do't.

Isab. But can you, if you would? Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,

If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse

As mine is to him?

He's sentenc'd; 'tis too late. Lucio. [To Isabella] You are too cold. 56 Isab. Too late? Why, no; I, that do speak a word, May call it back again. Well, believe this: No ceremony that to great ones longs,

Not the king's crown nor the deputed sword.

The marshal's truncheon nor the judge's robe.

Become them with one half so good a grace As mercy does.

If he had been as you, and you as he, You would have slipp'd like him; but he, like you. Would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you be gone. Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, thus?

No; I would tell what 'twere to be a judge And what a prisoner.

Lucio. [To Isabella] Ay, touch him; there's the vein. 70 Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law.

And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas! alas! Why, all the souls that were were forfeit

And He that might the vantage best have took 74

Found out the remedy. How would you be If He, which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O, think on that:

And mercy then will breathe within your lips.

Like man new made.

Ang. Be you content, fair maid It is the law, not I condemn your brother. Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son, It should be thus with him. He must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him.

He's not prepar'd for death. Even for our kitchens

We kill the fowl of season; shall we serve heaven 85

With less respect than we do minister To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you.

Who is it that hath died for this offence? There's many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside] Ay, well said. Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept. 90

Those many had not dar'd to do that evil
If the first that did th' edict infringe

Had answer'd for his deed. Now 'tis awake, Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet,

Looks in a glass that shows what future evils—95

Either now or by remissness new conceiv'd, And so in progress to be hatch'd and born—

Are now to have no successive degrees, But here they live to end.

Isab. Yet show some pity.

Ang. I show it most of all when I show justice:

For then I pity those I do not know, Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall, And do him right that, answering one foul wrong,

Lives not to act another. Be satisfied; 104 Your brother dies to-morrow; be content. Isab. So you must be the first that gives He's coming; I perceive 't.

Lucio. [To Isabella] Thou'rt i' th' right, girl; more o' that.

Isab. That in the capta.n's but a choleric word

Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Lucio. [To Isabella] Art avis'd o' that?

More on't.

Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,

Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself

That skins the vice o' th' top. Go to your bosom,

Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth know

That's like my brother's fault. If it confess

A natural guiltiness such as is his,

Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue

Against my brother's life.

Ang. I will bethink me. Come again to-morrow.

Isab. Hark how I'll bribe you; good, my lord, turn back.

Ang. How, bribe me? 146
Isab, Ay, with such gifts that heaven shall share with you.

Here in the prison. Do me the common right

To let me see them, and to make me know The nature of their crimes, that I may minister

To them accordingly.

Prov. I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Enter JULIET.

Look, here comes one; a gentlewoman of mine,

Who, falling in the flaws of her own youth, Hath blister'd her report. She is with child;

Juliet. I do; and bear the shame most patiently. Duke. I'll teach you how you shall

Or hollowly put on. Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offenceful act

Was mutually committed.

Juliet. Mutually. Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter; but lest you do repent As that the sin hath brought you to this

'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now, who's there? Serv. One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Servant] O heavens !

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,

Making both it unable for itself And dispossessing all my other parts

Of necessary fitness? So play the foolish throngs with one that

How now, fair maid? 30 Isab. I am come to know your pleasure. Ang. That you might know it would much better please me

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

Even so! Heaven keep your Isab. honour!

Ang. Yet may he live awhile, and, it may be.

As long as you or I; yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Ang. Yea.

Isab. When? I beseech you; that in his reprieve,

Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted 40 That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! Fie, these filthy vices! It were as good

To pardon him that hath from nature stol'n A man already made, as to remit Their saucy sweetness that do coin heaven's image

In stamps that are forbid; 'the all as easy Falsely to take away a life true made As to put metal in restrained means

To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so? Then I shall pose you quickly.

Which had you rather—that the most just law

Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him.

Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness

As she that he hath stain'd?

Isab. Sir, believe this: I had rather give my body than my soul. Ang. I talk not of your soul; our com-

Might there not be a charity in sin To save this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do't, I'll take it as a peril to my soul

It is no sin at all, but charity. Ang. Pleas'd you to do't at peril of your soul.

And strip myself to death as to a bed That longing have been sick for, ere I'd yield

My body up to shame.

In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail:

For we are soft as our complexions are, And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well; 130 And from this testimony of your own sex,

Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger

Than faults may shake our frames, let me be bold.

I do arrest your words. Be that you are, That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;

If you be one, as you are well express'd By all external warrants, show it now By putting on the destin'd livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one; gentle, my lord,

To this supposed, or else to let him suffer- Let me intreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly conceive, I love you. Isab. My brother did love Juliet,

And you tell me that he shall die for't. Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Isab. I know your virtue hath a license in't,

Which seems a little fouler than it is, To pluck on others.

Believe me, on mine honour, Ang. My words express my purpose.

Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour That, had he twenty heads to tender down On twenty bloody blocks, he'd vield them

For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep, And that thou oft provok'st; yet grossly fear'st

Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself:

For thou exists on many a thousand grains That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not; For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get, That bear in them one and the self-same And what thou hast, forget'st. Thou art not certain;

For thy complexion shifts to strange effects, After the moon. If thou art rich, thou'rt poor; 25 For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,

Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey.

And Death unloads thee. Friend hast mou none:

For thine own bowels which do call thee

The mere effusion of thy proper loins. Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum, For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth nor age,

But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep, Dreaming on both; for all thy blessed youth Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms 35 Of palsied eld; and when thou art old and

Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,

To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this

That bears the name of life? Yet in this life Lie hid moe thousand deaths; yet death we fear.

That makes these odds all even. Claud. I humbly thank you. To sue to live, I find I seek to die;

And, seeking death, find life. Let it come

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Enter ISABELLA.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior, here's your sister.

Duke. Provost, a word with you. Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be conceal'd.

[Exeunt Duke and Provost. Claud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Tsab. Why. As all comforts are; most good, most good, indeed. Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven. Intends you for his swift ambassador. Where you shall be an everlasting leiger. 60

Therefore, your best appointment make with speed;

To-morrow you set on.

Is there no remedy? Claud. Isab. None, but such remedy as, to save à head.

To cleave a heart in twain.

But is there any? Claud. Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:

There is a devilish mercy in the judge, life.

But fetter you till death.

Perpetual durance? Claud. Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance, a restraint.

Though all the world's vastidity you had. o a determin'd scope.

Claud. But in what nature? Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to't.

Would bark your honour from that trunk vou bear.

And leave you naked.

Let me know the point. Claud. Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake, Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain, And six or seven winters more respect Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die? The sense of death is most in apprehension; And the poor beetle that we tread upon 80 In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this sname? Think you I can a resolution fetch From flow'ry tenderness? If I must die, I will encounter darkness as a bride And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's grave

Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die: Thou art too noble to conserve a life

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,

Whose settled visage and deliberate word Nips youth i' th' head, and follies doth

As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil: His filth within being cast, he would appear A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The precise Angelo! Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell 96 The damned'st body to invest and cover

In pr.cse guards! Dost thou think. Claudio,

If I would yield him my virginity

Thou mightst be freed?

Claud.

O heavens! it cannot be. Isab. Yes, he would give't thee, from this rank offence. So to offend him still. This night's the time

That I should do what I abhor to name. Or else thou diest to-morrow. Claud.

Thou shalt not do't. Isab. O, were it but my life! I'd throw it down for your deliverance

As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabe... Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him That thus can make him bite the law by th'

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing. Isab. And shamed life a hateful. Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;

To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot; This sensible warm motion to become A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit To bathe in fiery floods or to reside

In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice; To be imprison'd in the viewless winds, 125 And blown with restless violence round

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live. What sin you do to save a brother's life, Nature dispenses with the deed so far 136 That it becomes a virtue.

O you beast! O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch! Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice? Is't not a kind of incest to take life From thine own sister's shame? should I think?

I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death. No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

O fie, fie, fie! Isab. Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. 150 Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd; 'Tis best that thou diest quickly.

O, hear me, Isabella.

Re-enter DUKE.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister. but one word.

Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your lessure, I would by and by have so ne speech with you; the satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stav must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you awhile. [Walks apart

Duke. Son, I have overheard what hath pass'd between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an assay of her virtue to practise his judgment with the disposition of natures. She, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death. Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible; to-morrow you must die; go to your knees and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. am so out of love with life that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there. Farewell. [Exit Claudio] Provost, a word with you.

Re-enter PROVOST.

Pro. What's your will, father? Duke. That, now you are come, you will be gone. Leave me a while with the maid; my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time. Exit Provost. Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good; the goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your avail?

complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath ex-What amples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this > Isab. I am now going to resolve him: I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. But. O. how much is the good Duke deceiv'd in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

> Duke. That shall not be much amiss: vet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid vour accusation: he made trial of you only. Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most uprighteously do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent Duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

> Isab. Let me hear you speak farther: I have spirit to do anything that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

> Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick, the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

> Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. She should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract and limit of the solemnity her brother Frederick was wreck'd at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, marriage-dowry; with both, her combinate husband, this well-seeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour; in few, bestow'd her on her own lamentation, which she vet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life that it will let this man live! But how out of this can she Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This forenamed maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience: agree with his demands to the point: only refer yourself to this advantage: first. that your stay with him may not be long: that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in courseand now follows all: we shall advise this wronged maid to stead up your appointment, go in your place. If the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense; and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will I frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it? 249

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo; if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke's; there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly. 257

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt severally.

Scene II. The street before the prison.

Enter, on one side, DUKE disguised as before; on the other, ELBOW, and Officers with POMPEY.

Elb. Nav. if there be no remedy for it. but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O heavens! what stuff is here? 4 Pom. 'Twas never merry world since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worser allow'd by order of law a furr'd gown to keep him warm; and furr'd with fox on lamb-skins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir. Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father.

What offence hath this man made you, sir ? Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir. for we have found upon him, sir, a strange picklock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah, a bawd, a wicked bawd!

The evil that thou causest to be done, That is thy means to live. Do thou but think

What 'tis to cram a maw or clothe a back From such a filthy vice; say to thyself 'From their abominable and beastly touches I drink, I eat, array myself, and live'. Canst thou believe thy living is a life,

So stinkingly depending? Go mend, gomend.

Pom. Indeed, it does stink in some sort. sir; but yet, sir, I would prove-

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin, Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison. officer ;

Correction and instruction must both work Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whoremaster; if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be.

From our faults, as his faults from seeming, free.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist-a cord, sir.

Enter Lucio.

Pom. I spy comfort; I cry bail. Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Cæsar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutch'd? What reply, ha? What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd i' th' last rain, ha? What say'st thou, trot? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? or how? The trick of it ?

Duke. Still thus, and thus; still worse! Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procures she still, ha?

Pom. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it; it must be so; ever your fresh whore and your powder'd bawd—an unshunn'd consequence; it must be so. Art going to prison Pompey?

Pont. Yes, faith, sir.

115

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss. Pompev. Farewell: go, say I sent thee thither. For debt. Pompey-or how?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd. Lucio. Well, then, imprison him. If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right. Bawd is he doubtless, and of antiquity, too; bawd-born. Farewell, good Commend me to the prison, Pompey. Pompey. You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Pom. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage. If you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey. Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey, ha?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Pom. You will not bail me then, sir? .75 Lucio. Then, Pompey, nor now. What news abroad, friar? what news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go to kennel, Pompey, go.

[Exeunt Elbow, Pompey and Officers. What news, friar, of the Duke?

Duke. I know none. Can you tell me of any?

Lucio, Some say he is with the Emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome; but where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where; but whereso-ever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him. Something too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied; but it .s impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say this Angelo was not made by man and woman after this downright way of creation. Is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made, then? 99 Lucio. Some report a sea-maid spawn'd him; some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes. But it is certain that when he may live to report you. makes water his urine is congeal'd ice; that I know to be true. And he is a motion generative; that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a codpiece to take away the life of a man! Would the Duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent Duke much detected for women; he was not inclin'd that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceiv'd.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.
Lucio. Who—not the Duke? Yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was to put a ducat in her clack-dish. The Duke had crotchets in him. He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Duke. You do him wrong, surely.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the Duke; and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I prithee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No, pardon: 'tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand: the greater file of the subject held the Duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise? Why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking; the very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings-forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much dark'ned in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him Duke. Love talks with better knowledge. and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come. sir, I know what I know. D. ke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the Duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it; I am bound to call upon you; and I pray you your Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the Duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the Duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm: you'll forswear this again. 156 I'll be hang'd first. Thou art Lucio.

deceiv'd in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to-morrow or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir? Lucio. Why? For filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would the Duke we talk of were return'd again. This ungenitur'd agent will unpeople the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves because they are lecherous. The Duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light. Would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrussing. Farewell, good friar; I prithee pray for me. The Duke. I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's not past it yet; and, I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar though she smelt brown bread and garlic. Say that I said so. Farewell. Exit.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality

Can censure scape; back-wounding calumny

The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong 175

Can tie the gall up in the slanderous

tongue?
But who comes here?

Enter Escalus, Provost, and Officers with Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Go, away with her to prison.

Mrs. Ov. Good my lord, be good to me;
your honour is accounted a mercifil man;
good my lord.

150

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind! This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour. 185

Mrs. Ov. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keepdown was with child by him in the Duke's time; he promis'd her marriage. His child is a year and a quarter old come Philip and Jacob; I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me. 191

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much license. Let him be call'd before us. Away with her to prison. Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Officers with Mistress Overdone] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd: Claudio must die to-morrow. Let him be furnish'd with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advis'd him for th' entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father. Duke. Bliss and goodness on you! Escal. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now

To use it for my time. I am a brother 205 Of gracious order, late come from the See In special business from his Holiness.

Escal. What news abroad i' th' world? Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness that the dissolution of it must cure it. Novelty is only in request; and, as it is, as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough on make fellowships accurst. Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the Duke?

Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself. 219

Duke. What pleasure was he given to? Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry than merry at anything which profess'd to make him rejoice; a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepar'd. I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice. Yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolv'd to die.

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty; but my brother justice have I found so severe that he hath forc'd me to tell him he is indeed Justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenc'd himself.

Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you!

Execute Be with your.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. The moated grange at Saint Luke's.

Enter MARIANA; and Boy singing.

Song

Take, O, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn;
But my kisses bring again, bring again;
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain, seal'd in

Enter DUKE, disguised as before.

Mari. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away;

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.

[Exit Boy.

I cry you mercy, sir, and well could wish You had not found me here so musical. 11 Let me excuse me, and believe me so, My mirth it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duke: 'Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm

To make bad good and good provoke to harm.

I pray you tell me hath anybody inquir'd for me here to-day. Much upon this time have I promis'd here to meet.

Mari. You have not been inquired after; I have sat here all day.

Enter ISABELLA.

Duke. I do constantly believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little. May be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Mari. I am always bound to you. [Exit. Duke. Very well met, and well come. 24 What is the news from this good deputy? Isab. He hath a garden circummur'd with brick,

Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd;

And to that vineyard is a planched gate
That makes his opening with this bigger
key;

This other doth command a little door 30 Which from the vineyard to the garden leads.

There have I made my promise Upon the heavy middle of the night To call upon him.

Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isab. I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't;
With whispering and most guilty diligence.

With whispering and most guilty diligence, In action all of precept, he did show me The way twice o'er.

Duke. Are there no other tokens Between you 'greed concerning her observance? 40

Isab. No, none, but only a repair i' th' dark:

And that I have possess'd him my most stay Can be but brief; for I have made him

I have a servant comes with me along, 44 That stays upon me; whose persuasion is I come about my brother.

Duke. 'Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this. What ho, within! come forth.

Re-enter MARIANA.

I pray you be acquainted with this maid; She comes to do you good.

Isab. I do desire the like. Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?

Mari. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.

Duke. Take, then, this your companion by the hand,

Who hath a story ready for your ear. 54 I shall attend your leisure; but make haste; The vaporous night approaches.

Marî. Will't please you walk aside?
[Exeunt Mariana and Isabella.
Duke. O place and greatness! Millions of false eyes

Are stuck upon thee. Volumes of report
Run with these false, and most contrarious

Upon thy doings. Thousand escapes of wit Make thee the father of their idle dream, And rack thee in their fancies.

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome, how agreed?

Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father.

If you advise it.

Duke. It is not my consent, 65
But my entreaty too.

Isab. Little have you to say, When you depart from him, but, soft and low,

'Remember now my brother'.

Mari. Fear me not. Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.

He is your husband on a pre-contract. To bring you thus together 'tis no sin, Sith that the justice of your title to him Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithe's to sow.

SCENE II. The prison.

Enter PROVOST and POMPEY.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can vou cut off a man's head? Pom. If the man be a bachelor, sir. I can:

but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches and vield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper; if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping, for you have been a notorious bawd.

Pom. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Where's Prov. What ho, Abhorson! Abhorson there?

Enter ABHORSON.

Abhor. Do vou call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fie upon him! He will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale. [Exit. Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favourfor surely, sir, a good favour you have but that you have a hanging look-do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery? Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Pom. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine. 36 Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Pom. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Pom. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow. Pom. I do desire to learn, sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare; for truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn. 54 Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio. Exeunt Abhorson and Pompey.

Th' one has my pity; not a jot the other, Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter CLAUDIO.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death:

Tis now dead midnight, and by eight tomorrow

Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine? Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour

When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones. He will not wake.

Who can do good on him? Prov. prepare yourself. [Knocking Well, go, within But hark, what noise? Heaven give your spirits comfort!

[Exit Claudio. [Knocking continues] By and by. I hope it is some pardon or reprieve For the most gentle Claudio.

Enter Duke, disguised as before.

Welcome, father.

Duke. The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night

Envelop you, good Provost! Who call'd here of late?

Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel? Prov. No.

Duke. They will then, ere't be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio? Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy. Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd Even with the stroke and line of his great justice;

He doth with holy abstinence subdue That in himself which he spurs on his pow'r To qualify in others. Were he meal'd with that nous:

But this being so, he's just. [Knocking you will answer it at your peril.' within Now are they come.

This is a gentle provost; seldom when The steeled gaoler is the friend of men.

[Knocking within. How now, what noise! That spirit's possess'd with haste That wounds th' unsisting postern with

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. There he must stay until the officer Arise to let him in; he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio vet

But he must die to-morrow?

these strokes.

Prov. None, sir, none. Duke. As near the dawning, Provost, as

You shall hear more ere morning.

Happily You something know; yet I believe there

No countermand; no such example have

Besides, upon the very siege of justice, Lord Angelo hath to the public ear Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

This is his lordship's man. Duke. And here comes Claudio's pardon. Mess. My lord hath sent you this note: and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow; for as I take it, it is almost day.

Prov. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger. Duke. [Aside] This is his pardon, purchas'd by such sin

For which the pardoner himself is in; Hence hath offence his quick celerity, When it is borne in high authority. When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended

That for the fault's love is th' offender friended.

Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you: Lord Angelo, belike thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting-on; methinks strangely, for he hath not us'd it before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads] ' Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock, and, in the afternoon, Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed, with a thought

Which he corrects, then were he tyran- that more depends on it than we must vet 80 deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as [Exit Provost. What say you to this, sir?

F 201 Duke. What is that Barnardine who is to be executed in th' afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nurs'd up and bred. One that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it that the absent Duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty or executed him? I have heard it was-ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reprieves for him; and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtful proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? How seems he to be touch'd? Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless, of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality and desperately mortal. 138

Duke. He wants advice

Prov. He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not; drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awak'd him, as if to carry him to execution, and show'd him a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, Provost, honesty and constancy. If I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but in the boldness of my cunning I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenc'd him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov, Pray, sir, in what? Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! How may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest. 160

Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O, death's a great disguiser; and vou may add to it. Shave the head and tie rapier and dagger man, and young Dropheir the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bar'd before his death. You know the course is common. If anything fall to you upon this more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father: it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the Duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence if the Duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Prov. But what likelihood is in that? Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integrity, nor persuasion, can with ease attempt you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the Duke. You know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you. Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the Duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure, where you shall find within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receives letters of strange tenour, perchance of the Duke's death. perchance entering into some monastery: but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, th' unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head. I will give him a present shrift, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amaz'd, but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away: it is almost clear dawn. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The prison.

Enter POMPEY.

Pom. I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession; one would think it were Mistress Overdone's own hearing how hastily you are to depart, I house, for here be many of her old am come to advise you, comfort you, and First, here's young Master customers. Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine score and seventeen pounds, of which he made five marks ready money. Marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Caper, at the suit of Master Threepile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-colour'd satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young Master Deepvow, and Master Copperspur, and Master Starvelackey, the that kill'd lusty Pudding, and Master Forthlight the tilter, and brave Master Sh. otie the great traveller, and wild Halfcan that stabb'd Pots, and, I think, forty more-all great doers in our trade, and are now ' for the Lord's sake '.

Enter ABHORSON

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither. Pom. Master Barnardine! You must rise and be hang'd, Master Barnardine!

Abhor. What ho, Barnardine!

Barnar. [Within] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are vou?

Pom. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put Barnar. [Within] Away, you rogue, away;

I am sleepy

Abhor. Tell him he must awake, and that quickly too.

Pom. Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out. Pom. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Enter BARNARDINE.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah? Pom. Very ready, sir.

Barnar. How now, Abhorson, what's the news with you?

Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for't.

Pom. O, the better, sir! For he that drinks all night and is hanged betimes in the morning may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter DUKE, disguised as before.

Abhor. Look you, sir, here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, think you?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and pray with you.

Barnar. Friar, not I; I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets. I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore I beseech you

Look forward on the journey you shall go. Barnar. I swear I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion. ٠ 56 Duke. But hear you—

Barnar. Not a word; if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward: for That want no ear but yours. [Exit. thence will not I to-day. Duke. Unfit to live or die. O gravel heart!

After him, fellows; bring him to the block. [Exeunt Abhorson and Pompey.

Enter PROVOST.

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the When it is least expected. prisoner?

Duke. A creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death:

And to transport him in the mind he is 64 Were damnable.

Prov. Here in the prison, father, There died this morning of a cruel fever One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate, A man of Claudio's years; his beard and head

Just of his colour. What if we do omit 69 This reprobate till he were well inclin'd, And satisfy the deputy with the visage

Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio? Duke. O, 'tis an accident that reaven provides!

Dispatch it presently; the hour draws on Prefix'd by Angelo. See this be done, And sent according to command; whiles I Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently.

But Barnaidine must die this afternoon; And how shall we continue Claudio, To save me from the danger that might come

If he were known alive?

Let this be done: Duke. Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio. Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting To the under generation, you shall find 85

Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost. Now will I write letters to Angelo-

The Provost, he shall bear them-whose contents

Shall witness to him I am near at home, And that, by great injunctions, I am bound To enter publicly. Him I'll desire To meet me at the consecrated fount, A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanc'd form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause myself.

return:

For I would commune with you of such Before the Duke; and to the head of things

Prov. I'll make all speed.

Isab. [Within] Peace, ho, be here!
Duke. The tongue of Isabel. She's come to know

If yet her brother's pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good, 105 To make her heavenly comforts of despair

Enter ISABELLA.

Isab. Ho, by your leave! Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man.

Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the world.

His head is off and sent to Angelo.

Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other. Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.

Isab. O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes!

Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel!

Injurious world! Most damned Angelo! Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;

Forbear it, therefore; give your cause to heaven.

Mark what I say, which you shall find By every syllable a faithful verity.

The Duke comes home to-morrow. Nav. dry your eyes.

One of our covent, and his confessor. Gives me this instance. Already he hath carried

Notice to Escalus and Angelo,

Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,

There to give up their pow'r. If you can, pace your wisdom

In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your bosom on this wretch,

Grace of the Duke, revenges to your heart, And general honour. Isab.

I am directed by you. Duke. This letter, then, to Friar Peter give ; 'Tis that he sent me of the Duke's return. Say, by this token, I desire his company and yours Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring vou

Angelo

Accuse him home and home. For my poor an hour before his ent'ring that, if any self.

I am combined by a sacred yow.

And shall be absent. Wend you with this letter.

Command these fretting waters from your eves

With a light heart; trust not my holy order.

If I pervert your course. Who's here? 145 Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even. Friar, where's the Give notice to such men of sort and suit Provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart to see thine eyes so red. Thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't. But they say the Duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I lov'd thy brother. If the old fantastical Duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the Duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the Duke so well as I do; he's a better woodman than thou tak'st him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day.

Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee; I can tell thee pretty tales of the Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true. none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end. If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. Angelo's hor se.

Enter ANGELO and ESCALUS.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness; pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and redeliver our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we proclaim it in 140 crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a dispatch of complaints; and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaim'd:

Betimes i' th' morn I'll call you at your house:

As are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir: fare you well.

Ang. Good night. [Exit Escalus. This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant

And dull to all proceedings. A deflow'red maid!

And by an eminent body that enforc'd 20 The law against it! But that her tender shame

Will not proclaim against her maiden loss. How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her no :

For my authority bears a so credent bulk 24 That no particular scandal once can touch But it confounds the breather. He should have hv'd.

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous

Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge.

By so receiving a dishonour'd life

With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had liv'd!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.

Scene V. Fields without the town.

Enter DUKE in his own habit, and FRIAR PETER.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me. [Giving letters. The Provost knows our purpose and our plot.

The matter being afoot, keep your instruction

And hold you ever to our special drift; Though sometimes you do blench from this to that

As cause doth minister. Go. call at Flavius' house,

And tell him where I stay; give the like notice

To Valentinus, Rowland, and to Crassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate;

But send me Flavius first. F. Peter. It shall be speeded well.

[Exit Friar.

Enter VARRIUS.

Duke. i thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste.

Come, we will walk. There's other of our friends

Will greet us here anon. My gentle Varrius! [Exeunt.

Scene VI. A street near the city gate. Enter ISABELLA and MARIANA.

Isab. To speak so indirectly I am loath; I would say the truth; but to accuse him so, That is your part. Yet I am advis'd to do it:

He says, to veil full purpose.

Be rul'd by him. Mari. Isab. Besides, he tells me that, if perad-

He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic

That's bitter to sweet end. Mari. I would friar Peter-

Enter FRIAR PETER.

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come. F. Peter. Come. I have found you out a stand most fit.

Where you may have such vantage on the Duke

He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded;

The generous and gravest citizens

Have hent the gates, and very near upon The Duke is ent'ring; therefore, hence, [Exeunt.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. The city gate.

Enter at several doors DUKE, VARRIUS, Lords: ANGELO, Escalus. Lucio. Provost, Officers, and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met! Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. Happy return be to your royal Escal. Grace!

Duke, Many and hearty thankings to you

We have made inquiry of you, and we hear Such goodness of your justice that our soul Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks, Forerunning more requital.

You make my bonds still greater. Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it

To lock it in the wards of covert bosom. 10 When it deserves, with characters of brass. But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground, A forted residence 'gainst the tooth of time May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as And razure of oblivion. Give me your hand, 80z

And let the subject see, to make them know That outward courtesies would fain proclaim Favours that keep within. Come, Escalus, You must walk by us on our other hand: And good supporters are you.

Enter FRIAR PETER and ISABELLA.

F. Peter. Now is your time; speak loud.

and kneel before him. Isab. Justice, O royal Duke! Vail your regard

Upon a wrong'd—1 would fain have said a maid!

O worthy Prince, dishonour not your eye By throwing it on any other object

Till you have heard me in my true complaint,

And given me justice, justice, justice, justice. In what?

Duke. Relate your wrongs. By whom? Be brief. Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice;

Reveal yourself to him. Isab. O worthy Duke. You bid me seek redemption of the devil! Hear me yourself: for that which I must speak Must either punish me, not being believ'd, Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O, hear me, here! Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm;

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother.

Cut off by course of justice-Isab.

By course of justice! Ang. And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak.

That Angelo's forsworn, is it not strange? That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange? That Angelo is an adulterous thief, An hypocrite, a virgin-violator,

Is it not strange and strange?

Nay, it is ten times strange. Duke. Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo

Than this is all as true as it is strange; 44 Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth To th' end of reck'ning.

Duke. Away with her. Poor soul, She speaks this in th' infirmity of sense.

Isab. O Prince! I conjure thee, as thou believ'st

There is another comfort than this world, That thou neglect me not with that opinion That I am touch'd with madness. Make not impossible SI That which but seems unlike: 'tis not impossible absolute.

As Angelo: even so may Angelo. In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms, Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal Prince, If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more.

Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty, If she be mad, as I believe no other. Her madness hath the oddest frame of Such a dependency of thing on thing.

As e'er I heard in madness.

O gracious Duke, Isab. Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason

For inequality; but let your reason serve To make the truth appear where it seems

And hide the false seems true.

Many that are not mad Have, sure, more lack of reason.

would you say? Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio, . Condemn'd upon the act of tornication 70 To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo.

I, in probation of a sisterhood, Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio

As then the messenger-

That's I, an't like your Grace. I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo

For her poor brother's pardon.

That's he. indeed. Duke. You were not bid to speak. No, my good lord;

Lucio. Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then; Pray you take note of it; and when you have

A business for yourself, pray heaven you then

Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to't.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.

Lucio. Right. Duke. It may be right; but you are i' the

To speak before your time. Proceed.

I went To this pernicious caitiff deputy.

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Pardon it; The phrase is to the matter. Duke. Mended again.

proceed. Isab. In brief-to set the needless process

How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and And to set on this wretched woman here kneel'd.

How he refell'd me, and how I replied,

55 For this was of much length—the vile conclusion

I now begin with grief and shame to utter: He would not, but by gift of my chaste body

To his concupiscible intemperate lust.

Release my brother; and, after much debatement.

My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour, And I did yield to him. But the next morn betimes,

His purpose suifeiting, he sends a warrant For my poor brother's head.

Duke.

This is most likely! Isab. O that it were as like as it is true! Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st. Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour In hateful practice. First, his integrity 107 Stands without blemish; next, it imports no reason

That with such vehemency he should pursue

Faults proper to himself. If he had so offended, IIO

He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself.

And not have cut him off. Some one hath set vou on;

Confess the truth, and say by whose advice Thou cam'st here to complain.

And is this all? Then, O you blessed ministers above. 115 Keep me in patience; and, with ripened time.

Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up In countenance! Heaven shield your Grace from woe.

As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go! Duke. I know you'd fain be gone. An officer! To prison with her! Shall we thus permit

A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.

Who knew of your intent and coming hither?

Isab. One that I would were here, friar Lodowick. 125

Duke. A ghostly father, belike. Who knows that Lodowick?

Lucio. My lord. I know him: 'tis a meddling friar.

I do not like the man; had he been lay. my lord,

For certain words he spake against your Grace

The matter- In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly. Duke. Words against me? This 's a good friar, belike!

Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.

that friar.

I saw them at the prison; a saucy friar, 136

A very scurvy fellow.

F. Peter. Blessed be your royal Grace! I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard Your royal ear abus'd. First, hath this woman

Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute; Who is as free from touch or soil with her As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less. Know you that friar Lodowick that she speaks of?

F. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holv

Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler, 145 As he's reported by this gentleman; And, on my trust, a man that never yet Did, as he vouches, misreport your Grace. Lucio. My lord, most villainously; believe it.

F. Peter. Well, he in time may come to clear himself : But at this instant he is sick, my lord, Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request-Being come to knowledge that there was complaint

Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo-came I hither know

Is true and false; and what he, with his

And all probation, will make up full clear, Whensoever he's convented. First, for this woman-

To justify this worthy nobleman,

So vulgarly and personally accus'd- 160 Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes, Till she herself confess it.

Good friar, let's hear it. Duke. [Exit Isabella guarded.

Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo? O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools! Give us some seats. Come, cousin Angelo; In this I'll be impartial; be you judge 166 Of your own cause.

Enter Mariana veiled.

Is this the witness friar? First let her show her face, and after speak. Mari. Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face Until my husband bid me. Duke. What, are you married? Mari. No, my lord. Duke. Are you a maid? Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then? Mari. Neither, my lord. Duke. Why, you are nothing then; neither maid, widow, nor wife.

Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk; for Lucio. But vesternight, my lord, she and many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow. I would he had some cause

To prattle for himself.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Mari. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married.

And I confess, besides, I am no maid. 185 I have known my husband: yet my husband

Knows not that ever he knew me.

Lucio. He was drunk, then, my lord; it can be no better.

Duke. For the beneat or suence, would thou wert so too!

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo. Marı. Now I come to't, my lord:

She that accuses him of fornication.

In self-same manner doth accuse my husband: And charges him, my lord, with such a time

When I'll depose I had him in mine arms. With all th' effect of love.

Ang. Charges she moe than me? Mari. Not that I know.

Duke. No? You say your husband. Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,

To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth Who thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body,

But knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's. Ang. This is a strange abuse. Let's see thy face.

Mari. My husband bids me; now I will [Unveiling. unmask. This is that face, thou cruel Augelo, 203

Which once thou swor'st was worth the looking on;

This is the hand which, with a vow'd contract.

Was fast belock'd in thine: this is the body That took away the match from Isabel, 209 And did supply thee at thy garden-house In her imagin'd person.

Know you this woman? Duke. Lucio. Carnally, she says.

Duke. Sirrah, no more.

Lucio. Enough, my lord.

Ang. My lord, I must confess I know this woman;

And five years since there was some speech of marriage 170 Betwixt myself and her; which was broke off. Partly for that her promised proportions Came short of composition; but in chief

For that her reputation was disvalued 219 175 In levity. Since which time of five years I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her.

Upon my faith and honour.

Mari. Noble Prince. As there comes light from heaven and honest in nothing but in his clothes; and words from breath, there is sense in truth and truth in virtue.

I am affianc'd this man's wife as strongly As words could make up vows. And, my good lord,

But Tuesday night last gone, in's gardenhouse,

He knew me as a wife. As this is true, Let me in safety raise me from my knees, Or else for ever be confixed here. A marble monument!

Ang. I did but smile till now. Now, good my lord, give me the scope of iustice:

My patience here is touch'd. I do perceive These poor informal women are no more But instruments of some more mightier member

That sets them on. Let me have way, my lord.

To find this practice out.

Ay, with my heart: Duke. And punish them to your height of pleas-

Thou foolish friar, and thou permicious woman.

Compact with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths,

Though they would swear down each particular saint,

Were testimonies against his worth and credit.

That's seal'd in approbation? You, Lord Escalus.

Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind

To find out this abuse, whence 'tis deriv'd. Be sometime honour'd for his burning There is another friar that set them on: Let him be sent for.

F. Peter. Would he were here, my lord! For he indeed

Hath set the women on to this complaint. Your provost knows the place where he abides.

And he may fetch him.

Go, do it instantly. Duke. [Exit Provost.

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin.

Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth, Do with your injuries as seems you best In any chastisement. I for a while will leave you; But stir not you till you have well determin'd

Upon these slanderers.

My lord, we'll do it throughly. Escal. [Exit Duke. Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Lucio. 'Cuculius non facit monachum': And in the witness of his proper ear, one that hath spoke most villamous speeches of the Duke.

Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him. We shall find this friar a notable fellow. 206

Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word. Escal. Call that same Isabel here once again; I would speak with her. [Exit an Attendant Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.

Escal. Say you?

Lucio. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess; perchance, publicly, she'll be asham'd. 276

Re-enter Officers with ISABELLA: and PROVOST with the DUKE in his friar's habit.

Escal. I will go darkly to work with her. Lucio. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.

Escal. Come on, mistress; here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of, here with the Provost.

Escal. In very good time. Speak not you to him till we call upon you.

Lucio. Mum. 285 Escal. Come, sir; did you set these women on to slander Lord Angelo? They have confess'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.
Escal. How! Know you where you are? Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the devil throne!

Where is the Duke? 'Tis he should hear me speak.

Escal. The Duke's in us; and we will hear you speak;

Look you speak justly.

Duke. Boldly, at least. But, O, poor souls,

Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox. Good night to your redress! Is the Duke gone?

Then is your cause gone too. The Duke's uniust

Thus to retort your manifest appeal, And put your trial in the villain's mouth

Which here you come to accuse. Lucio. This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of. Escal. Why, thou unreverend and unhallowed friar,

Is't not enough thou hast suborn'd these women

To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth. 305 To call him villain: and then to glance from him

To th' Duke himself, to tax him with injustice?

Take him hence; to th' rack with him! We'll touze you

Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose.

What, 'unjust'!

Duke. Be not so hot; the Duke Dare no more stretch this finger of mine hanging. than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not, Nor here provincial. My business in this

Made me a looker-on here in Vienna. Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble

Till it o'errun the stew: laws for all faults, But faults so countenanc'd that the strong statutes

Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop, As much in mock as mark.

Escal. Slander to th' state! Away with him to prison!

Ang. What can you vouch against him,

Signior Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell us of? Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither, good-man bald-pate. Do you know me? Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice. I met you at the prison, in the absence of the Duke.

Lucio. O did you so? And do you remember what you said of the Duke?

Duke. Most notedly, sir. Lucio. Do vou so, sir? And was the Duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me ere you make that my report: you. indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse. 336

Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Dru not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Duke. I protest I love the Duke as I love myself.

Ang. Hark how the villain would close now, after his treas mable abuses!

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withal. Away with him to prison! Where is the Provost? Away with him to prison! Lay bolts enough upon him; let him speak no more. Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion! 346

[The Provost lays hands on the Duke. Duke. Stay, sir; stay awhile.

Ang. What, resists he? Help him, Lucio.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; feh, sir! Why, you bald-pated lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd Labouring to save his life, and would not an hour! Will't not off?

[Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke.

Duke. Thou art the first knave that e'er mad'st a duke. First. Provost. let me bail these gentle three. [To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir, for the friar and you Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him.

Lucio. This may prove worse than Duke. [To Escalus] What you have spoke

I pardon; sit you down. We'll borrow place of him. [To Angelo] Sir, by your leave. Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Rely upon it till my tale be heard,

And hold no longer out. O my dread lord. Ang.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. 365 To think I can be undiscernible.

When I perceive your Grace, like pow'r divine.

Hath look'd upon my passes. Then, good Prince. No longer session hold upon my shame,

But let my trial be mine own confession; Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,

Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana. Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?

Ang. I was, my lord.

Duke. Go, take her hence and marry her instantly.

Do you the office, friar; which consummate,

Return him here again. Go with him, Provost.

> [Exeunt Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter, and Provost.

Escal. My lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonour

Than at the strangeness of it.

Duke. Come hither, Isabel. Your friar is now your prince. As I was then Advertising and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit. I am still Attorney'd at your service.

Isab. O, give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd ar unknown sovereignty.

Duke. You are pardon'd Isabel. And now, dear maid, be you as free to us. Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;

And you may marvel why I obscur'd myself.

rather

Make rash remonstrance of my hidden Lend me your knees, and all my life to pow'r

Than let him so be lost. O most kind maid. It was the swift celerity of his death. Which I did think with slower foot came on. That brain'd my purpose. But peace be with him! That life is better life, past fearing death, Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, So happy is your brother.

I do, my lord. Isab.

Re-enter ANGELO, MARIANA, FRIAR PETER, and PROVOST.

Duke. For this new-married man approaching here.

Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd Your well-defended honour, you must pardon

For Mariana's sake; but as he adjudg'd your brother-

Being criminal in double violation

Of sacred chastity and of promise-breach, Thereon dependent, for your brother's life-

The very mercy of the law cries out Most audible, even from his proper tongue. An Angelo for Claudio, death for death! Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure ;

Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure.

Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested. Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee vantage.

We do condemn thee to the very block Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste.

Away with him!

O my most gracious lord, Marı. I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband.

Consenting to the safeguaid of your honour, I thought your marriage fit; else imputafron.

For that he knew you, might reproach your lıfe,

And choke your good to come. For his possessions,

Although by confiscation they are ours, We do instate and widow you withal,

To buy you a better husband.

Mari. O my dear lord, I crave no other, nor no better man. Duke. Never crave him; we are definitive. Marı. Gentle, my liege-[Kneeling. Duke. Away with him to death! [To Lucio] Now, sir, to you.

Mari. O my good lord! Sweet Isabel, take my part;

come

I'll lend you all my life to do you service. Duke. Against all sense you do importune

Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact. Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break.

And take her hence in horror.

Isabel.

Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me; 435 Hold up your hands, say nothing; I'll speak ail.

For being a little bad; so may my husband. O Isabel, will you not lend a knee? Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

[Kneeling] Most bounteous sir. Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,

As if my brother liv'd. I partly think A due sincerity govern'd his deeds

Till he 'id look on me; since it is so, 405 Let h. not die. 'in brother had but ustice.

His act did not o'ertake his bad intent. And must be buried but as an intent 450 That perish'd by the way. Thoughts are no subjects:

Intents but merely thoughts.

Marı. Merely, my lord. Duke. Your suit's unprofitable: stand up, I say.

I have bethought me of another fault. 154 Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so. Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed? Prov. No, my good lord; it was by private message.

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office;

Give up your keys. Pardon me, noble lord: Prov. I thought it was a fault, but knew it not: Yet did repent me, after more advice;

For testimony whereof, one in the prison, That should by private order else have died, I have reserv'd alive.

Prov. His name is Barnardine. Duke. I would thou hadst done so by Claudio.

You do but lose your labour. Go fetch him hither; let me look upon him. [Exit Provost. Escal. I am sorry one so learned and so

CLAUDIO (muffled), and JULIET. Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

This, my lord. Prov. Duke. There was a friar told me of this

He is my brother too. But fitter time for that.

By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe; Methinks I see a quick'ning in his eye. Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well. Look that you love your wife; her worth worth yours.

I find an apt remission in myself; And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon. [To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a coward,

One all of luxury, an ass, a madman!

That you extol me thus?

Lucio. Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you I might be whipt.

Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt mairy her.

And pray thee take this mercy to provide Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal For better times to come. Friar, advise Remit thy other torfeits. Take him to prison:

Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence, I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave. In Syracusa was I born, and wed Unto a woman, happy but for me,

And by me, had not our hap been bad. With her I liv'd in joy; our wealth increas'd

By prosperous voyages I often made To Epidamnum; till my factor's death, And the great care of goods at random left, Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse;

From whom my absence was not six months old,

Before herself, almost at fainting under The pleasing punishment that women bear, Had made provision for her following me, And soon and safe arrived where I was. There had she not been long but she became A joyful mother of two goodly sons; And, which was strange, the one so like the other

As could not be distinguish'd but by names. That very hour, and in the self-same inn, A mean woman was delivered

Of such a burden, male twins, both alike. Those, for their parents were exceeding Unwilling I agreed. Alas! too soon We came aboard.

A league from Epidamnum had we sail'd Before the always-wind-obeying deep Gave any tragic instance of our harm: 65 But longer did we not retain much hope, For what obscured light the heavens did grant

Did but convey unto our fearful minds A doubtful warrant of immediate death; Which though myself would gladly have embrac'd,

Yet the incessant weepings of my wife, Weeping before for what she saw must

And piteous plainings of the pretty babes, That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear.

Forc'd me to seek delays for them and me. And this it was, for other means was none: The sailors sought for safety by our boat, And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us; My wife, more careful for the latter-born. Had fast'ned him unto a small spare mast, Such as sea-faring men provide for storms: To him one of the other twins was bound, Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I. Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd, Fast'ned ourselves at either end the mast, And, floating straight, obedient to the stream.

For we may pity, though not pardon thee. Æge. O, had the gods done so, I had not now Worthily term'd them merciless to us! 100 For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues.

We were encount'red by a mighty rock, Which being violently boine uron, Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst; So that, in this unjust divorce of us, Fortune had left to both of us alike What to delight in, what to sorrow for. Her part, poor soul, seeming as burdened With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe, Was carried with more speed before the wind:

SCENE II. The mart.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, Dromio of Syracuse, and First Meichant.

First Mer. Therefore, give out you are of Epidamnum,

Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate. This very day a Syracusian merchant Is apprehended for arrival here; And, not being able to buy out his life, According to the statute of the town, Dies ere the weary sun set in the west. There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host.

And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee. Within this hour it will be dinner time; Till that, I'll view the manners of the town, Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings, And then return and sleep within mine inn; For with long travel I am stiff and weary. Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word,

And go indeed, having so good a mean.
[Exit Dromio S.

Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir, that very off, When I am dull with care and melancholy, Lightens my humour with his merry jests. What, will you walk with me about the town,

And then go to my inn and dine with me?

First Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,

Of whom I hope to make much benefit; 25 I crave your pardon. Soon at five o'clock, Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart.

And afterward consort you till bed time.
My present business calls me from you now.
Ant. S. Farewell till then. I will go lose myself,
30

And wander up and down to view the city.

First Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content. [Exit First Merchant.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content

Commends me to the thing I cannot get. I to the world am like a drop of water 35 That in the ocean seeks another drop, Who, falling there to find his fellow forth, Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself. So I, to find a mother and a brother, In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself. 40

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanac of my true date. What now? How chance thou art return'd so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late.

The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit; The clock hath strucken twelve upon the

My mistress made it one upon my cheek; She is so hot because the meat is cold,

The meat is cold because you come not home,

You come not home because you have no stomach,

You have no stomach, having broke your fast;

But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,

Are penitent for your default to-day.

Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sir; tell me this, I pray

Where have you left the money that I gave you?

To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper?

The saddler had it, sir; I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now;

Tell me, and dally not, where is the money? We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust

So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you jest, sir, as you sit at dinner.

I from my mistress come to you in post; If I return, I shall be post indeed,

For she will score your fault upon my pate. Methinks your maw, like mine, should e your clock,

And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of season;

Reserve them till a meirier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? Why, you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave, have done your foolishness,

And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart

Home to your house, the Phœnix, sir, to dinner. 75
My mistress and her sister stays for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer

In what saic place you have bestow'd my money,

Or I shall break that merry sconce of yours, That stands on tricks when I am undispos'd.

Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate,

Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,

But not a thousand marks between you both.

If I should pay your worship those again, Perchance you will not bear them patiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks! What mistress, slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phœnix; She that doth fast till you come home to dinner,

And prays that you will hie you home to dinner. 90

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face, Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave. {Beats him. Dro. E. What mean you, sir? For God's sake hold your hands!

Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

[Exit Dromio E. An.. S. Upon my life, by some device or other

The villain is o'erraught of all my money. They say this town is full of corenage; As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eve, Dark-working soicerers that change the mind.

Soul-killing witches that deform the body, Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks, And many such-like liberties of sin, If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner. I'll to the Centaur to go seek this slave I greatly fear my money is not sale. [Exit.

ACT TWO

Scene I. The house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus of Ephesus, with Luciana, her sister.

Adr. Neith r my husband nor the slave return'd

That in such haste I sent to seek his master!
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps some merchant hath in-

Luc. Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,

And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner;
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret.

A man is master of his liberty;

Time is their master, and when they see time.

They'll go or come. If so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o' door.

Adr. Look when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O, know he is the bridle of your will.
Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe.

There's acthing situate under heaven's eye 118

But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky. The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls, Are their males' subjects, and at their controls.

Man, more divine, the master of all these, Lord of the wide world and wild wat'ry seas,

Indu'd with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pie-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience unmov'd! no marvel though she pause:

Here comes your man, now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he's at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

46

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him?
Know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear.

Beshrew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubtfully that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I prithee, is he coming home? 55
It seems he hath great care to please his wife.

For God's sake, send some other messenger. Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate actoss.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other beating:

Between you I shall have a holy head. 80 Adr. Hence, prating peasant! Fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me.

That like a football you do spurn me thus? You spuin me hence, and he will spurn me hithei:

If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

SCENE II. The mart.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid

Safe at the Centaur, and the heedful slave Is wand'red to:th in care to seek me out. By computation and mine host's report I could not speak with Diomio since at first I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

How now, sir, is your merry humour alter'd?

As you love strokes, so jest with me again. You know no Centaur! You receiv'd no gold!

Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner!

My house was at the Phœnix! Wast thou mad,

That thus so madly thou didst answer me? Dro. S. What answer, sir? When spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence.

Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt,

And told'st me of a mistress and a dinner: displeas'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry

What means this jest? I pray you, master. tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jeer and flout me in the teeth?

Think'st thou I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that. [Beating him.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake! Now your jest is earnest.

Upon what bargain do you give it me? Ant. S. Because that I familiarly some-

Do use you for my fool and chat with you, Your sauciness will jest upon my love, And make a common of my serious hours. When the sun shines let foolish gnats make sport,

But creep in crannies when he hides his beams.

If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks. Or I will beat this method in your sconce.

Dro. S. Sconce, call you it? So you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head. An you use these blows long, I must get a sconce for my head, and insconce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But I pray, sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir, but that I am

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for they say every why hath a wherefore.

Ant S. Why, first for flouting me; and then wherefore,

For urging it the second time to me. Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season. When in the why and the wherefore is neither rhyme nor reason? Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sir! for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant S. I'll make you amends next, to give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner-time?

Dro. S. No, sir; I think the meat wants that I have.

Ant. S. In good time, sir, what's that? Dro. S. Basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.

Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.

Ant. S. Your reason?

Dro. S. Lest it make you choleric, and purchase me another dry basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time; there's a time for all things. Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so choleric.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of Father Time himself. Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that grows bald by nature. Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?

Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig, and recover the lost hair of another man. 75

Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts, and what he hath scanted men in hair he hath given them in wit.

Ant S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.

Dro. S. Not a man of those but he hath the wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost: yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too. 90

Ant. S. Nay, not sound I pray you. Dro. S. Sure ones, then.

Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.

Dro. S. Certain ones, then.

Ant. S. Name them. 95 Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in tiring; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have prov'd there is no time for all things. 100 Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.

Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore to the world's end will have bald followers.

Ant. S. I knew 'twould be a bald conclusion. But, soft, who wafts us yonder?

Enter ADRIANA and LUCIANA.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and frown. Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects:

I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

The time was once when thou unurg'd wouldst vow

That never words were music to thine ear, That never object pleasing in thine eye. 114 That never touch well welcome to thy hand, That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,

Unless I spake, or look'd, or touch'd, or carv'd to thee.

How comes it now, my husband, O, how

That thou art then estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being strange to me. That, undividable, incorporate.

Am better than thy dear self's better part Ah, do not tear away thyself from me: For know, my love, as easy mayst thou fall A drop of water in the breaking gult, And take unmingled thence that drop again Without addition or diminishing,

As take from me thyself, and not me too How dearly would it touch thee to the quick, Shouldst thou but hear I were licentious, And that this body, consecrate to thee, By ruffian lust should be contaminate! Wouldst thou not spit at me and spurn at me.

And hurl the name of husband in my face. And tear the stain'd skin off my harlotbrow, And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring, And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?

I know thou canst, and therefore see thou

I am possess'd with an adulterate blot; 139 My blood is mingled with the crime of lust; For if we two be one, and thou play false, I do digest the poison of thy flesh, Being strumpeted by thy contagion.

Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed;

I live dis-stain'd, thou undishonoured. 115 Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not:

In Ephesus I am but two hours old, As strange unto your town as to your talk, Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd. Wants wit in all one word to understand. Luc. Fie, brother, how the world is chang'd with you! When were you wont to use my sister thus? She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner. Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee: and this thou didst return from him-

That he did buffet thee, and in his blows Denied my house for his, me for his wife. Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?

What is the course and drift of your compact?

Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.

Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words

Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.

Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.

Ant. S. How can she thus, then, call us by our names, 165 Unless it be by inspiration?

Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity Come, sister. Dromio, play the porter well.

To counterfeit thus grossly with you, slave, Abetting him to thwart me in my mood! Be it my wrong you are from me exempt, But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.

Come, I will fasten on this sleave of thine ; Thou art an elm, my husband, I a vine, Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state.

Makes me with thy strength to communicate.

If aught possess thee from me, it is dross, Usurping avy, buer, or idle moss; Who all, for want of pruning, with intrusion

Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion. Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her theme. What, was I married to her in my dream?

Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this? What error drives our eyes and ears amiss? Until I know this sure uncertainty, I'll entertain the offer'd fallacy.

Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner. Dro. S. O, for my beads! I cross me for a sinner.

This is the fairy find. O spite of spites! We talk with goblins, owls, and sprites. If we obey them not, this will ensue: They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue. Luc. Why prat'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?

Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!

Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am not I?

Ant. S. I think thou art in mind, and so am I.

Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape.

Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.

No, I am an ape. Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass.

Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass.

'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be But I should know her as well as she knows me.

Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool.

To put the finger in the eye and weep, Whilst man and master laughs my woes to scorn. Come, sir, to dinner. Dromio, keep the gate. Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day, And shrive you of a thousand idle pranks. Sirrah, if any ask you for your master, Say he dines forth, and let no creature enter.

T2I

Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?

Sleeping or waking, mad or well-advis'd? Known unto these, and to myself disguis'd? I'll say as they say, and persever so,

And in this mist at all adventures go. 215

Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?

Adr. Ay; and let none enter, lest I break your pate.

Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late. [Exeunt.

ACT THREE

Scene I. Before the house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Ephesus, Angelo, and Balthazar.

Ant. E. Good Sign or Angelo, you must excuse us all;

My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours. Say that I linger'd with you at your shop To see the making of her carcanet,

And that to-morrow you will bring it home. But here's a villain that would face me down

He met me on the mart, and that I beat him,

And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold,

And that I did deny my wife and house.

Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thou mean by this?

Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know.

That you beat me at the mart I have your hand to show;

If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink,

Your own handwriting would tell you what I think.

Ant E. I think thou art an ass.

Dro. E. Marry, so it doth appear By the wrongs I suffer and the blows I bear. I should kick, being kick'd; and being at that pass,

You would keep from my heels, and beware of an ass.

Ant. E. Y'are sad, Signior Balthazar; pray God our cheer

May answer my good will and your good welcome here. 20

Bal. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.

Ant. É. O, Signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish,

A table full of welcome makes scarce one dainty dish.

Bal. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.

Ant. E. And welcome more common; for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheer and great welcome makes a merry feast.

Ant. F. Ay, to a niggardly host and more sparing guest.

But though my cates be mean, take them in good part:

Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart.

But, soft, my door is lock'd; go bid them let us in. 30

Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Ginn!

Dro. S. [Within] Mome, malt-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!

Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch.

Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou call'st for such store,

When one is one too many? Go get thee from the door.

Dro. E. What patch is made our porter?
My master stays in the street.

Dro. S. [Within] Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on 's feet.

Ant E. Who talks within there? Ho, open the door!

Dro. S. [Wuthin] Right, sir; I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant E. Wherefore? For my dinner; I have not din'd to-day.

Dro. S. [Within] Nor to-day here you must not; come again when you may.

Ant. E. What art thou that keep'st me out from the house I owe?

Dro. S. [Within] The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio.

Dro. E. O villain, thou hast stol'n both mine office and my name!

The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame.

If thou hadst been Dromio to-day in my place,

Thou wouldst have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an ass.

Enter Luce, within.

Luce. [Within] What a coil is there, Dromio? Who are those at the gate?

Dro. E. Let my master in, Luce.

Luce. [Within] Faith, no, he comes too late;

And so tell your master.

Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh! Have at you with a proverb: Shall I set in my staff?

Luce. [Within] Have at you with another: that's—when? can you tell?

Dro. S. [Within] If thy name be called Luce—Luce, thou hast answer'd him well.

Ant E. Do vou hear, you minion? You'll If a crow help us in, s.rrah, we'll pluck a let us in, I hope?

Luce. [Within] I thought to have ask'd

you.

Dro. S. [Within] And you said no.

there was blow for blow.

Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard. Luce. [Within] Let him knock till it ache.

Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.

Luce. [Within] What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town?

Enter ADRIANA, within.

Adr. [Within] Who is that at the door, that keeps all this noise?

Dro. S. [Within] By my troth, your town is troubled with unruly boys.

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? You might have come before.

Adr. [Within] Your wife, sir knave! Go get you from the doos.

'knave' would go sore.

Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome: we would fain have either.

Bal. In debating which was best, we shall part with neither.

Dro. E. They stand at the door, master; bid them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind. that we cannot get in.

break ope the gate. Dro. S. [Within] Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knave's

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir; and words are but wind; not behind.

Dro. S. [Within] It seems thou want'st breaking; out upon thee, hind!

Dro. E. Here's too much 'out upon thee!' I pray thee let me in.

Dro. S. [Within] Ay, when fowls have no feathers and fish have no fin.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in; go borrow me a crow.

Dro. E. A crow without feather? Master, mean you so? For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather;

crow together.

Ant. E. Go get thee gone; fetch me an iron crow.

Bal. Have patience, sir . O, let it not be so! Dro. E. So, come, help; well struck! Herein you war against your reputation, 56 And draw within the compass of suspect dead: For slander lives upon succession, For ever hous'd where it gets possession.

Ant E. Thou baggage, let me in.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd. I will depart in quiet,

And in despite of mirth mean to be merry. I know a wench of excellent discourse, Pretty and witty; wild, and yet, too, gentle: There will we dine. This woman that I mean, Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your My wife—but, I protest, without desert—

Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal; Your cake here is warm within; you stand To her will we to dinner. [To Angelo] Get you home Scene II. Before the house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Luciana with Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot

A husband's office? Shall, Antipholus, Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?

Shall love, in building, grow so ruinous? If you did wed my sister for her wealth. more kindness:

Muffle your false love with some show of

Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;

Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty: Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger: Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;

Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;

Be secret-false. What need she be acquainted? 15

What simple thief brags of his own attaint?

Then, gentle brother, get you in again; 25 Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife.

'Tis holy sport to be a little vain

When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress—what your name is else, I know not,

Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine-Less in your knowledge and your grace you show not

Than earth's wonder-more than our earth, divine.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak:

Lay open to my earthy-gross conceit, Smoth'red in errors, feeble, shallow, weak, The folded meaning of your words' deceit. Against my soul's pure truth why labour you

To make it wander in an unknown field? Are you a god? Would you create me new? Transform me, then, and to your pow'r

And as a bed I'll take them, and there lie: And in that glorious supposition think Then for her wealth's sake use her with He gains by death that hath such means to die.

Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth; Let Love, being light, be drowned if she sink.

> Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?

> Ant. S. Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know.

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.

Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.

Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.

Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.

Luc. Why call you me love? Call my sister so.

Ant. S. Thy sister's sister. Luc. That's my sister.

Ant. S. It is thyself, mine own self's better part: Being compact of credit, that you love Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart,

Though others have the arm, show us the My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim.

Luc. All this my sister is, or else should

Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee:

Thee will I love, and with thee lead my life: Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife. Give me thy hand.

Luc. O, soft, sir, hold you still: I'll fetch my sister to get her good will. 70 [Exit Luciana.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio! Where run'st thou so fast?

Dron. S. Do you know me, sir? Am I Dromio? Am I your man? Am I myself?

Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and besides myself.

Ant. S. What woman's man, and how besides thyself?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman-one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee? 8, Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she,

being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me; call'd me Dromio; swore I was to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

he say 'Sir-reverence'. I have but lean witch. luck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage. 92 marriage?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchenwench, and all grease: and I know not what use to put her to but to make a lamp of her and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags and the tallow in them will burn a Poland winter. If she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complexion is she of? 100 Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe; but her face nothing like so clean kept; for why she sweats, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it. 106

Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Nell, sir; but her name and three quarters, that's an ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth? Dro. S. No longer from head to foot than Of such enchanting presence and discourse, from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.

Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks; I found it out by the bogs.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness, hard in the palm of the hand. Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead, arm'd and re- I thought to have ta'en you at the Porverted, making war against her heir.

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I look'd for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them; but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not, but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. S. Where America, the Indies? Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadoes of caracks to be ballast at her nose. 435

Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this?

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespoke it not.

Ang. Not once nor twice, but twenty times you have.

Go home with it, and please your wife withal;

And soon at supper-time I'll visit you. And then receive my money for the chain. Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. A public place.

Enter Second Merchant, ANGELO, and an Officer.

Sec. Mer. You know since Pentecost the sum is due.

And since I have not much importun'd you; Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want guilders for my voyage, Therefore make present satisfaction, Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum that I do owe to you

Is growing to me by Antipholus: And in the instant that I met with you He had of me a chain; at five o'cleck I shall receive the money for the same. Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house.

I will discharge my bond, and thank you

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus, from the courtezan's.

Off. That labour may you save; see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou

And buy a rope's end; that will I bestow Among my wife and her confederates. For locking me out of my doors by day. But, soft, I see the goldsmith. Get thee gone;

Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me. Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year; I buy a rope. [Exit Dromio.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to you!

I promised your presence and the chain; But neither chain nor goldsmith came to Belike you thought our love would last too long,

Than I stand debted to this gentleman. I pray you see him presently discharg'd, For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money; Besides, I have some business in the town.

Good signior, take the stranger to my house, And with you take the chain, and bid my wife Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof. Perchance I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will. Have you the chain about you?

Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have:

Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain; Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman,

And I, to blame, have held him here too long.

Ant. E. Good Lord! you use this dalliance to excuse

Your breach of promise to the Porpentine: I should have chid you for not bringing it, But, like a shiew, you first begin to brawl.

Sec. Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you, sir, dispatch.

Ang. You hear how he importunes methe chain!

Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch your money.

Ang. Come, come, you know I gave it you even now. Either send the chain or send by me some

Ant. E. Fie, now you run this humour out of breath! Come, where's the chain? I pray you let me see it.

Sec. Mer. My business cannot brook this dalliance.

Good sir, say whe'r you'll answer me or no: If not, I'll leave him to the officer.

Ant. E. I answer you! What should I answei vou?

Ang. The money that you owe me for the chain.

Ant. E. I owe you none till I receive the chain.

Ang. You know I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none; you wrong me much to say so. Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it.

Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Sec. Mer. Well, officer, airest him at my suit.

Off. I do; and charge you in the Duke's name to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation. Either consent to pay this sum for me, Or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had!

Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ang. Here is thy fee; arrest him, officer.
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.

Offi. I do arrest you, sir; you hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obey thee till I give thee bail. But, sırrah, you shall buy this sport as dear As all the metal in your shop will answer. Ang. Sır, sır, I shall have law in Ephesus,

To your notorious shame, I doubt it not. 85 Enter Dromio of Syracuse, from the bay.

Dro. S. Master, there's a bark of Epidam-

That stays but till her owner comes aboard, And then, sir, she bears away. Our fraughtage, sir,

I have convey'd aboard; and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum, and aqua-vitæ. 90
The ship is in her trim; the merry wind
Blows fair from land; they stay for nought at all

But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now! a madman? Why,
thou peevish sheep,

What ship of Epidamnum stays for me? 95 Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.

Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope;

And told thee to what purpose and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me for a rope's end as soon—

You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark. 100 Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure,

And teach your ears to list me with more heed.

To Adriana, villain, hie thee straight; Give her this key, and tell her in the desk That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry There is a purse of ducats; let her send it. Tell her I am arrested in the street, 107 And that shall bail me; hie thee, slave, be gone.

On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Exeunt all but Dromio.
Dro. S. To Adriana! that is where we din'd,

Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband.

She is too big, I hope, for me to compass. Thither I must, although against my will,

For servants must their masters' minds fulfil. [Exit.

Scene II. The house of Antipholius of Ephesus.

Enter ADRIANA and LUCIANA.

Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so? Mightst thou perceive austerely in his eye. That he did plead in earnest? Yea or no? Look'd he or red or pale, or sud or merrily?

What observation mad'st thou in this case Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?

Lvc. First he denied you had in him no

Adr. He meant he did me none—the more my spite.

Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger here.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Adr. And what said he?

Luc. That love I begg'd for you he begg'd of me.

Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?

Luc. With words that in an honest suit might move.

First he did praise my beauty, then my speech.

Adr. Didst speak him fair?

Luc. Have patience, I beseech.

Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still;

Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still; My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere, Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;

Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind; Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?

No evil lost is wail'd when it is gone.

Adr. Ah, but I think him better than I

And yet would herein others' eyes were worse.

Far from her nest the lapwing cries away; My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here go—the desk, the purse. Sweet now, make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

Dro. S. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? Is he well?

Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.

A devil in an everlasting garment hath name One whose hard heart is button'd up i steel; A flend, a fairy, pitiless and rough; A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff: A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermands

The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands:

A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot well;

One that, before the Judgment, carries poor souls to hell.

Adr. Why, man, what is the matter? Dro. S. I do not know the matter; he is rested on the case.

Adr. What, is he arrested? Tell me, at whose suit?

Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested well;

But he's in a suit of buff which 'rested him that can I tell.

Will you send him, mistress, redemption the money in his desk?

Adr. Go fetch it, sister. [Exit Luciana] This I wonder at:

Thus he unknown to me should be in debt. Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing,

A chain, a chain. Do you not hear it ring? Adr. What, the chain?

Dro. S. No, no, the bell; 'tis time that I were gone.

It was two ere I left him, and now the with his mace than a morris-pike. clock strikes one.

Adr. The hours come back! That did I never hear.

If any hour meet a Dro. S. O yes. sergeant, 'a turns back for very fear. Adi. As if Time were in debt! How fondly dost thou reason! Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth to season. Nay, he's a thief too: have you not heard men sav

That Time comes stealing on by night and

If 'a be in debt and theft, and a sergeant in the way,

Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?

Re-enter LUCIANA with a purse.

Adr. Go, Dromio, there's the money; bear it straight.

And bring thy master home immediately. Come, sister; I am press'd com with conceit-65

Conceit, my comfort and my injury.

Exeunt. SCENE III. The mart.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse.

128

And every one doth call me by my name. Some tender money to me, some invite me. Some other give me thanks for kindnesses, Some offer me commodities to buy: Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop, And show'd me silks that he had bought for

And therewithal took measure of my body. Sure, these are but imaginary wiles, And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for. What, have you got the picture of old Adam new-apparell'd?

Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dost thou mean?

Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison; he that goes in the calf's skin that was kill'd for the Prodigal; he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not. Dro. S. No? Why, 'tis a plain case: he that went, like a bass-viol, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a sob, and rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits

Ant. S. What, thou mean'st an officer? Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says 'God give you good rest!'

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery. Is there any ship puts forth to-night? May we be gone?

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since that the bark Expedition put to-night; and then were you hind'red by the sergeant, to tarry for the hoy Deiay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you. 36

Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I; And here we wander in illusions. Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtezan.

Well met, well met, Master Cour. Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now.

Is that the chain you promis'd me to-day? Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not.

Dro. S. Master, is this Mistress Satan? Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but devil's dam, and here she comes in the habit doth salute me of a light wench; and thereof comes that As if I were their well-acquainted friend; the wenches say 'God damn me!' That's as much to say 'God make me a light I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much wench!' It is written they appear to men like angels of light; light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn. Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir.

Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner here.

Dro. S. Master, if you do, expect spoonmeat, or bespeak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil. Ant. S. Avoid then fiend! What tell'st thou me of supping? Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress:

I conjure thee to leave me and be gone. Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,

Or, for my diamond, the chain you promis'd,

And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you. Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of one's nail.

A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin,

A nut, a cherry-stone;

But she, more covetous, would have a chain. Master, be wise; an if you give it her, 70 The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain:

I hope you do not mean to cheat me so. Ant. S. Avaunt, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.

'Fly pride' says the peacock. Dro.Mistress, that you know.

[Excunt Ant. S. and Dro. S. . Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad.

Else would he never so demean himself. A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promis'd me a chain; Both one and other he denies me now. The reason that I gather he is mad, Besides this present instance of his rage, Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner

Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike his wife, acquainted with his fits, 85

On purpose shut the doors against his way. My way is now to hie home to his house, And tell his wife that, being lunatic, He rush'd into my house and took perforce My ring away. This course I fittest choose, For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.

To warrant thee, as I am 'rested for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day, And will not lightly trust the messenger. 5 That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus, with a 10be's-end.

Here comes my man; I think he brings the money

How now, sir! Have you that I sent you for ?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money? Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate. Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home? Dro. E. To a rope's-end, sir; and to that end am I return'd. Ant. E. And to that end, sir. I will welcome you. Beating him. Off. Good sir, be patient. Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient:

I am in adversity. Off. Good now, hold thy tongue. Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands. Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain! Dio. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows. Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass indeed; you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service but blows. When I am cold he heats me with beating; when I am warm he cools me with beating. I am wak'd with it when I sleep; rais'd with it when I sit; driven out of doors with it when I go from home; welcom'd home with it when I return; nay, I bear it on my shoulders as a beggar wont her brat; and I think, when he hath lam'd me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and a Schoolmaster call'd Pinch.

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

Dro. E. Mistress, 'respice finem', respect your end; or rather, to prophesy like the Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not parrot, 'Beware the rope's-end'. Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beating him. Cour. How say you now? Is not your husband mad?

Adr. His incivility confirms no less. Good Doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer: Establish him in his true sense again,

And I will please you what you will demand. Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

Cour. Mark how he trembles in his ecstasy.

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel [Striking him. your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hous'd within this man,

To yield possession to my holy prayers, And to thy state of darkness hie thee straight.

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven. Ant. E. Peace, doting wizard, peace!

Ant. E. You minion, you, are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face Revel and feast it at my house to-day, Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I denied to enter in my house? Adr. O husband, God doth know you din'd at home,

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdie, your doors were lock'd and you shut out.

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans fable, she herself revil'd you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me? Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchenvestal scorn'd vou. Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from bear witness, That since have felt the vigour of his rage. Adr. Is't good to soothe him in these contraries? Pinch. It is no shame; the fellow finds Hast thou delight to see a wretched man his vein.

And, yielding to him, humours well his frenzy.

Ant. E. Thou hast suborn'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you.

By Dromio here, who came in haste for it. Dro. E. Money by me! Heart and goodwill you might.

But surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'st not thou to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. Ĥe came to me, and I deliver'd it. Luc. And I am witness with her that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker bear me witness

That I was sent for nothing but a rope! Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possess'd;

I know it by their pale and deadly looks. 90 They must be bound, and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth to-day?

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold? Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold:

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain, thou speak'st false in both.

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all,

And art confederate with a damned pack To make a loathsome abject scorn of me: Ant. E. Din'd at home! Thou villain, But with these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not That would behold in me this shameful sport.

Adr. O, bind him, bind him; let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company! The fiend is strong within him.

Enter three or four, and offer to bind him. He strives.

Luc. Ay me, poor man, how pale and wan he looks!

Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gaoler, thou, y prisoner. Wilt thou suffer them

I am thy prisoner. To make a rescue?

Masters, let him go: Off. Dro. E. In verity, you did. My bones He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go bind this man, for he is frantic too. [They bind Dromio.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?

Do outrage and displeasure to himself? Off. He is my prisoner; if I let him go, The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee ere I go from of me, I could find in my heart to stay here thee: 116

Bear me forthwith unto his creditor. And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good Master Doctor, see him safe convey'd Home to my house. O most unhappy day! Ant. E. O most unhappy strumpet! 12 Dro. E. Master, I am here ent'red in bond for you. Ant. E. Out on thee, villain! Wherefore dost thou mad me? Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? Be mad, good master; cry 'The devil!

Luc. God help, poor souls, how idly do they talk!

Adr. Go bear him hence. Sister, go you with me.

[Exeunt all but Adriana, Luciana, Officer, and Courtezan.

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at? Off. One Angelo, a gold mith; do you His word might bear my wealth at any know him?

Adr. I know the man. What is the sum he owes?

Off. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due? Off. Due for a chain your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day

Came to my house, and took away my ring-

The ring I saw upon his finger now-Straight after did I meet him with a chain. Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it. Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is:

I long to know the truth hereof at large. 140

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town: Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard. [Excunt.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. A street before a priory.

Enter Second Merchant and ANGELO.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hind'red you;

But I protest he had the chain of me, Though most dishonestly he doth deny it. Sec. Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?

Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir, 5 Of credit infinite, highly belov'd,

Second to none that lives here in the city;

time. Sec. Mer. Speak softly; yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck Which he forswore most monstrously to have. Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him. Signior Antipholus, I wonder much

That you would put me to this shame and trouble:

And, not without some scandal to yourself. With circumstance and oaths so to deny This chain, which now you wear so openly. Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment.

You have done wrong to this my honest fuend:

Who, but for staying on our controversy, Had hoisted sail and put to sea to-day. This chain you had of me; can you deny it? Ant. S. I think I had; I never did deny it.

Sec. Mer. Yes, that you did, sir, and forswore it too.

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it or forswear it? Mer. These ears of mine, thou Sec. know'st, did hear thee.

Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou lıv'st

To walk where any honest men resort.

Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus; I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand. Sec. Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain. [They draw. Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and Others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake! He is mad.

Some get within him, take his sword away; Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house. 35

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a house.

This is some priory. In, or we are spoil'd. [Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro. S. to the priory.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither?

Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.

Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,

And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew he was not in his perfect wits.

Sec. Mer. I am sorry now that I did draw on him.

Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad, 45

And much different from the man he was; But till this afternoon his passion Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.

Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of sea?

Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye 50

Stray'd his affection in unlawful love? A sin prevailing much in youthful men Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing. Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adr. To none of these, except it be the last;

55

Namely, some love that drew him oft from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Adr. Why, so I did.

Abb. Ay, but not rough enough. Adr. As roughly as my modesty would let me.

Abb. Haply in private.

Adr. And in assemblies too.

Abb. Ay, but not enough.

Adr. It was the copy of our conference. In bed, he slept not for my urging it; At board, he fed not for my urging it; Alone, it was the subject of my theme; 65 In company, I often glanced it; Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abb. And thereof came it that the man was mad.

The venom clamours of a jealous woman Poisons more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.

It seems his sleeps were hind'red by thy railing,

And thereof comes it that his head is

Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy upbraidings:

Unquiet meals make ill digestions;

Thereof the raging fire of fever bred; 75 And what's a fever but a fit of madness? Thou say'st his sports were hind'red by thy brawls.

Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue But moody and dull melancholy,

Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair, And at her heels a huge infectious troop 87 Of pale distemperatures and foes to life? In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest,

To be disturb'd would mad or man or beast.

The consequence is, then, thy jealous fits Hath scar'd thy husband from the use of wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,

When he demean'd himself rough, rude, and wildly.

Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Adr. She did betray me to my own reproof. 90 Good people, enter, and lay hold on him.

Abb. No, not a creature enters in my house.

Adr. Then let your servants bring my husband forth.

Abb. Neither; he took this place for sanctuary, 94

And it shall privilege him from your hands Till I have brought him to his wits again, Or lose my labour in assaying it.

Adr, I will attend my husband, be his nurse,

Diet his sickness, for it is my office,

And will have no attorney but myself; 100 And therefore let me have him home with

Abb. Be patient; for 1 will not let him stir

Till I have us'd the approved means I have, With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,

To make of him a formal man again.

It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,

A charitable duty of my order; Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Adr. I will not hence and leave my husband here;

And ill it doth beseem your holiness
To separate the husband and the wife.

Abb. Be quiet, and depart; thou shalt not have him. [Exit Abbess.]

Luc. Complain unto the Duke of this indignity.

Adr. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at Nor send him forth that we may bear him his feet. TIA and never rise until my tears and pravers Have won his Grace to come in person

And take persorce my husband from the Abbess.

Luc. Kneel to the Duke before he pass Beaten the maids a-row and bound the the abbev.

Enter the DUKE, attended; ÆGEON, bareheaded; with the Headsman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly, If any friend will pay the sum for him, 131 He shall not die; so much we tender him. Adr. Justice, most sacred Duke, against the Abbess! Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady;

It cannot be that she hath done thee wrong. Adr. May it please your Grace, Antipholus, my husband,

Who I made lord of me and all I had At your important letters—this ill day A most outrageous fit of madness took him, That desp'rately he hurried through the street,

With him his bondman all as mad as he, Doing displeasure to the citizens By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress; fly, be Rings, jewels, anything his rage did like. Once did I get him bound and sent him home,

Therefore, most gracious Duke, with thy command

Let him be brought forth and borne hence for help.

Duke. Long since thy husband serv'd me in my wars,

And I to thee engag'd a prince's word. When thou didst make him master of thy bed.

To do him all the grace and good I could. Go, some of you, knock at the abbey gate, And bid the Lady Abbess come to me. 166 I will determine this before I stir.

Adr. Ay me, it is my husband! Witness vou

That he is borne about invisible.

Even now we hous'd him in the abbey here. And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious Duke; O, grant me justice!

Even for the service that long since I did

When I bestrid thee in the wars, and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood

That then I lost for thee, now grant me A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch, justice.

A living dead man. This pernicious slave.

Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote,

I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio.

And with no face, as 'twere Arthur Western and The Cries out I was possess'd. that woman there!

She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife, That hath abused and dishonoured me Even in the strength and height of injury. Beyond imagination is the wrong 201 That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great Duke, she shut the doors upon me.

While she with harlots feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault. Say, woman, didst thou so?

Adr. No, my good lord. Myself, he, and my sister,

To-day did dine together. So befall my soul As this is false he burdens me withal!

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day nor sleep on night

But she tells to your Highness simple truth!

Ang. O perjur'd woman! They are both forsworn.

In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say:

214

Neither disturbed with the effect of wine, Nor heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire, Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner:

That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,

Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who parted with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Porpentine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together. Our dinner done, and he not coming thither, I went to seek him. In the street I met him, And in his company that gentleman. 226 There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down

That I this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, God he knows, I saw not; for the which

He did arrest me with an officer. 230 I did obey, and sent my peasant home For certain ducats; he with none return'd. Then fairly I bespoke the officer

To go in person with me to my house. By th' way we met my wife, her sister, and a rabble more

Of vile confederates. Along with them
They brought one Pinch, a hungry leanfac'd villain,

A mere anatomy, a mountebank, A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller, A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch, A living dead man. This pernicious slave, Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer, 242 And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as 'twere, outfacing me, Cries out I was possess'd. Then all together

They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,

And in a dark and dankish vault at home There left me and my man, both bound together;

Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,

I gain'd my freedom, and immediately 250 Ran hither to your Grace; whom I beseech

To give me ample satisfaction

For these deep shames and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him.

That he din'd not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no?

Ang. He had, my lord, and when he ran in here,

These people saw the chain about his neck. Sec. Mer. Besides, I will be sworn these ears of mine

Heard you confess you had the chain of him, 260

After you first forswore it on the mart; And thereupon I drew my sword on you, And then you fled into this abbey here, From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls,

Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me; I never saw the chain, so help me Heaven! And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intricate impeach is this!

I think you all have drunk of Circe's cup. If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

You say he din'd at home: the goldsmith here

Denies that saying. Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he din'd with her there, at the Porpentine.

Cour. He did; and from my finger snatch'd that ring.

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my liege; this ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your Grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange. Go call the Abbess hither. 280

I think you are all nined or stack had. [Exit one to the Aboess.]

Æge. I ost raighty Duke, voucasare me speak a word:

Haply I see a friend will save my life

And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Duke. Speak freely, Syracusian, what thou wilt.

Ege. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus?

And is not that your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir,

Bur he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords; 289

Now am I Dromio and his man unbound.

Age. I am sure you both of you remember

Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you;

For lately we were bound as you are now. You are not Finch's patient, are you, sir? Ege. Why look you strange on me? You know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life till now.

Æge. O! grief hath chang'd me since you saw me last;

And careful hours with time's deformed hand

Have written strange defeatures in my face. But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Ant. E. Neither.

Æge. Dromio, nor thou?

Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I. Æge. I am sure thou dost.

Dio. E. Ay, sir, but I am sure I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.

Bge. Not know my voice! O time's extremity,

Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue

In seven short years that here my only son Knows not my teeble key of untun'd cares? Though now this grained face of mine be hid

In sap-consuming winter's druzled snow, And all the conducts of my blood froze up, Yet hath my night of lite some memory, My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left.

My dull deaf ears a little use to hear; 315 All these old witnesses—I cannot err—

Tell me thou art my son Antipholus.

Ant. E. I never saw my father in my life.

Æge. But seven years since, in Syracusa,

Thou know'st we parted; but perhaps, my son, 320

Thou sham'st to acknowledge me in misery.

Ant. E. The Duke and all that know me in the city

Can witness with me that it is not so: I ne'er saw Syracusa in my life.

Duke. I tell thee, Syrocusian, twenty

Flave 1 been pation to Antipholas, During which time he ne'er saw Syracusa. I see thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Re-enter the Abbess, with Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse.

Abb. Most mignty Duke, behold a man much wrong'd.

[All gather to see them. Adr. I see wo husbands, or mine eyes deceive me,

Duke. One of these men is genius to the other;

And so of these. Which is the natural man, And which the spirit? Who deciphers them?

Dio. S. I, sir, am Dromio; command him away.

Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio; pray let me stay. 325 Ant. S. Ægeon, art thou not? or else his gnost?

Dro. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him here?

Abb. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds,
And gain a husband by his liberty.

Speak, old Ægeon, if thou be'st the man That haust a wife once call'd Æmilia, 347 That bore thee at a burden two fair sons. O, if thou be'st the same Ægeon, speak, And speak unto the same Æmilia!

Æge. If I dream not, thou are Æmilia. If thou art she, tell me where is that son That floated with thee on the fatal raft?

Abb. By men of Epidamnum he and I And the twin Dromio, all were taken up; But by and by rude fishermen of Corinth By force took Dromio and my son from them,

And me they left with those of Epidam-

What then became of them I cannot tell; I to this fortune that you see me in.

Duke. Why, here begins his morning story r ght.
These two Antipholus', these two so like, And these two Dromios, one in semblance—Besides her urging of her wreck at sea—These are the parents to these children, Which accidentally are met together.

Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first?

Ant. S. No, sir, not I; I came from Syracuse.

Duke. Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which.

Ant. E. I came from Colinth, my most gracious lord.

Dro. E. And I with him. 365

most famous warrior,

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me Thirty-three years have I but gone in to-day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

And are not you my husband? Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.

Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here. Did call me brother. [To Luciana] What I told you then.

I hope I shall have leisure to make good; If this be not a dream I see and hear. 375 Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me. Ant. S. I think it be, sir; I deny it not. Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me. Ang. I think I did, sir: I deny it not. Adr. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail, By Dromio; but I think he brought it not. Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I receiv'd from you,

And Dromio my man did bring them me. I see we still did meet each other's man, 385 And I was ta'en for him, and he for me.

And thereupon these ERRORS are arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

Duke. It shall not need; thy father hath his life.

Cour. Sir. I must have that diamond from you.

Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Renowned Duke, vouchsafe to take the pains

To go with us into the abbey here,

And hear at large discoursed all our And now let's go hand in hand, not one fortunes:

Ant. E. Brought to this town by that And all that are assembled in this place 395 That by this sympathized one day's error Have suffer'd wrong, go keep us company, And we shall make full satisfaction.

Of you, my sons; and till this present hour My heavy burden ne'er delivered.

The Duke, my husband, and my children both.

And you the calendars of their nativity, Go to a gossips' feast, and go with me;

After so long grief, such nativity! Duke. With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. [Exeunt all but Ant. S. Ant. E.,

Dro. S., and Dro. E. Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard? Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embark'd? Dro. S. Your goods that lay at host, sir. in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to me. I am your master, Dromio.

Come, go with us; we'll look to that anon. Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him. [Exeunt Ant. S. and Ant. E.

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house.

That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner; She now shall be my sister, not my wife. 415 Dro. E. Methinks you are my glass, and not my brother;

I see by you I am a sweet-fac'd youth. Will you walk in to see their gossiping? Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question; how shall we

Dro. S. We'll draw cuts for the senior: till then, lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then, thus:

We came into the world like brother and brother,

before another. [Exeunt.

THE SCENE: Messina

ACT ONE

SCENE I. Before Leonato's house.

Enter LEONATO, HERO, and BEATRICE. with a Messenger.

Leon. I learn in this letter that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. He is very near by this: he was not three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Mess. But few of any sort, and none of Leon. A victory is twice itself when the dick too much; but he'll be meet with achiever brings home full numbers. I find here that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine called Claudio.

Mess. Much deserv'd on his part, and equally rememb'red by Don Pedro. He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a hon; he hath, indeed, better bett'red expectation than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it.

Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears? 20

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness. There are no faces truer than those that are so wash'd. How much better is it to weep at joy than to joy at weeping!

Beat. I pray you, is Signior Mountanto return'd from the wars or no?

Mess. I know none of that name. lady: there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece? Hero. My cousin means Signior Benedick of Padua.

Mess. O, he's return'd, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina. and challeng'd Cupid at the flight; and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscrib'd for Cupid, and challeng'd him at the bird-bolt. I pray you, how many hath he kill'd and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he kill'd? For, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax Signior Bene-you, I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars. Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath holp to eat it; he is a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach.

Mess. And a good soldier too, lady. Beat. And a good soldier to a lady; but what is he to a lord? Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man:

stuff'd with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuff'd man; but for the stuffing-well, we are all mortal.

I eon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece: there is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedick and her; they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit between Beat. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man govern'd with one; so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Mess. Is't possible?

Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block.

Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.

Beat. No; an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a disease; he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! If he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere 'a be cured.

Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, niece. Beat. No, not till a hot January. Mess. Don Pedro is approach'd.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasar, and John the Bastard.

D. Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, are you come to meet your trouble? The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your Grace; for trouble being gone comfort should remain; but when you depart from me sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you ask'd her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedick; we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself. Be happy, lady, for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If Signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Beat. I wonder that you will still be talking, Signior Benedick; nobody marks you.

Bene. What, my dear Lady Disdain! Are you yet living?

Beat. Is it possible disdain should die while she hath such meet food to feed it as Signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain if you come in her presence.

Bene. Then is courtesy a turncoat. But it is certain I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for, truly. I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women! They would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! So some gentleman or other shall scape a predestinate scratch'd face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were. 116 Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer. But keep your way a God's name, I have done.

Beat. You always end with a jade's trick; I know you of old.

D. Pedro. That is the sum of all, Leonato. Signior Claudio and Signior Benedick, my dear friend Leonato hath invited you ali, I tell him we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer. I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn. [To Don John] Let me bid you welcome, my lord—being reconciled to the Prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you; I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your Grace lead on?
D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together.

[Exeunt all but Benedick and Claudio. Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not, but I look'd on her. Claud. Is she not a modest young lady? Bene. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No, I pray thee speak in sober judgment.

Bene. Why, i' faith, methinks she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise; only this commendation I can afford her, that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome, and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

Claud. Thou thinkest I am in sport; I pray thee tell me truly how thou lik'st her. Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

138

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow, or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I look'd on.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles. and I see no such matter; there's her cousin, an she were not possess'd with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband, have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Bene. Is't come to this? In faith, hath not the world one man but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of threescore again? Go to, i' faith; an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look, Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter DON PEDRO.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's? Bene, I would your Grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedio. I charge thee on thy allegiance. Bene. You hear, Count Claudio; I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance, mark you this, on my allegiance—he is in love. With who? now that is your Grace's part. Mark how short his answer is: with Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it utt'red. Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: is not so, nor 'twas not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so!'

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God fo: bid it should be otherwise!

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord? D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

mine.

Bene. And, by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know. Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake. 201

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part but in the force of his w.il.

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks: but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon nie. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistiust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, for the which I may go the finer, I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love. Prove that ever I lose more blood with love than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker's pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argu-

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that hits me. let him be clapp'd on the shoulder and call'd Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try. In time the savage bull dorn bear the yoke.'

Bene. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's hoins and set them in my forehead, and let me be vilely painted; and in such great letters as they write 'Here is good horse to hire ' let them signify under my sign 'Here you may see Benedick the married man

Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be horn-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I look for an earthquake too, then. D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the hours. In the meantime, good Signior Benedick, repair to Leonato's; commend me to him, and tell him I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me Claud. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke for such an embassage; and so I commit

> Claud. To the tuition of God. From my house-if I had it-

D. Pedro. The sixth of July. Your loving friend, Benedick.

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly basted on neither; ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience; and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick. Claud. My liege, your Highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach; teach it but how,

And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn Any hard lesson that may do thee good. Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero; she's his only beir.

Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O, my lord. When you went onward on this ended action.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye, 260 That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand Than to drive liking to the name of love; But now I am return'd, and that war-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thronging soft and delicate desires. All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Saying I lik'd her ere I went to wars.

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently,

And tire the hearer with a book of words. If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it; 270 And I will break with her, and with her father.

And thou shalt have her. Was't not to this

That thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Claud. How sweetly you do minister to

That know love's grief by his complexion! But lest my liking might too sudden seem, I would have salv'd it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

The fairest grant is the necessity.

Look what will serve is fit. 'Tis once, thou lovest;

And I will fit thee with the remedy. I know we shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise, And tell fair Hero I am Claudie; And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart, And take her hearing prisoner with the force And strong encounter of my amorous tale. Then, after, to her father will I break; And the conclusion is she shall be thine. In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Leonato's house.

Enter, severally, LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Leon. How now, brother! Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music-

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dreamt not of.

Leon. Are they good?

they have a good cover: they show well outward. The Prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in mine orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: the Prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my niece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit that told you this?

Ant. A good sharp fellow; I will send for him, and question him yourself.

Leon. No, no; we will hold it as a dream. till it appear itself; but I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this be true. Go you and tell her of it. [Several persons cross the stage] Cousins, you know what you have to do. O, I cry you niercy, friend; go with me, and I will use your skill. Good cousin, have a care this busy time. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Leonato's house.

Enter Don John and Conrade.

Con. What the good-year, my lord! Why are you thus out of measure sad?

D. John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds; therefore the sadness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

D. John. And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it?

Con. If not a present remedy, at least a patient sufferance.

D. John. I wonder that thou, being, as thou say'st thou art, born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am; I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man's jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man's leisure; sleep when I am drowsy, and tend on no man's business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this till you may do it without controlment. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath ta'en you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root but by the fair weather that you make yourself; it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge than a rose in his grace; and it better fits my blood to be disdain'd of all than to fashion a carriage to rob love from 5 any. In this, though I cannot be said to be Ant. As the event stamps them; but a flattering honest man, it must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle and enfranchis'd with a clog: therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage. If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking; in the meantime let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. John. I make all use of it, for I use it only. Who comes here?

Enter Borachio.

What news, Borachio?

Bora. I came yonder from a great supper. The Prince, your brother, is royally entertain'd by Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool that betroths himself to unquietness? 41

Bora. Marry, it is your brother's right hand.

D. John. Who? The most exquisite Claudio?

Bora. Even he.

D. John. A proper squire! And who, and who? Which way looks he?

Bora. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

D. John. A very forward March-chick!

How came you to this?

Bora. Being entertain'd for a perfumer, as I was smoking a musty room, comes me the Prince and Claudio hand in hand, in sad conference. I whipt me behind the arras, and there heard it agreed upon that the Prince should woo Hero for himself, and, having obtain'd her, give her to Count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither; this may prove food to my displeasure; that young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow. If I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper; their cheer is the greater that I am subdued. Would the cook were o' my mind! Shall we go prove what's to be done?

Bora. We'll wait upon your lordship.

ACT TWO

Scene I. A hati in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, Margaret, Ursula, and Others.

Leon. Was not Count John here at supper?
Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heart-burn'd an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He were an excellent man that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image and says nothing, and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then half Signior Benedick's tongue in Count John's mouth, and half Count John's melancholy in Signior Benedick's face-

Beat. With a good leg and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world, if 'a could get her good-will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she's too curst.

Beat. Too curst is more than curst. I shall lessen God's sending that way; for it is said 'God sends a curst cow short horns'; but to a cow too curst he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curst, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening. Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face; I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light on a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? Dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man; and he that is more than a youth is not for me, and he that is less than a man I am not for him; therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the berrord, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, go you into hell?

Beat. No; but to the gate, and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say 'Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maids'. So deliver I up my apes and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. [To Hero] Well, niece, I trust you will be rul'd by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make curtsy, and say 'Father, as it please you'. But yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another curtsy and say 'Father, as it please me'.

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-master'd with a piece of valiant dust, to make an account of her life to a clod of wayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and, truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the Prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not wooed in good time. If the Prince be too important, tell him there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer. For, hear me, Hero; wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinquepace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly modest, as a measure, full of state and ancientry; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinquepace faster and faster, till he sink into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a church by daylight.

Leon. The revellers are ent'ring, brother; make good room. [Antonio masks.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasar, Don John, and Borachio, as maskers, with a drum.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company? Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so? Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend the lute should be like the case! 81

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then, your visor should be thatch'd.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love. [Takes her aside.

Balth. Well, I would you did like me. 86 Marg. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Balth. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Balth. I love you the better; the hearers may cry Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Balth. Amen.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done! Answer, clerk.

95

Balth. No more words; the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough; you are Signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the waggling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him. Urs. You could never do him so ill-well unless you were the very man. Here's his dry hand up and down; you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not. Los Urs. Come, come; do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can yirtue hide itself? Go to; mum; you are he; giaces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me. 109
Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the 'Hundred Merry Tales'—well, this was Signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the Prince's jester, a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible slanders; none but libertines delight in him, and the commendation is not in his wit but in his villainy; for he both pleases men and angers them, and then they laugh at him and beat him. I am sure he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me.

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do; he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not mark'd, or not laugh'd at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Dance. Then exeunt all but Don John, Borachio, and Claudio.

D. John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing.

D. John. Are not you Signior Benedick? Claud. You know me well; I am he. 141 D. John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love; he is enamour'd on Hero; I pray you dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. You may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves 1 .: ? D. John. I heard him swear his affection Bora. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

D. John. Come, let us to the banguet. 150 Exeunt Don John and Borachio. Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick.

But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio.

'Tis certain so: the Prince woos for him-

Friendship is constant in all other things Save in the office and affairs of love: 155 Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues.

Let every eye negotiate for itself,

And trust no agent: for beauty is a witch Against whose chaims faith melteth into blood.

This is an accident of hourly proof, Which I mistrusted not. Farewell, therefore. Hero.

Re-enter BENEDICK.

Bene. Count Claudio? Claud. Yea, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claud. Whither?

Rene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, County. What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the Prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drovier; so they sell bullocks. But did you think the Prince would have served you

Claud. I pray you leave me.

Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. Exit.

Bene. Alas, poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into sedges. But that my Lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The Prince's fool! Ha! It may be I go under that title because I am merry. Yea, but so I am apt to do myself wrong; I am not so reputed; it is the base, though bitter, disposition of Beatrice that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter DON PEDRO.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the Count? Did you see him?

Bar n, my id. I have played the part of Lady Fame. I found han here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren; I told him, and I think I told had tine, that your Grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I of red arm my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

D. Pedro. To be whipt! What's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a schoolboy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. Pedro. Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet it had not been amiss the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself. and the rod he might have bestowed on you. who, as I take it, have stol'n his bird's nest.

D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you; the gentleman that danc'd with her told her she is much wrong'd by you.

Bene. O, she misus'd me past the endurance of a block; an oak but with one green leaf on it would have answered her; my very visor began to assume life and scold with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the Prince's jester, that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest with such impossible conveyance upon me that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me. She speaks poniards, and every word stabs; if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgress'd; she would have made Hercules have turn'd spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her; you shall find her the infernal Ate in good apparel. I would to God some scholar would conjure her; for certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so, indeed, all disquiet, horror, and perturbation, follows her.

Re-enter CLAUDIO and BEATRICE, LEONATO and HERO.

D. Pedro. Look, here she comes. Bene. Will your Grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes that you can devise to send me on; I will fetch you a toothpicker now from the furthest inch of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's foot; fetch you a hair off the great Cham's beard; do you any embassage to the Pigmies-rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy. You have no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not: I cannot endure my Lady Tongue. [Exit.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of Signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one; marry, once before he won it of me with false dice, therefore your Grace may well say I have lost it. 251

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady, you have put him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought Count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, Count!

Wherefore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord. D. Pedro. How then, sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The Count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil count-civil as an orange, and something of that jealous complexion.

D. Pedro. I' faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true, though I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and fair Hero is won. I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained. Name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes; his Grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen

Beat. Speak, Count, 'tis your cue. Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy if I could say how much. Lady, as you are mine, I am yours; I give away myself for you, and dote upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let not him speak neither.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care. My cousin tells him in his ear that he is in her heart.

Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good Lord, for alliance! Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am cost me ten nights' watchings.

sunburnt; I may sit in a corner and cry Heigh-ho for a husband!'

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one. Beat. I would rather have one of your father's getting. Hath your Grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady? Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days; your Grace is too costly to wear every day. But, I beseech your Grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all mirth and no matter. 297 D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me. and to be merry best becomes you; for, out o' question, you were born in a merry Beat. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danc'd. and under that was I born. Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. Niece, you will look to those things

I told you of?

Beat. I cry your mercy, uncle. By your Grace's pardon. Exit Beatrice.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasantspirited lady. Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her, my loid; she is never sad but when she sleeps, and not ever sad then: for I have heard my daughter say she hath often dreamt of unhappiness, and wak'd herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no means; she mocks all her wooers out of suit.

D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O Lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. County Claudio, when mean you to go to church? Claud. To-morrow, my lord. Time goes on crutches till love have all his rites.

Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief, too, to have all things answer my mind. 326

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. I will in the interim undertake one of Hercules' labours; which is, to bring Signior Benedick and the Lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection th' one with th' other. I would fain have it a match: and I doubt not but to fashion it if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it

Claud. And I, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband. D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know. Thus far can I praise him: he is of a noble stian, of approved valour, and confirm'd honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin that she shall fall in love with Benedick; and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archei; his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift. [Exemid.

Scene II. Leonato's house.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

D. John. It is so: the Count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea, my lord, but I can cross it. ?
D. John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment, will be med'cinable to me. I am sick in displeasure to him; and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in

D. John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think I told your lordship a year since how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting gentlewoman to Hero.

D. John. I remember.

Bora. I can at any unseasonable instant of the night appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window.

D. John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the Prince your brother; spare not to tell him that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio—whose estimation do you mightily hold up—to a contaminated stale, such a one as Hero.

D. John. What proof shall I make of that?

Bora. Proof enough to misuse the Prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?

D. John. Only to despite them I will endeavour anything.

Bora. Go, then; find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the Count Claudio alone; tell them that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the Prince and Claudio—as in love of your brother's honour, who hath made this match, and his friend's reputation, who is thus like to be cozen'd vith the semblance of a maid—that you have discover'd thus. They-will scarcely believe this without trial; offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber window; hear me call Margaret Heio; hear Margaret teim me Borachio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding-for in the meantime I will so fashion the matter that Hero shall be absent-and there shall appear such seeming truth of Heio's disloyalty that jealousy shall be call'd assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

D. John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand duca...

Bora. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me. 50 D. John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Leonato's orchard.

Enter BENEDICK, alone.

Bene. Boy!

Boy. [Within] Signior?

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. [Above, at chamber window] I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that; but I would have thee hence and here again. [Boy brings book: Exit I do much wonder that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will. after he hath laugh'd at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn by falling in love; and such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe; I have known when he would have walk'd ten mile afoot to see a good armour, and now will he he ten nights awake carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain and to the purpose, like an honest man and a soldier, and now is he turn'd orthography; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted, and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not. I will not be swom but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well; another is wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain: wise, or I'll none: virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the Prince and Monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour. IW thdraws.

Enter Don Pedro, Leonato, and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music? Claud. Yea, my good lord. How still the evening is,

As hush'd on purpose to grace harmony! D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord; the music ended.

We'll fit the kid-fox with a pennyworth, 38

Enter Balthasar, with music.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthasar, we'll hear that song again.

Balth. O, good my lord, tax not so bad a voice

To slander music any more than once. D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellenc To put a strange face on his own perfection. I pray thee sing, and let me woo no more. Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will Since many a wooer doth commence his suit To her he thinks not worthy; yet he woos; Yet will he swear he loves.

Nay, pray thee, come; D. Pedro. Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,

Do it in notes. Balth. Note this before my notes: There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting

D. Pedro. Why, these are very crotchets that he speaks;

Note notes, forsooth, and nothing! [Music. Bene. Now, divine air! now is his soul ravish'd. Is it not strange that sheeps' guts should hale souls out of men's bodies? Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

Balthasar sings.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more, Men were deceivers ever, One foot in sea and one on shore. To one thing constant never. Then sigh not so, but let them go, And be you blithe and bonny: Converting all your sounds of woe Into Hey nonny nonny.

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe Of dumps so dull and heavy: The fraud of men was ever so, Since summer first was leavy. Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song. Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

Claud. Ha, no; no, faith; thou sing'st well enough for a shift.

Bene. An he had been a dog that should have howl'd thus, they would have hang'd him; and I pray God his bad voice bode no mischief. I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry; dost thou hear, Balthasar? I pray thee get us some excellent music; for to-morrow night we would have it at the Lady Hero's chamber window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so; farewell. [Exit Balthasarl Come hither, Leonato. What was it you told me of to-day-that your niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedick?

Claud. O ay; stalk on, stalk on; the fowl sits. I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful that she should so dote on Signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seem'd ever to abhor.

Bene. Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner 7

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it; but that she loves him with an enraged affection-it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God, counterfeit! There was never counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

65

Claud. Bait the hook well; this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit you-you heard my daughter tell you

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me; I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Bene. I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it; knavery cannot, sure, hide nimself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath ta'en th' infection; hold it up. D. Pedro. Hath she made ber affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No; and swears she never will; that's her torment. 116 'Tis true, indeed; Claud. so your daughter says. 'Shall I,' says she 'that have so oft encount'red him with scorn, write to him that I love him?'

Leon. This says she now, when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be un twenty times a night; and there will she sit in her smock till she have writ a sheet of paper. My daughter tells us all. 123 Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper,

I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O, when she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found 'Benedick' and 'Beatrice' between the sheet!

Claud. That.

Leon. O, she tore the letter into a thousand haltpence; rail'd at herself that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her. 'I measure him' says she 'by my own spirit; for I should flout him if he writ to me; yea, though I love him, I should.' 133 Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses-'O sweet Benedick!

God give me patience!'

Leon. She doth indeed; my daughter says so; and the ecstasy hath so much overborne her that my daughter is sometime afeard she will do a desperate outrage to herself. It is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not Claud. To what end? He would make but a sport of it, and to ment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady, and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In everything but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one that blood hath the victory. am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daff'd all other respects and made her half myself. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what a will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you? Claud. Hero thinks surely she will die; for she says she will die if he love her not; and she will die ere she make her love known; and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well; if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible spirit.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath, indeed, a good outward happiness. Claud. Before God, and in my mind, very wise!

D. Pedro. He doth, indeed, show some sparks that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you; and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise, for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, 'a must necessarily keep peace; if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord; let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible; she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear further of it by your daughter; let it cool the while. I love Benedick well; and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? Dinner is ready.

Claud. If he do not dote on her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. Let there be the same net spread for her; and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter; that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato. Bene. [Coming forward] This can be no trick: the conference was sadly borne; they have the truth of this from Hero: they seem to pity the lady; it seems her affections have their full bent. Love me! Why, it must be required. I hear how I am censur'd: they say I will bear myself proudly if I perceive the love come from her; they say, too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. I did never thin- to marry. I must not seem proud; happy are they that hear their detractions and can put them to mending. They say the lady is fair; 'tis a truth, I can bear them witness; and virtuous; 'tis so, I cannot reprove it; and wise, but for loving me. By my troth, it is no addition to her wit; nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with ner. may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me because I have railed so long against marriage; but doth not the appetite alter : A man loves the meat in his youth that he cannot endure in his age. Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? No; the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor. I did not think I should live till I were married. Here comes Beatrice. By this day, she's a fair lady; I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter BEATRICE.

Beat. Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Fal. Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks than you take pains to thank me; if it had been painful, I would not have

Bene. You take pleasure, then, in the message?

Beat. Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and choke a daw withal. You have no stomach, signior; fare vou well.

Bene. Ha! 'Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner '-there's a double meaning in that. 'I took no more pains for those thanks than you took pains to thank me '-that's as much as to say 'Any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks'. If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain: if I do not love her. I am a Jew. [Exit. I will go get her picture.

ACT THREE

Scene I. Leonato's orchard.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee to the parlour;

There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice Proposing with the Prince and Claudio. Whisper her ear, and tell her I and Ursula Walk in the orchard, and our whole dis-

My talk to thee must be how Benedick 20 Is sick in love with Beatrice. Of this matter trothed lord. Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it.

Urs. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

Hero. No; not to be so odd and from all fashions.

As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable: But who dare tell her so? If I should speak.

She would mock me into air; O, she would laugh me

Out of myself, press me to death with wit! Therefore let Benedick, like cover'd fire. Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly. It were a better death than die with mocks. Which is as bad as die with tickling. 80

Scene II. Leonato's house.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and LEONATO.

D. Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummate, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claud. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if

D. Pedro. Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage as to show a child his n w coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth; he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him; he hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. 12

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have been. Leon. So say I; methinks you are sadder. Claud. I hope he be in love.

D. Pedro. Hang him, truant! There's no true drop of blood in him to be truly touch'd with love; if he be sad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the toothache.

D. Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it! Claud. You must hang it first and draw

D. Pedro. What! sigh for the toothache? Leon. Where is but a humour or a worm. Bene. Well, every one can master a grief but he that has it.

Claud. Yet, say I, he is in love.

D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as to be a Dutchman today, a Frenchman to-morrow; or in the shape of two countries at once, as a German from the waist downward, all slops, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: 'a brushes his hat o' mornings; what should that bode?

D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No. but the barber's man hath been seen with him; and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuff'd tennis-

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Pedro. Nay, 'a rubs himself with civet. Can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That's as much as to say the sweet youth's in love.

D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he wont to wash his face?

D. Pedro. Yea, or to paint himself? For the which I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lute-string, and now govern'd by stops.

D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him; conclude, conclude, he is in Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him. D. Pedro. That would I know too; I warrant, one that knows him not. Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and, in despite of all, dies for him.

D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her

Bene. Yet is this no charm for the toothache. Old signior, walk aside with me; I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato. D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice; and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter DON JOHN

D. John. My lord and brother, God save sequel. you!

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

D. John. If your leisure serv'd, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

D. John. If it please you; yet Count Claudio may hear, for what I would speak of concerns him.

D. Pedro. What's the matter?

D. John. [To Claudio] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

D. Pedro. You know he does.

D. John, I know not that, when he knows what I know.

Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.

D. John. You may think I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath holp to effect your ensuing marriage-surely suit ill spent, and labour ill bestowed.

D. Pedro. Why, what's the matter? 89 D. John. I came hither to tell you; and. circumstances short'ned, for she has been too long a talking of, the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who? Hero?

D. John. Even she-Leonato's Hero. your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Disloval?

D. John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness: I could say she were worse; think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant; go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber window ent'red, even the night before her wedding-day. If you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

Claud. May this be so? D. Pedro. I will not think it.

D. John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know. If you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see anything to-night why I should not marry her, to-morrow in the congregation where I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And, as I wooed for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace

D. John. I will disparage her no farther till you are my witnesses; bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned! Claud. O mischief strangely thwarting!

D. John. O plague right well prevented! So will you say when you have seen the [Exeunt.

Scene III. A street.

Enter DOGBERRY and his compartner VERGES, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the 80 Prince's watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, my will, much more a man who hath any neighbour Dogberry.

Dogb. First, who think you the most desartless man to be constable?

1 Watch. Hugh Oatcake, sir, or George

Seacoal; for they can write and read. Dogb. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal. God hath bless'd you with a good name. To be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

2 Watch. Both which, Master Constable— Dogb. You have; I knew it would be Well, for your favour, sir, your answer. why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading. let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore bear you the lantern. This is your charge: you shall comprehend all vagrom men; you are to bid any man stand, in the Prince's name.

2 Watch. How if 'a will not stand? Dogb. Why, then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the Prince's subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the Prince's subjects. You shall also make he noise in the streets; for for the watch to babble and to talk is most tolerable and not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should offend; only, have a care that your bills be not stol'n. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

2 Watch. How if they will not? Dogb. Why, then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir. Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

2 Watch. If we know him to be a thief. shall we not lay hands on him?

Dogb. Truly, by your office you may, but I think they that touch pitch will be defil'd; the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse and bid her

2 Watch. How if the nurse be asleep and will not hear us?

Dogb. Why, then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it baes will never answer a calf when he bleats.

Verg. 'Tis very true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge: you, constable, are to present the Prince's own person; if you meet the Prince in the night. you may stay him.

Verg. Nay, by'r lady, that I think 'a cannot

Dogb. Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statues, he may stay him; marry, not without the Prince be willing; for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By'r lady, I tlank it be so. Dogb. Ha, ah, ha! Well, masters, good night; an there be any matter of weight chances, call up me; keep your fellows' counsels and your own, and good night. Come, neighbour.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge; let us go sit here upon the church bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dogb. One word more, honest neighbours: I pray you watch about Signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil tonight. Adieu; be vigitant, I beseech you. [Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What, Conrade!

2 Watch [Aside] Peace, stir not.

Bora. Conrade, I say !

Con. Here, man, I am at thy elbow. Bora. Mass, and my elbow itch'd; I thought there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that: and now forward with thy tale. Bora. Stand thee close then under this penthouse, for it drizzles rain; and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee. 2 Watch. [Aside] Some treason, masters;

yet stand close. Bora. Therefore know I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats. Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldst rather ask if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirm'd. Thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say the fool's the fool. But seest thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

2 Watch. [Aside] I know that Deformed; 'a has been a vile thief this seven year; 'a goes up and down like a gentleman; I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody? Con. No; 'twas the vane on the house. Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is, how giddly 'a turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five and thirty, sometimes fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the reechy painting, sometime like god Bel's priests in the old church-window, sometime like the shaven Hercules in the smirch'd worm-caten tapestry, where his codpiece seems as massy as his club? 120

Con. All this I see; and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so neither; but know that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the Lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her mistress' chamberwindow, bids me a thousand times good night—I tell this tale vilely. I should first tell thee how the Prince, Claudio, and my master, planted and placed and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio; but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first possess'd them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but thiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enrag'd; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw o'er night, and send her home again without a husband.

2 Watch. We charge you in the Prince's name, stand.

1 Watch. Call up the right Master Constable; we have here recover'd the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

2 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them; I know him, 'a wears a lock. 155

Con. Masters, masters!

2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters-

1 Watch. Never speak, we charge you; let us obey you to go with us.

Bera. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. Hero's apartment.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well. [Exit Ursula. Marg. Troth, I think your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear

Marg. By my troth's not so good; and I warrant your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another; I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought blowner; and your gown's a most rate fashion, i' faith. I saw the Duchess of Milan's gown that they praise so.

Hero. O, that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth's but a night-gown in respect of yours—cloth o' gold, and cuts, and lac'd with silver, set with pearls, down sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fie upon thee! art not ashamed? Marg. Of what, lady, of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think you would have me say 'saving your reverence, a husband'; an bad thinking do not wiest true speaking!'ll offend nobody. Is there any harm in 'the heavier for a husband'? None, I think, an it be the right husband and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy. Ask my Lady Beatrice else, here she comes.

Enter BEATRICE.

Hero. Good morrow, coz.

Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero. 35 Hero. Why, how now! do you speak in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg. Clap's into 'Light o' love ': that goes without a burden. Do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

Beat. Ye light o' love with your heels! Then if your husband have stables enough. you'll see he shall lack no barnes.

Marg. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill. Heigh-ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband? Beat. For the letter that begins them all—H.

Marg. Well, an you be not turn'd Turk. there's no more sailing by the star.

Beat. What means the fool, trow? Marg. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart's desire!

Hero. These gloves the Count sent me; they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stuff'd, cousin, I cannot smell. Marg. A maid and stuff'd! There's goodly catching of cold. Beat. O. God help me! God help me! How long have you profess'd apprehension? Marg. Ever since you left it. Doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not seen enough; you should wear it in your cap. By my troth, I am sick.

Marg. Get you some of this distill'd Carduus Benedictus, and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a qualm.

Hero. There thou prick'st her with a thistle.

Beat. Benedictus! why Benedictus? You have some moral in this 'Benedictus'.

Marg. Moral? No, by my troth, I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy-thistle. You may think, perchance, that I think you are in love. Nay, by'r lady, I am not such a fool to think what I list; nor I list not to think what I can; nor, indeed, I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love. Yet Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man; he swore he would never marry, and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging. And how you may be converted I know not; but methinks you look with your eyes as other women do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?

Maig. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter URSULA.

Count, Signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

Meg, good Ursula.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Scene V. Leonato's house.

Enter LEONATO, with DOGBERRY and VERGES.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbour?

Dogb. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you that decerns you nearly.

Leon. Brief, I pray you; for you see it is a busy time with me.

Dogb. Marry, this it is, sir.

Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends? Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off the matter—an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God I am as honest as any man living that is an old man and no honester than I.

Dogb. Comparisons are odorous; palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious. Dogb. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor Duke's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship. Leon. All thy tediousness on me, ah? Dogb. Yea, an 'twere a thousand pound more than 'tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship as of any man in the city; and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, ha' ta'en a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

Dogb. A good old man, sir, he will be talking; as they say 'When the age is in the wit is out'. God help us, it is a world to see! Well said, i' faith, neighbour Verges; well, God's a good man; an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind. An honest soul, i' faith, sir, by my troth he is, as ever broke bread; but God is to be worshipp'd; all men are not alike; alas, good neighbour!

Leon. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

Dogb. Gifts that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Dogb. One word, sir: our watch, sir, Urs. Madam, withdraw; the Prince, the have indeed comprehended two aspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination yourself,

Hero. Help to dress me, good coz, good and bring it me; I am now in great haste, [Exeunt. as it may appear unto you.

Dogb. It shall be suffigance.

Leon. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. I'll wait upon them; I am ready. Exeunt Leonato and Messenger. Dogb. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Seacoal; bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol; we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogb. We will spare for no wit. I warrant von: here's that shall drive some of them to a non-come; only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gaol. [Exeunt.

ACT FOUR

SCENE I. A church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar Francis, Claudio, Benedick, HERO, BEATRICE, and Attendants.

Leon. Come, Friar Francis, be brief; only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

Claud. No.

Leon. To be married to her, friar! You come to marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoined, I charge you, on your souls, to utter it.

Claud. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None, my lord.

Friar. Know you any, Count?

Leon. I dare make his answer, None. Claud. O, what men dare do! What men may do! What men daily do, not knowing what they do!

15

Bene. How now! Interjections? Why then, some be of laughing, as, ah, ha, he! Claud. Stand thee by, friar. Father, by vour leave:

Will you with free and unconstrained soul Give me this maid, your daughter?

Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her

Claud. And what have I to give you back whose worth

May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her

Claud. Sweet Prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.

There, Leonato, take her back again; Give not this rotten orange to your friend: She's but the sign and semblance of her honour.

Behold how like a maid she blushes here. O, what authority and show of truth

Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Comes not that blood as modest evidence To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,

All you that see her, that she were a maid By these exterior shows? But she is none: She knows the heat of a luxurious bed: 40 Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Leon. What do you mean, my lord?

Claud. Not to be married. Not to knit my soul to an approved wanton. Leon. Dear, my lord, if you, in your own proof.

Have vanquish'd the resistance of her youth,

And made defeat of her virginity-Claud. I know what you would say. If I have known her. You will say she did embrace me as a husband.

And so extenuate the 'forehand sin. No, Leonato,

I never tempted her with word too large But, as a brother to his sister, show'd Bashful sincerity and comely love.

Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?

Claud. Out on thee! Seeming! I will write against it.

You seem to me as Dian in her orb, As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown; But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamp'red animals That rage in savage sensuality.

Hero. Is my lord well, that he doth speak so wide?

Leon. Sweet Prince, why speak not you? What should I speak? D. Pedro. I stand dishonour'd that have gone about To link my dear friend to a common stale.

Leon. Are these things spoken, or do I but dream?

D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Bene. This looks not like a nuptial. Hero. True! O God! Claud. Leonato, stand I here?

Is this the Prince? Is this the Prince's brother?

Is this face Hero's? Are our eyes our own? Leon. All this is so; but what of this, my lord?

Claud. Let me but move one question to your daughter;

And, by that fatherly and kindly power That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my Hero. O. God defend me! how am I beset! What kind of catechising call you this? Claud. To make you answer truly to your

Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name

With any just reproach?

Marry, that can Hero: Claud. Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue. What man was he talk'd with you yesternight

Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?

Now, if you are a maid, answer to this. Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour. my lord.

D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden. Leonato.

I am sorry you must hear: upon mine honour.

Myself, my brother, and this grieved Count, Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night.

Talk with a ruffian at her chamber window: Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain.

Confess'd the vile encounters they have had A thousand times in secret.

D. John. Fie, fie! they are not to be nam'd, my lord,

Not to be spoke of;

There is not chastity enough in language Without offence to utter them. Thus. pretty lady.

I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Claud. O Hero, what a Hero hadst thou

If half thy outward graces had been placed About thy thoughts and counsels of thy heart!

But fare thee well, most foul, most fair! Farewell.

Thou pure implety and impious purity! For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love, And on my eyelids shall conjecture hang, To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm, And never shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me? [Hero swoons.

Beat. Why, how now, cousin! Wherefore sink you down?

D. John. Come, let us go. These things, come thus to light, Smother her spirits up.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, Don John, and Claudio. Bene. How doth the lady?

Dead, I think. Help, uncle! Hero! why, Hero! Uncle! Signior Benedick! Friar!

Leon. O Fate, take not away thy heavy hand!

Death is the fairest cover for her shame That may be wish'd for. Beat.

Friar. Have comfort, lady. Leon. Dost thou look up?

Friar. Yea; wherefore should she not? Leon. Wherefore! Why, doth not every earthly thing

79 Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny

The story that is printed in her blood? Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes; For, did I think thou wouldst not quickly die.

Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shames,

Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches,

Strike at thy life. Griev'd I I had but one? Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame? O, one too much by thee! Why had I one? Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes? 130 Why had I not, with charitable hand, Took up a beggar's issue at my gates.

Who smirched thus and mir'd with infamy, I might have said 'No part of it is mine: This shame derives itself from unknown loins '

But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd.

And mine that I was proud on; mine so much

That I myself was to myself not mine. Valuing of her-why, she, O, she is fall'n Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea Hath drops too few to wash her clean again. And salt too little which may season give To her foul tainted flesh!

Bene. Sir, sir, be patient. For my part, I am so attir'd in wonder,

I know not what to say. Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is belied! Bene. Lady, were you her bedtellow last night?

Beat. No, truly not; although, until last night.

I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.

Leon. Confirm'd, confirm'd? O. that is stronger made Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron! Would the two princes he; and Claudio lie.

Who lov'd her so, that, speaking of her foulness,

Wash'd it with tears? Hence from her! let her die.

Friar. Hear me a little; For I have only been silent so long. And given way unto this course of tortune. By noting of the lady: I have mark'd A thousand blushing apparitions

To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames angel whiteness beat away those blushes: How now, cousin Hero! And in her eye there hath appear'd a fire

To burn the errors that these princes hold Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool; Trust not my reading nor my observations, Which with experimental seal doth warrant The tenour of my book; trust not my age, My reverence, calling, nor divinity, 168 If this sweet lady he not guiltless here Under some bitting error.

Leon. Friar, it cannot be. 170
Thou seest that all the grace that she hath

Is that she will not add to her damnation A sin of perjury; she not denies it.
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
That which appear in proper paled page 2

That which appears in proper nakedness?

Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of?

176

Hero. They know that do accuse me; I know none.

If I know more of any man alive

Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant, 179

Let all my sins lack mercy! O my father, Prove you that any man with me convers'd At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight Maintain'd the change of words with any Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death.

Friar. There is some strange misprision in the princes.

Bene. Two of them have the very bent of honour;

And if their wisdoms be misled in this, The practice of it lives in John the bastard, Whose spirits toil in frame of villainies. Leon. I know not. If they speak but truth of her, 190

These hands shall tear her; if they wrong

her honour,
The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of

mine,
Nor age so eat up my invention,
Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
Nor my bad life reft me so much of

friends,
But they shall find awak'd in such a kind
Both strength of limb and policy of mind,
Ability in means and choice of friends, 199
To quit me of them throughly.

Friar. Pause awhile,
And let my counsel sway you in this case.
Your daughter here the princes left for dead:

Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it that she is dead indeed;
Maintain a mourning ostentation,
And on your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

Leon. What shall become of this? What will this do?

Friar. Marry, this, well carried, shall on her behalf

Change slander to remorse; that is some good.

But not for that dream I on this strange course,

But on this travail look for greater birth. She dying, as it must be so maintain'd, Upon the instant that she was accus'd, 215 Shall be lamented, pitied, and excus'd, Of every hearer; for it so falls out

That what we have we prize not to the Whiles we enjoy it, but being lack'd and lost,

Why, then we rack the value, then we find The virtue that possession would not show

Whiles it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio.

When he shall hear she died upon his words,

Th' idea of her life shall sweetly creep Into his study of imagination, 225 And every lovely organ of her life Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit.

More moving, delicate, and full of life, Into the eye and prospect of his soul, Than when she liv'd indeed. Then shall he

If ever love had interest in his liver,
And wish he had not so accused her—
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event in better shape
Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy.
And if it sort not well, you may conceal
her.

As best befits her wounded reputation, In some reclusive and religious life, Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you;

And though you know my inwardness and love

Is very much unto the Prince and Claudio, Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this As secretly and justly as your soul Should with your body.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief The smallest twine may lead me. 250

Friar. 'Tis well consented. Presently away;

205 For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.

Come, lady, die to live; this wedding day Perhaps is but prolong'd; have patience and endure.

[Exeunt all but Benedick and Beatrice. on Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while? 255

Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer. Bene. I will not desire that.

Beat. You have no reason: I do it freely.

Bene. Surely I do believe your fair cousin is wronged.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her! Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?

Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.

Bene. May a man do it?

Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours. Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you. Is not that strange?

264

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not. It were as possible for me to say I lov'd nothing so well as you; but believe me not, and yet I lie not; I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing. I am sorry for my consin.

Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest

Beat. Do not swear, and eat it.

Bene. I will swear by it that you love me: and I will make him eat it that says I love Beat. Will you not eat your word? Bene. With no sauce that can be devised farewell. to it; I protest I love thee.

Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!

Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice? 280 Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart? Beat. I love you with so much of my heart that none is left to protest.

Bene. Come, bid me do anything for thee. Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. Ha! not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.

Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice. 290
Beat. I am gone though I am here;

there is no love in you; nay, I pray you, let me go.

Bene. Beatrice-

Beat. In faith, I will go.

Bene. We'll be friends first.

Bcat. You dare easier be friends with me than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?

Beat. Is 'a not approved in the height a villain that hath slandered, scorned, dishonoured, my kinswoman? O that I were a man! What! bear her in hand until they come to take hands, and then with public accusation, uncover'd slander, unmitigated rancour-O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Hear me, Beatrice. Beat. Talk with a man out at a window!

A proper saying!

Bene. Nay, but, Beatrice—

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Beat. Sweet Hero! She is wrong'd, she is sland'red, she is undone. Bene. Beat-

Beat. Princes and Counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, Count Comfect; a sweet gallant, surely! O that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into curtsies. valour into compliment, and men are only turn'd into tongue, and trim ones too. He is now as valiant as Hercules that only tells a lie and swears it. I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

Bene. Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.

Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

Bene. Think you in your soul the Count Claudio hath wrong'd Hero?

Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought or a soul.

Bene. Enough, I am engag'd: I will challenge him; I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of Go comfort your 275 me, so think of me. cousin; I must say she is dead; and so, [Exeunt.

Scene II. A prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton. in gowns; and the Watch, with CONRADE and Borachio.

Dogb. Is our whole dissembly appear'd? Verg. O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton!

Sexton. Which be the malefactors?

Dogb. Marry, that am I and my partner. Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examin'd? Let them come before Master Constable.

Dogb. Yea, marry, let them come before What is your name, friend?

Bora. Borachio. Dogb. Pray write down Borachio. Yours. sirrah?

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.

Dogb. Write down Master Gentleman Conrade. Masters, do you serve God? 15

Con. Yea, sir, we hope. Bora.

Dogb. Write down that they hope they serve God; and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains! Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves, and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

Con. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

you; but I will go about with him. Come thec by good witness. I am a wise fellow: you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear: sir, I say to you it is thought you are false knaves.

Bora. Sir, I say to you we are none.

Dogb. Well, stand aside. Fore God. they are both in a tale. Have you writ down that they are none?

Sexton. Master Constable, you go not the way to examine; you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Dogb. Yea, marry, that's the eftest way. Let the watch come forth. Masters, I charge you in the Prince's name, accuse these men.

1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the Prince's brother, was a villain. Dogb. Write down Prince John a villain. Why, this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

Bora. Master Constable-

Dogb. Pray thee, fellow, peace; I do not like thy look, I promise thee.

Sexton. What heard you him say else? 2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John for accusing the Lady Hero wrongfully.

Dogb. Flat burglary as ever was com-

Verg. Yea, by mass, that it is.

Sexton. What else, fellow?

1 Watch. And that Count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry Dogb. O villain! thou will be condemn'd into everlasting redemption for this.

Sexton. What else?

2 Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stol'n away; Hero was in this manner accus'd, in this very manner refus'd, and upon the grief of this suddenly died. Master Constable, let these men be bound and brought to Leonato's; I will go before and show him their examination. 61 Exit.

Dogb. Come, let them be opinion'd. Verg. Let them be in the hands.

Con. Off, coxcomb.

Dogb. God's my life, where's the sexton? Let him write down the Prince's officer coxcomb. Come, bind them. Thou naughty varlet!

Con. Away! you are an ass, you are an

Dogb. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years? O that he were here to write me down an ass! But, masters, remember that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass. No, thou villain, thou My griets cry louder than advertisement.

Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure art full of piety, as shall be prov'd upon and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder; and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to: and a rich fellow enough, go to: and a fellow that hath had losses; and one that hath two gowns, and everything handsome about him. Bring him away. O that I had been writ down an ass!

Scene I. Before Leonato's house.

Fnier LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself,

And 'tis not wisdom thus to second grief Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee cease thy counsel. Which falls into mine ears as profitless As water in a sieve. Give not me counsel: Nor let no comforter delight mine ear But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine.

Bring me a father that so lov'd his child. Whose joy of her is overwhelm'd like mine. And bid him speak of patience; Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,

And let it answer every strain for strain; As thus for thus, and such a guef for such.

In every lineament, branch, shape, and form.

If such a one will smile and stroke his beard, And sorrow wag, cry 'hem!' when he should groan, Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk

With candle-wasters—bring him yet to me, And I of him will gather patience.

hastily. Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

D. Pedio. Good den, good den.

Good day to both of you. Claud. Leon. Hear you, my lords!

D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato. Leon. Some haste, my lord! Well, fare you well, my lord.

Are you so hasty now? Well, all is one. D. Pedro. Nav, do not quarrel with

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling,

Some of us would lie low.

Enter BENEDICK.

Claud. Now, signior, what news? Bene. Good day, my lord.

TIO

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had lik'd to have had our two noses snapp'd off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt we should have been too young for them.

Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valour. I came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee: for we are high-proof melancholy and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?

Bene. It is in my scabbard; shall I draw

it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit. I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels-draw to pleasure us.

D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he 131 looks pale. Art thou sick or angry? Claud. What, courage, man! What though care kill'd a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me. I pray you choose another subject.

Claud. Nay, then, give him another staff;

this last was broke cross.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more: I think he be angry indeed.

Claud. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.

Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear? Claud. God bless me from a challenge! Bene. [Aside to Claudio] You are a villain: I jest not; I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare. Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have kill'd a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast? a feast? 149 Claud. I' faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's head and a capon, the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught. Shall I not find a woodcock too?

Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit the other day. I said thou prais'd thy wit the other day. I said thou hadst a fine wit. 'True,' said she 'a fine little one.' 'No,' said I 'a great wit.' 'Right,' says she 'a great gross one.' 'Nay,' said I 'a good wit.' 'Just,' said she 'it hurts nobody.' 'Nay,' said I 'the false report; moreover, they have committed the gentleman is wise.' 'Certain,' said she 'a untruths; secondarily, they have belied a lady; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; the tongues.' 'That I believe,' said she 'for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning. There's a double tongue: there's two tongues.' Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet, at last, she concluded, with a sigh, thou wast the proper'st man in Italy.

Claud. For the which she wept heartily.

and said she cared not.

D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly. old man's daughter told us all.

Claud. All, all; and, moreover, 'God saw him when he was hid in the garden'.

D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?

Claud. Yea, and text underneath, 'Here dwells Benedick the married man'?

Bene. Fare you well, boy; you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gossinlike humour: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not. My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you. I must discontinue your company. Your brother the bastard is fled from Messina. You have among you kill'd a sweet and innocent lady. For my Lord Lackbeard there, he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him.

[Exit Benedick.

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.

Claud. In most profound earnest; and I'll warrant you for the love of Beatrice.

D. Pedro. And hath challeng'd thee?

Claud. Most sincerely. D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is when he goes in his doublet and hose and leaves off his wit!

Claud. He is then a giant to an ape; but then is an ape a doctor to such a man.

D. Pedro. But, soft you, let me be; pluck up, my heart, and be sad. Did he not say my brother was fled?

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch. with Conrade and Borachio.

Dogb. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance; nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be look'd

D. Pedro. How now! two of my biother's men bound-Borachio one.

Claud. Hearken after their offence, my thirdly, they have verified unjust things; and to conclude, they are lying knaves. 208

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done; thirdly, I ask thee what's their offence; sixth and lastly, why they are committed; and to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

Claud. Rightly reasoned, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.

D. Pedro. Who have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? This learned constable is too cunning to be understood. What's your offence?

Bora. Sweet Prince, let me go no farther to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this Count kill me. I have deceived even your very eyes. What your wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man how Don John your brother incensed me to slander the Lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgrac'd her, when you should marry her My villainy they have upon record; which I had rather seal with my death than repeat over to my shame. The lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.

D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?

Claud. I have drunk poison whiles he utter'd it.

to this?

practice of it.

D. Pedro. He is compos'd and fram'd of treachery,

And fled he is upon this villainv.

Claud. Sweet Hero, now thy image doth appear

In the rare semblance that I lov'd it first. Dogb. Come, bring away the plaintiffs; by this time our sexton hath reformed Signior Leonato of the matter. masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.

Verg. Here, here comes Master Signior Leonato and the sexton too.

Re-enter LEONATO and ANTONIO, with the Sexton.

Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eves. That when I note another man like him

I may avoid him. Which of these is he? Bora. If you would know your wronger, look on me.

Leon. Art thou the slave that with thy breath hast kill'd Mine innocent child?

Bora.

Yea, even I alone. 250 Leon. No, not so, villain; thou beliest thyself;

Here stand a pair of honourable men. A third is fled, that had a hand in it.

I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death;

Record it with your high and worthy deeds; 'Twas bravely done, if you bethink you of it.

Claud. I know not how to pray your patience.

Yet I must speak. Choose your revenge vourself:

Impose me to what penance your invention Can lay upon my sin; yet sinn'd I not 260 But in mistaking.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I; And yet, to satisfy this good old man. I would bend under any heavy weight That he'll enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live-

That were impossible; but, I pray you toth.

Possess the people in Messina here How innocent she died; and, if your love Can labour aught in sad invention.

Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb. And sing it to her bones: sing it to-night. To-morrow morning come you to my house; And since you could not be my son-in-law, Be yet my nephew. My brother hath a daughter,

D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on Almost the copy of my child that's dead; And she alone is heir to both of us.

Bora. Yea, and paid me richly for the Give her the right you should have giv'n her cousin,

And so dies my revenge. Claud. O noble sir!

Your over-kindness doth wring tears from

I do embrace your offer; and dispose 280 For henceforth of poor Claudio.

Leon. To-morrow, then, I will expect your coming; To-night I take my leave. This naughty

Shall face to face be brought to Margaret, Who, I believe, was pack'd in all this wrong,

Hir'd to it by your brother.

Bora. No, by my soul, she was not; Nor knew not what she did when she spoke to me: But always hath been just and virtuous

In anything that I do know by her. Dogb. Moreover, sir, which indeed is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass; I beseech vou. let it be rememb'red in his punishment. And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed; they say he wears a key in his ear and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God's name; the which he hath us'd so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake. Pray you examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dogb. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth, and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dogb. God save the foundation!

Leon. Go; I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.

Dogb. I leave an arrant knave with your worship: which I beseech your worship to correct yourself, for the example of others. God keep your worship! I wish your worship well; God restore you to health! I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wish'd, God prohibit it! Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges. Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant. Farewell, my lords; we look for you to-morrow.

D. Pedro. We will not fail. Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero. Exeunt Don Pedro and Claudio.

Leon. [To the Watch] Bring you these fellows on. We'll talk with Margaret How her acquaintance grew with this lewd [Exeunt severally.

Scene II. Leonato's orchard.

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet Mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Marg. To have no man come over me! Why, shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth: it catches.

Marg. And yours as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman; and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice. I give thee the bucklers. 16

Marg. Give us the swords: we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids. 19 there's not one wise man among twenty that Marg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, will praise himself.

who, I think, hath legs. IExit Margaret. Bene. And therefore will come.

> The god of love, That sits above.

And knows me, and knows me, How pitiful I deserve-

I mean in singing; but in loving-Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of panders, and a whole bookful of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turn'd over and over as my poor self in love. Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried; I can find out no rhyme to 'lady' but 'baby'—an innocent rhyme; for 'scorn', 'horn'—a hard rhyme; for 'school', 'fool'—a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings. No. I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.

Enter BEATRICE.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I call'd thee?

Beat. Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O, stay but till then! 40 Beat. 'Then' is spoken; fare you well now. And yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came, which is, with knowing what hath pass'd between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkiss'd.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge; and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintain'd so politic a state of evil that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love—a good epithet! I do suffer love indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think; alas, poor heart! If you spite it for my sake, I will spite it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates. 62 Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession:

Scene 21

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that liv'd in the time of good neighbours; if a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument than the bell rings and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you? Bene. Question: why, an hour in clamour, and a quarter in rheum. Therefore is it most expedient for the wise, if Don Worm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary, to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for prais ng myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy. And now tell me, how doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bens. Serve God, love me, and mend; there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter URSULA.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder's old coil at home. It is proved my Lady Hero h.th been falsely accus'd, the Prince and Claudio mightily abus'd; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?
Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's. 90
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. A churchyard.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and three or four with tapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato? A Lord. It is, my lord.
Claud. [Reads from a scroll]

Epitaph.

'Done to death by slanderous tongues Was the Hero that here lies; Death, in guerdon of her wrongs, 5 Gives her fame which never dies. So the life that died with shame Lives in death with glorious fame,'

Hang thou there upon the tomb, Praising her when I am dumb. 10 Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

Song.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go.
Midnight, assist our moan;

Heavily, heavily.
Graves, yawn, and yield your dead,
Till death be uttered,

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night. Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters; put your torches out;

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day,

Before the wheels of Phœbus, round about Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey. Thanks to you all, and leave us. Fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters; each his several way.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other weeds;

And then to Leonato's we will go. Claud. And Hymen now with luckier issue speed's

Than this for whom we rend'red up this woe.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Margaret, Ursula, Friar Francis, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the Prince and Claudio, who accus'd her

Upon the error that you heard debated. But Margaret was in some fault for this, Although against her will, as it appears In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sorts so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforcid

To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all.

Withdraw into a chamb, by yourselves; And when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

The Prince and Claudio promis'd by this

To visit me. You know your office, brother: You must be father to your brother's daughter,

10 And give her to young Claudio.

[Exeunt Ladies.

Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

Friar. To do what, signior? Bene. To bind me, or undo me—one of Bene. To bind me, or undo me—one of them.

Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior,

163

Your niece regards me with an eve of favour.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her. I am your husband, if you like of me. 'Tis most true.

Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite

Leon. The sight whereof, I think, you had from me,

From Claudio, and the Prince. But what's vour will?

Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. But, for my will, my will is your good will May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd

In the state of honourable marriage; In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

Leon. My heart is with your liking.

Friar. And my help. Here comes the Prince and Claudio.

Enter DON PEDRO and CLAUDIO, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

pood Leon. Good morrow, Prince; morrow, Claudio;

We here attend you. Are you yet determin'd to marry with my brother's To-day daughter?

Claud. I'll hold my mind were she an Ethiope.

Leon. Call her forth, brother; here's the friar ready. D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why.

what's the matter That you have such a February face,

So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness? Claud. I think he thinks upon the savage bull.

Tush, fear not, man; we'll tip thy horns with gold,

And all Europa shall rejoice at thee, As once Europa did at lusty Jove, When he would play the noble beast in love.

Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low; And some such strange bull leap'd your father's cow,

And got a calf in that same noble feat Much like to you, for you have just his bleat.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Claud. For this I owe you. Here comes other reck'nings.

Which is the lady I must seize upon? Ant. This same is she, and I do give you me see your face.

Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take you were in a consumption.

Before this friar, and swear to marry her. 164

Claud. Give me your hand; before the holy friar

Hero. And when I liv'd I was your other wife: [Unmasking.

And when you lov'd you were my other husband.

Claud. Another Hero!

Hero. Nothing certainer. One Hero died defil'd; but I do live,

And, surely as I live, I am a maid.

D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!

Leon. She died, my lord, but whiles her slander liv'd. Friar. All this amazement can I qualify.

When, after that the holy rites are ended. I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death. Meantime let wonder seem familiar. And to the chapel let us presently,

Bene. Soft and fair, friar. Beatrice?

Beat. I answer to that name. [Unmasking] What is your will?

Bene. Do not you love me?

Why no, no more than reason. Reat. Bene. Why, then your uncle, and the Pr.nce, and Claudio,

Have been deceived: they swore you

Beat. Do not you love mo?

Troth no, no more than reason. Bene. Beat. Why, then my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula.

[Exit Antonio. Are much deceiv'd; for they did swear you

Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.

Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

Bene. 'Tis no such matter. Then you do not love me?

Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

Claud. And I'll be sworn upon't that he loves her;

For here's a paper written in his hand, A halting sonnet of his own pure brain, Fashion'd to Beatrice.

Hero. And here's another. Writ in my cousin's hand, stol'n from her pocket.

Containing her affection unto Benedick. 90 Bene. A miracle! here's our own hands against our hearts. Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity.

Beat. I would not deny you; but, by this Claud. Why, then she's mine. Sweet, let good day, I yield upon great persuasion; and partly to save your life, for I was told Bene. Peace: I will stop your mouth. [Kissing her.

Scene 41

D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick the married man?

Bene. I'll tell thee what, Prince: a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour. Dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? No. If a man will be beaten with brains, 'a shall wear nothing handsome about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it: and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion. For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art like to be my kınsman, live unbruis'd, and love my cousin.

Claud. I had well hop'd thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have thee a double dealer; which out of question Strike up, pipers.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends. Let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts and our wives' heels.

Leon. We'll have dancing afterward. Bene. First, of my word; therefore play, music. Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife. There is no staff more reverend than one tipp'd with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is ta'en in flight.

108 And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow. cudgell'd thee out of thy single life, to make I'll devise thee brave punishments for him. [Dance. Exeunt.

THE SCENE: Navarre.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Navarre. The King's park. Enter the King, BEROWNE, LONGAVILLE, and DUMAIN.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives. Live regist'red upon our brazen tombs. And then grace us in the disgrace of death; When, spite of cormorant devouring Time, Th' endeavour of this present breath may

That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge, And make us heirs of all eternity. Therefore, brave conquerors—for so you are That war against your own affections And the huge army of the world's desires-Our late edict shall strongly stand in force: Navarre shall be the wonder of the world; Our court shall be a little Academe. Still and contemplative in living art. You three, Berowne, Dumain, and Longa-

Have sworn for three years' term to live with me

My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes

That are recorded in this schedule here. Your oaths are pass'd; and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down

That violates the smallest branch herein. If you are arm'd to do as sworn to do. Subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep it too.

Long. I am resolv'd; 'tis but a three years' fast. The mind shall banquet, though the body pine.

Fat paunches have lean pates; and dainty hits Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits. Dum. My loving lord. Dumain is mortified.

The grosser manner of these world's delights He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves; To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die. With all these living in philosophy.

Ber. I can but say their protestation over: So much, dear liege, I have already sworn. That is, to live and study here three years. But there are other strict observances. As: not to see a woman in that term. Which I hope well is not enrolled there: And one day in a week to touch no food,

And but one meal on every day beside, 40 The which I hope is not entitled there; And then to sleep but three hours in the night

And not be seen to wink of all the day— When I was wont to think no harm all night.

And make a dark night too of half the day--Which I hope well is not enrolled there. O, these are barren tasks, too haid to keep,

Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep! King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.

Ber. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please: I only swore to study with your Grace, And stay here in your court for three years' space.

Long. You swore to that, Berowne, and to the rest.

Scene 17

Ber. By yea and nay, sir, then I swore in jest.

What is the end of study, let me know. 55 King. Why, that to know which else we should not know.

Ber. Things hid and barr'd, you mean. from common sense?

King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.

Ber. Come on, then, I will swear to study

To know the thing I am forbid to know, 60 As thus: to study where I well may dine, When I to feast expressly am foibid; Or study where to meet some mistress fine. When mistresses from common sense are hid;

Or, having sworn too hard-a-keeping oath, Study to break it, and not break my trotn. If study's gain be thus, and this be so, Study knows that which yet it doth not know.

Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no. Kıng study quite,

And train our intellects to vain delight. Ber. Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain, As painfully to pore upon a book

To seek the light of truth; while truth the Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look Light, seeking light, doth light of light beguile; So, ere you find where light in darkness lies, Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes. Study me how to please the eye indeed, 80 By fixing it upon a fairer eye;

Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heed. And give him light that it was blinded by. Study is like the heaven's glorious sun, That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks;

Small have continual plodders ever won, Save base authority from others' books. These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights That give a name to every fixed star Have no more profit of their shining nights Than those that walk and wot not what they are.

Too much to know is to know nought but fame;

And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he's read, to reason against reading!

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding!

Long. He weeds the corn, and still lets grow the weeding.

Ber. The spring is near, when green geese are a-breeding.

Dum. How follows that?

Ber. Fit in his place and time. Dum. In reason nothing.

Something then in rhyme. Long. Berowne is like an envious sneaping frost That bites the first-born infants of the spring. Ber. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast Before the birds have any cause to sing?

Why should ' joy in any abortive birth? At Christmas I no more desire a rose Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled

But like of each thing that in season grows: So you, to study now it is too late.

Climb o'er the house to unlock the little

King. Well, sit you out; go home, Berowne; adieu. Ber. No, my good lord: I have sworn to stay with you; These be the stops that hinder And though I have for barbarism spoke more > Than for that angel knowledge you can say, Yet confident I'll keep what I have swore, And bide the penance of each three years'

> Give me the paper; let me read the same; And to the strictest decrees I'll write my King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!

Ber. [Reads] 'Item. That no woman shall come within a mile of my court'-Hath this been proclaimed?

Long. Four days ago.

Ber. Let's see the penalty. [Reads] ' -- on pain of losing her tongue." Who devis'd this penalty?

Long. Marry, that did I.

Ber. Sweet lord, and why? Long. To flight them hence with that dread penalty. Ber. A dangerous law against gentility. [Reads] 'Item. If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise.' This article, my liege, yourself must break; For well you know here comes in embassy The French king's daughter, with yourself to speak-

A maid of grace and complete majesty-About surrender up of Aquataine To her decrepit, sick, and bedrid father; Therefore this article is made in vain,

Or vainly comes th' admired princess hither.

King. What say you, lords? Why, this was quite forgot.

Ber. So study evermore is over-shot. 140 While it doth study to have what it would,

167

It doth forget to do the thing it should; And when it hath the thing it hunteth most, 'Tis won as towns with fire-so won, so lost.

King. We must of force dispense with in God for high words.

this decree:

She must lie here on mere necessity. Ber. Necessity will make us all forsworn

Three thousand times within this three years' space;

For every man with his affects is born, Not by might mast'red, but by special grace.

If I break faith, this word shall speak for me:

I am forsworn on mere necessity.

So to the laws at large I write my name; Subscribes.

And he that breaks them in the least degree Stands in attainder of eternal shame. Suggestions are to other as to me But I believe, although I seem so loath. I am the last that will last keep his oath.

But is there no quick recreation granted? King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know, is haunted

With a refined traveller of Spain. A man in all the world's new fashion planted. That hath a mint of phrases in his brain; One who the music of his own vain tongue

Doth ravish like enchanting harmony; 165 A man of complements, whom right and wrong

Dull. Which is the Duke's own person? Ber. This, fellow. What wouldst? Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his Grace's farborough; but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.

Ber. This is he.

Dull. Signior Arme—Arme—commends you. There's villainy abroad; this letter will tell you more.

Cost. Sir, the contempts thereof are as touching me.

King. A letter from the magnificent Armado.

Ber. How low soever the matter, I hope

Long. A high hope for a low heaven. God grant us patience!

Ber. To hear, or forbear hearing?

Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or, to forbear both.

Ber. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to climb in the merriness.

Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Ber. In what manner?

Cost. In manner and form following, sir: all those three: I was seen with her in the manor-house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner-it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman. For the form-in some form.

Ber. For the following, sir?

Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; and God defend the right!

King. Will you hear this letter with attention? 210

Ber. As we would hear an oracle.

Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.

King. [Reads] ' Great deputy, welkin's vicegerent and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's god and body's fost'ring patron'—

Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.

King. [Reads] 'So i'

Cost. It may be so; Lut if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so. King. Peace!

Cost. Be to me, and every man that dares not fight!

King. No words!

Cost. Of other men's secrets. I beseech you.

King. [Reads] 'So it is, besieged with sable-coloured melancholy, I did commend the black oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk. The time When? About the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time When. Now for the ground Which? which, I mean, I walk'd upon; it is ycleped thy park. Then for the place Where? where, I mean, I did encounter that obscene and most prepost'rous event that draweth from my snow-white pen the eboncoloured ink which here thou viewest. beholdest, surveyest, or seest. But to the place Where? It standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden. There did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth,'

Cost. Me?

King, 'that unlettered small-knowing soul,'

King. 'that shallow vassal,'

King. 'with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I, as my ever-esteemed duty pricks me on, have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment, by thy sweet Grace's officer, Antony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation.'

Dull. Me, an't shall please you; I am

Anteny Dull.

King. 'For Jaquenetta—so is the weaker vessel called, which I apprehended with the aforesand swain—I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial Thine, in all compliments of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty,

Don Adriano de Armado.'

Ber. This is not so well as I look'd for, but the best that ever I heard.

King. Ay, the best for the worst. But, sirrah, what say you to this?

Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.

King. Did you hear the proclamation?

Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

267

King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment to be taken with a wench.

Cost. I was taken with none, sir; I was taken with a damsel.

King. Well, it was proclaimed damsel. Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir; she was a virgin.

King. It is so varied too, for it was proclaimed virgin.

Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity; I was taken with a maid.

276

King. This 'maid' will not serve your turn, sir.

Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.

King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.

Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.

King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.

My Lord Berowne, see him delivered o'er; And go we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumain. Ber. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat

These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Sirrah, come on.

240

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir; for true it is I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta as a true girl; and therefore welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again; and till then, sit thee down, sorrow. [Exeunt.

Scene II. The park.

Enter ARMADO and MOTH, his page.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp. 5

Moth. No, no, O Lord, sir, no!

Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenal?

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough signior.

Arm. Why tough signior? Why tough signior?

Moth. Why tender juvenal? Why tender juvenal?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epitheton appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender. 15 Moth. And I, tough signior, as an apper-tinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Aim. Pretty and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. Thou pretty, because little.

Moth. Little pretty, because little.

Wherefore apt?

Aim. And therefore apt, because quick. Moth. Speak you this in my plaise, master?

Arm. In thy condign praise.

Moth. I will praise an eel with the same

Arm. What, that an eel is ingenious?

Moth. That an eel is quick.

Arm. I do say thou art quick in answers;
thou heat'st my blood.

Moth. I am answer'd, sir.

Arm. I love not to be cross'd.

ith Moth. [Asule] He speaks the mere cone82 trary: crosses love not him.

Arm. I have promised to study three methinks Samson had small reason for it. vears with the Duke.

Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir. Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one thrice told?

Arm. I am ill at reck'ning; it fitteth the spirit of a tapster.

Moth. You are a gentleman and gamestei, sir.

Arm. I confess both; they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Moth. Then I am sure you know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts

Aim. It doth amount to one more than two Moth. Which the base vulgar do call thiec.

Aim. True.

Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study? Now here is three studied ere ye'll thrice wink; and how easy it is to put 'years' to the word 'three', and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Arm. A most fine figure!

Moth. [Aside] To prove you a cipher. 55 Arm. I will hereupon confess I am in love. And as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new-devis'd curtsy. I think scorn to sigh; methinks I should out-swear Cupid. Comfort me, boy; what great men have been in love?

Moth. Hercules, master.

Arm. Most sweet Hercules! More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Moth. Samson, master; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage, for he carried the town gates on his back like a porter; and he was in love.

Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson! I do excel thee in my rapier as much as thou didst me in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Samson's love. my dear Moth?

Moth. A woman, master.

Arm. Of what complexion?

Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two, or one of the four.

Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion.

Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir. Arm. Is that one of the four complexions? Moth. As I have read, sir; and the best of them too.

Arm. Green, indeed, is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, He surely affected her for her wit. Moth. It was so, sir; for she had a green

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Moth, Most maculate thoughts, master, are mask'd under such colours.

Arm. Define, define, well-educated in-

Moth. My father's wit and my mother's tongue assist me!

Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty, and pathetical!

Moth. If she be made of white and red, 95

Her faults will ne'er be known: For blushing cheeks by faults are bied, And fears by pale white shown.

Then if she fear, or be to blame, By this you shall not know:

For still her cheeks possess the same Which native she doth owe.

A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?

Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since; but I think now 'tis not to be found; or if it were, it would neither serve for the writing nor the tune.

Arm. I will have that subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl that I took in the park with the rational hind Costard; she deserves well.

Moth. [Aside] To be whipt; and yet a better love than my master.

Arm. Sing, boy; my spirit grows heavy in love.

Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.

Arm. I say, sing. Moth. Forbear till this company be past. Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir. the Duke's pleasure is that you keep Costard safe; and you must suffer him to take no delight nor no penance: but 'a must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park: she is allow'd for the day-woman. Fare you Arm. I do betray myself with blushing. Maid!

130

Jag. Man!

Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jaq. That's hereby.

Arm. I know where it is situate.

Jaq. Lord, how wise you are! Arm. I will tell thee wonders. Jag. With that face?

Arm. I love thee.

170

Jag. So I heard you say Arm. And so, farewell Jag. Fair weather after you!

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away. [Exeunt Dull and Jaquenetta.

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences ere thou be pardoned. 110 Cost. Well, sii, I hope when I do it I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shall be heavily punished. Cost. I am more bound to you than your As Nature was in making graces dear, so fellows, for they are but lightly sewarded. When she did staive the general would Arm. Take away this villain; shut him!

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave.

fast, being loose.

Moth. No. sir: that were fast and loose. Thou shalt to prison. 150

Cost. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall sec.

Moth. What shall some see? Cost. Nay, nothing, Master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words, and therefore I will say nothing. I thank God I have as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet.

[Exeunt Moth and Costard. Arm. I do affect the very ground, which is base, where her shoe, which is baser. guided by her foot, which is basest, doth tread. I shall be forsworn-which is a great argument of falsehood-if I love. And how can that be true love which is falsely attempted? Love is a familiar; Love is a devil. There is no evil angel but Love. Yet was Samson so tempted, and he had an excellent strength; yet was Solomon so seduced, and he had a very good wit. Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Hercules' club, and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passado he respects not, the duello he regards not; his disgrace is to be called boy, but his glory is to subdue men. Adieu, valour, rust, rapier; be still, drum; for your manager is in love; yea, he loveth. Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme, for I am sure I shall turn sonnet. Devise, wit: write, pen; for I am for whole volumes in folio. Exit.

ACT TWO

Scene I. The bark.

Enter the Princess of France, with three ladies. ROSALINE, MARIA, attending KATHARINE, BOYET, and two other Lords.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits.

:35 Consider who the King your father sends, To whom he sends, and what's his embassy: Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem.

To pailey with the sole inheritor Or all perfections that a man may one, Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight

Than Aquitaine, a dowry for a queen. Be now as prodigal of all dear grace beside

And prodigally gave them all to you. Prin. Good Lord Boyet, my beauty, though but mean, Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir; I will Needs not the painted flourish of your praise.

Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye, Not utt'red by base sale of chapmen's tongues:

I am less proud to hear you tell my worth

Than you much willing to be counted wise In spending your wit in the praise of mine. But now to task the tasker: good Boyet, 20 You are not ignorant all-telling fame

Doth noise abroad Navarre hath made a

Till painful study shall outwear three years, No woman may approach his silent court. Therefore to's seemeth it a needful course, Before we enter his forbidden gates. To know his pleasure; and in that behalf, Bold of your worthiness, we single you As our best-moving fair solicitoi.

Tell him the daughter of the King of France. On serious business, craving quick dispatch. Importunes personal conference with his Grace. Haste, signify so much; while we attend, Like humble-visag'd suitors, his high will. Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly Prin. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so. [Exit Boyet.

Who are the votaries, my loving lords, That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?

1 Lord. Lord Longaville is one. Prin.

Know you the man? Mar. I know him, madam; at a marriage feast.

Between Lord Perigort and the beauteous heir

Of Jaques Falconbridge, solemnized In Normandy, saw I this Longaville. A man of sovereign parts, peerless esteem'd. Well fitted in arts, glorious in arms; 45 Nothing becomes him ill that he would well.

The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss, If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil, Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will. Whose edge hath power to cut, whose w.l! still wills

It should none spare that come within his to the wide fields too base to be mine. power.

Prin. Some merry mocking lord, belike; is't so?

Mar. They say so most that most his humours know.

Prin. Such short-liv'd wits do wither as they grow.

Who are the rest?

The young Dumain, a well-Kath. accomplish'd youth,

Of all that virtue love for virtue loved; Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill :

For he hath wit to make an ill shape good. And shape to win grace though he had no

I saw him at the Duke Alencon's once; And much too little of that good I saw Is my report to his great worthiness.

Ros. Another of these students at that

Was there with him, if I have heard a truth.

Berowne they call him; but a merrier man, Within the limit of becoming mirth, I never spent an hour's talk withal. His eye begets occasion for his wit. For every object that the one doth catch 70 The other turns to a mirth-moving jest, Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor, Delivers in such apt and gracious words That aged ears play truant at his tales, And younger hearings are quite ravished: So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

Prin. God bless my ladies! Are they all in love.

That every one her own hath garnished With such bedecking ornaments of praise? 1 Lord. Here comes Boyet.

Re-enter BOYET.

Now, what admittance, lord? Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach,

And he and his competitors in oath Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady, Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt:

He rather means to lodge you in the field. Like one that comes here to besiege his court,

Than seek a dispensation for his oath, To let you enter his unpeopled house. [The ladies-in-waiting mask.

Enter King, Longaville, Dumain, BEROWNE, and Attendants.

Here comes Navarre.

court of Navarre.

Prin. 'Fair' I give you back again: and ' welcome 'I have not yet. The roof of this court is too high to be yours, and welcome

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.

Prin. I will be welcome then; conduct me thither. King, Hear me, dear lady: I have sworn an oath-Prin. Our Lady help my lord! He'll be forsworn. King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will. Prin. Why, will shall break it; will, and nothing else. King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is. Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise. Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.

I hear your Grace hath sworn out housekeeping.

'Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord, And sin to break it. But pardon me, I am too sudden bold; To teach a teacher ill beseemeth me. Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming, And suddenly resolve me in my suit.

[Giving a baber. King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may. Prin. You will the sooner that I were away.

For you'll prove perjur'd if you make me stav.

Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Kath. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once? Ber. I know you did.

Kath. How needless was it then to ask the question!

Ber. You must not be so quick.

Kath. 'Tis long of you, that spur me with such questions.

Ber. Your wit 's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill tire.

Kath. Not till it leave the rider in the mire. T 20

Ber. What time o' day? Kath. The hour that fools should ask.

Ber. Now fair befall your mask! Kath. Fair fall the face it covers!

Ber. And send you many lovers! 125 Kath. Amen, so you be none.

Ber. Nay, then will I be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate

The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;

King. Fair Princess, welcome to the Being but the one half of an entire sum 130 Disbursed by my father in his wars.

But say that he or we, as neither have. Receiv'd that sum, yet there remains unpaid

A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which.

One part of Aquitaine is bound to us, 135 Although not valued to the money's worth. If then the King your father will restore But that one half which is unsatisfied, We will give up our right in Aquitaine. And hold fair friendship with his Majesty. But that, it seems, he little purposeth. 141 For here he doth demand to have repaid A hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,

On payment of a hundred thousand crowns. To have his title live in Aquitaine; Which we much rather had depart withal, And have the money by our father lent, Than Aquitaine so gelded as it is.

Dear Princess, were not his requests so far From reason's yielding, your fair self should make

A yielding 'gainst some reason in my breast, And go well satisfied to France again.

Prin. You do the King my father too much wrong,

And wrong the reputation of your name. In so unseeming to confess receipt Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.

King. I do protest I never heard of it; And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back Or yield up Aquitaine.

We arrest your word. Boyet, you can produce acquittances For such a sum from special officers Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so. Boyet. So please your Grace, the packet is not come,

Where that and other specialties are bound; To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.

King. It shall suffice me; at which interview

All liberal reason I will yield unto. Meantime receive such welcome at my hand As honour, without breach of honour, may Make tender of to thy true worthiness. 170 You may not come, fan Princess, within my gates;

But here without you shall be so rece.v'd As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart.

Though so denied fair harbour in my house. Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell.

To-morrow shall we visit you again.

Prin. Sweet health and fair desires consort your Grace! King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place. [Exit with attendants.

Ros. Pray you, do my commendations;

I would be glad to see it. 18T

Ber. I would you heard it groan. Ros. Is the fool sick?

Ber. Sick at the heart. Ros. Alack, let it blood. 185 Ber. Would that do it good?

Ros. My physic says 'ay'. Ber. Will you prick't with your eye?

Ros. No point, with my knife. Ber. Now, God save thy life! 100

Ros. And yours from long living! Ber. I cannot stay thanksgiving.

Retiring. Dum. Sir, I pray you, a word: what lady is that same?

Boyet. The heir of Alençon, Katharine her name.

Dum. A gallant lady! Monsieur, fare you well. Exit. Long. I beseech you a word: what is she in the white? Boyet. A woman sometimes, an you saw her in the light. Long. Perchance light in the light. I desire her name. Boyet. She hath but one for herself: to desire that were a shame. Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter? 200 Boyet. Her mother's, I have heard.

Long. God's blessing on your beard! Boyet. Good sir, be not offended;

She is an heir of Falconbridge. Long. Nay, my choler is ended. 205 She is a most sweet lady.

Boyet. Not unlike, sir; that may be.

[Exit Longaville. Ber. What's her name in the cap? Bovet. Rosaline, by good hap. Ber. Is she wedded or no? 210

Boyet. To her will, sir, or so. Ber. You are welcome, sır; adieu! Boyet. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you. [Exit Berowne. Ladies unmask.

Mar. That last is Berowne, the merry mad-cap lord ; Not a word with him but a jest.

And every jest but a word. Bovet. Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word. Boyet. I was as willing to grapple as he was to board.

Kath. Two hot sheeps, marry!

And wherefore not ships? Boyet. No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips.

Kath. You sheep and I pasture-shall that finish the jest?

Boyet. So you grant pasture for me. [Offering to kiss her. Not so, gentle beast;

Kath. Ber. Lady, I will commend you to mine My lips are no common, though several they be.

Boyet. Belonging to whom?

Kath. To my fortunes and me. Prin. Good wits will be janging; but, gentles, agree :

This civil war of wits were much better used

On Navarre and his book-men, for here 'tis abused.

Boyet. If my observation, which very seldom lies.

By the heart's still rhetoric disclosed with Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected. Prin. With what?

Boyet. With that which we lovers entitle affected'.

Prin. Your reason?

Boyet. Why, all his behaviours did make their retire

To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire.

His heart, like an agate, with your print impressed. Proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed: His tongue, all impatient to speak and not

Did stumble with haste in his eyesight to

His face's own margent did quote such amazes

That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes.

I'll give you Aquitaine and all that is his, An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

Prin. Come, to our pavilion. Boyet is dispos'd.

Boyet. But to speak that in words which heart. his eye hath disclos'd;

I only have made a mouth of his eve. By adding a tongue which I know will not those three I will prove.

Mar. Thou art an old love-monger, and speakest skilfully.

Kath. He is Cupid's grandfather, and learns news of him.

Ros. Then was Venus like her mother; for her father is but grim. Boyet. Do you hear, my mad wenches?

Mar. No. What, then; do you see? Boyet.

Mar. Ay, our way to be gone. You are too hard for me. Boyet.

ACT THREE

SCENE I. The park.

Enter ARMADO and MOTH.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.

[Moth sings Concolinel.

Arm. Sweet air! Go. tenderness of years. take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festinately hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?

Arm. How meanest thou? Brawling in French?

Moth. No. my complete master: but to jig off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids, sigh a note and sing a note, sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love, sometime through the nose, as if you snuff'd up love by smelling love, with your hat penthouselike o'er the shop of your eyes, with your arms cross'd on your thin-belly doublet, like a rabbit on a spit, or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away. These are complements, these are humours; these betray nice wenches, that would be betraved without these; and make them men of note-do you note me?-that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this Moth. By my penny of observation.

Arm. But O—but O—

25 Moth. The hobby-horse is forgot.

Aim. Call'st thou my love 'hobbyhorse'?

Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love perhaps a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by

Arm. By heart and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master;

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live; and this, by, in, and without, upon the instant. By heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Arm. Fetch hither the swain; he must [Exeunt. carry me a letter.

Moth. A message well sympathiz'd-a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

Arm. Ha, ha, what savest thou?

Moth. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited. But I go.

Arm. The way is but short; away.

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. The meaning, pretty ingenious? Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

Moth. Minime, honest master; or rather, master, no.

Arm. I say lead is slow.

You are too swift, sir, to say so: Moth. Is that lead slow which is fir'd from a gun?

Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric!

He reputes me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he;

I shoot thee at the swain.

Thump, then, and I flee. [Exit. Arm. A most acute juvenal; volable and free of grace!

By thy favour, sweet welkin, I must sigh in thy face:

Most rude melancholy, valour gives thee place.

My herald is return'd.

Re-enter MOTH with COSTARD.

Moth. A wonder, master! here's a costard broken in a shin.

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle; come, thy l'envoy; begin.

Cost. No egma, no riddle, no l'envoy: no salve in the mail, sir. O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain; no l'envoy, no l'envoy; no salve, sir, but a plantain!

Arm. By virtue thou enforcest laughter: thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling. O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the inconsiderate take salve for l'envoy, and the word 'l'envoy' for a salve?

Cost. When would you have it done, sir? Ber. This afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir; fare you well. Ber. Thou knowest not what it is.

Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.

Ber. Why, villain, thou must know first. Cost. I will come to your worship tomorrow morning.

Ber. It must be done this afternoon. Haik, slave, it is but this:

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see, my beauty will be say'd beauteous: truth itself that thou art by meut.

O heresy in fair, fit for these days!

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.

But come, the bow. Now mercy goes to kill, And shooting well is then accounted ill: -5 Thus will I save my credit in the shoot . Not wounding, pity would not let me do't . If wounding, then it was to show my skill, That more for praise than purpose meant Enter Coslard.

Boyet. Here comes a member of the commonwealth.

Cost. God dig-you-den all! Pray you, which is the head lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest and the tallest. Cost. The thickest and the tallest! It is so: truth is truth. An your waist, mistress, were as slender as Break up this capon.

I am bound to serve. Bovet. This letter is mistook; it importeth none here.

It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Ros. Why, she that bears the bow. Finely put off!

Boyet. My lady goes to kill horns; but, if thou marry.

Hang me by the neck, if horns that year miscarry.

Finely put on! Ros. Well then, I am the shooter.

SCENE II. The bark.

From the shooting within, enter Holofernes. SIR NATHANIEL, and DULL.

Nath. Very reverent sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis, in blood; ripe as the pomewater, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of caelo, the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab on the face of terra, the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, Master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least; but, sir, I assure ye it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo. Dull. 'Twas not a haud credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way, of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or rather, ostentare, to show, as it were, his inclination, after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or ratherest unconfirmed fashion, to insert again my haud credo for a deer.

Dull. I said the deer was not a haud credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Twice-sod simplicity, bis coctus! O thou monster Ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!

Nath. Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book; not drunk ink; his intellect is not re-Mar. Come, come, you talk greasily; your plenished; he is only an animal, only sensible in the duller parts; that we thankful should be-indiscreet, or a fool,

So, were there a patch set on learning, to are well tutor'd by you, and their daughters see him in a school.

But, omne bene, say I, being of an old father's mind:

the wind.

Dull. You two are book-men: can you tell me by your wit

What was a month old at Cain's birth that's not five weeks old as yet? Hol. Dictynna, goodman Dull; tynna, goodman Dull. Dull. What is Dictynna?

Nath. A title to Phoebe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more.

And raught not to five weeks when he came to five-score.

Th' allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true, indeed; the collusion holds in the exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say th' allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the polusion holds in the exchange; for the moon is never but a month old; and I say, beside, that 'twas a pricket that the Princess kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epitaph on the death of the deer? And, to humour the ignorant, call the deer the Princess kill'd a pricket.

Nath. Perge, good Master Holofernes, perge, so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility.

The proyful Princess pierc'd and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket.

Some say a sore; but not a sore till now made sore with shooting. The dogs did yell; put el to soie, then sorel jumps from thicket—

Or pricket sore, or else sorel;

the people fall a-hooting. If sore be sore, then L to sore makes fifty sores o' sorel. Of one sore I an hundred make by adding but one more L.

Nath. A rare talent!

Dull [Aside] If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent.

Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple; a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions. These are begot in the ventricle of memory, nourish'd in the womb of pia mater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occasion. But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.

Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parish:oners; for their sons profit very greatly under you. You are a good member of the commonwealth.

Hol Mehercle, if their sons be ingenious, Many can brook the weather that love not they shall want no instruction; if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them: but, vir sapıt qui pauca loquitur. A soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter JAQUENETTA and COSTARD.

Jaq. God give you good morrow, Master Person.

Hol. Master Person, quasi pers-one. And if one should be pierc'd, which is the one?

Cost. Marry, Master Schoolmaster, he that is likest to a hogshead.

Hol. Piercing a hogshead! lustre of conceit in a turf of earth; fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine; 'tis pretty; it is well.

Jaq. Good Master Parson, be so good as read me this letter; it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado. I beseech you read it.

Hol. Fauste, precor gelida quando pecus omne sub "mbra

Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa. Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or rather as Horace says in his-What, my soul, verses?

Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.

Celestial as thou art, O. pardon love this wrong.

That singes heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue.

Hol. You find not the apostrophas, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified; but, for the elegancy, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, caret. Ovidius Naso was the man. And why, indeed, 'Naso' but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? Imitari is nothing: so doth the hound his master, the age his keeper, the tired horse his rider. But, damosella virgin, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Berowne, one of the strange queen's lords.

Hol. I will overglance the superscript: 'To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline'. I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto: 'Your Ladyship's in all desired employment, Berowne'. Sir Nathaniel, this Berowne is one of the votaries with the King; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Trip and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the King; it may concern much. Stay not thy compliment; I forgive thy duty. Adieu.

Jag. Good Costard, go with me. Sir. God save your life!

Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

[Exeunt Costard and Jaquenelta. Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously; and, as a certain father saith-ひとま

Hol. Sir, tell not me of the father; I do fear colourable colours. But to return to the verses: did they please you, Sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

143 Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where, if, before repast, it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the foresaid child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention. I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you too; for society, saith the text, is the happiness of life.

Hol. And certes, the text most infallibly concludes it. [To Dull] S.r. I do invite you too; you shall not say me nay: pauca verba. Away; the gentles are at their SCENE III. The park.

Enter BEROWNE, with a paper in his hand, alone.

Ber. The King he is hunting the deer: I am coursing myself. They have pitch'd a toil: I am toiling in a pitch—pitch that defiles. Defile! a foul word. Well, 'set thee down, sorrow!' for so they say the fool said, and so say I, and I am the fool. Well proved, wit. By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me-I a sheep. Well proved again o' my side. I will not love; if I do, hang me. I faith, I will not. O, but her eye! By this light, but for her eye, I would not love her -ves for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love; and it hath taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy; and here is part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one o' my sonnets already; the clown bore it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it: sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world. I would not care a pin if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper; God give him grace to groan! [Climbs into a tree.

Enter the KING, with a paper.

King. Ay me!

Ber. Shot, by heaven! Proceed, sweet Cupid; thou hast thump'd him with thy bird-bolt under the left pap. In faith, secrets!

King. [Reads]

'So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not To those fresh morning drops upon the

And they thy glory through my grief will show

But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep

My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.

O queen of queens! how far dost thou excel No thought can think nor tongue of mortal How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper—

Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here? [Steps aside.

Enter LONGAVILLE, with a paper.

What, Longaville, and reading! Listen, ear.

Ber. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

Long. Ay me, I am forsworn!

Ber. Why, he comes in like a perjure, wearing papers.

King. In love, I hope; sweet fellowship.

in shame!

Ber. One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so?

Ber. I could put thee in comfort: not by two that I know;

Thou makest the triumviry, the corner-cap of society,

The shape of Love's Tyburn that hangs up simplicity. 50

Long. I fear these stubborn lines lack power to move.

O sweet Maria, empress of my love!

These numbers will I tear, and write in prose.

Ber. O, rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose:

Disfigure not his slop.

Long. This same shall go. 55 [He reads the sonnet.
'Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye, 'Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,

Persuade my heart to this false perjuty?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove, 60 Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee: My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love; Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.

Vows are but breath, and breath a vapour is;

Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine, 65

Exhal'st this vapour-vow; in thee it is.

If broken, then it is no fault of mine;

It by me broke, what fool is not so wise

To lose an oath to win a paradise?'

Ber. This is the liver-vein, which makes flesh a deity,
70

A green goose a goddess—pure, pure idolatry.

God amend us, God amend! We are much out o' th' way.

Enter DUMAIN, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?— Company! Stay. [Steps aside. Ber. 'All hid, all hid'—an old infant play.

Like a demigod here sit I in the sky, 75
And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

More sacks to the mill! O heavens, I have my wish!

Dumain transformed! Four woodcocks in a dish!

Dum. O most divine Kate!

Ber. O most profane coxcomb! 80
Dum. By heaven, the wonder in a mortal eye!

Ber. By earth, she is not, corporal; there you lie.

Dum. Her amber hairs for foul hath amber quoted.

Ber. An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.

Dum. As upright as the cedar.

Ber. Stoop, I say; 85 Her shoulder is with child.

Dum. As fair as day.

Ber. Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.

Dum. O that I had my wish!

Long. And I had mine! King. And I mine too, good Lord!

Ber. Amen, so I had mine! Is not that a good word? 90 Dum. I would forget her, but a fever

Reigns in my blood, and will rememb'red be.

Ber. A fever in your blood? Why, then incision

Would let her out in saucers. Sweet misprision!

On a day-alack the day!-

And deny himself for Jove,

Turning mortal for thy love."'

Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

Ber. Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.

Dum. [Reads]

That in love's grief desir'st society:

You may look pale, but I should blush, I know.

To be o'erheard and taken napping so. King, [Advancing] Come, sir, you blush: as his, your case is such.

You chide at him, offending twice as much: You do not love Maria! Longaville Did never sonnet for her sake compile; 130 Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart

His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. I have been closely shrouded in this bush, And mark'd you both, and for you both did blush.

I heard your guilty rhymes, observ'd your fashion.

Saw sighs reek from you, noted well your passion.

One, her hairs were gold; crystal the other's eyes.

[To Long.] You would for paradise break faith and troth:

[To Dum.] And Jove for your love would infringe an oath.

What will Berowne say when that he shall Faith infringed which such zeal did swear? How will he scorn, how will he spend his

How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it! For all the wealth that ever I did see, 145 I would not have him know so much by me. Ber. [Descending] Now step I forth to whip hypocrisy. Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me. Good heart, what grace hast thou thus to reprove These worms for loving, that art most in love? 150

Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears

There is no certain princess that appears; You'll not be perjur'd; 'tis a hateful thing; Tush, none but minstrels like of sonneting. But are you not ashamed? Nay, are you not.

All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot? You found his mote; the King your mote did see:

But I a beam do find in each of three. O, what a scene of fool'ry have I seen, 159 182

This will I send; and something else more Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of teen! O me, with what strict patience have I sat.

> To see a king transformed to a gnat! To see great Hercules whipping a gig, And profound Solomon to tune a jig, boys.

And critic Timon laugh at idle toys! 166 Where hes thy grief, O, tell me, good Dumain?

And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain? And where my liege's? All about the breast. A caudie, ho!

King. Too bitter is thy jest. Are we betrayed thus to thy over-view? Ber. Not you by me, but I betrayed to you. I that am honest, I that hold it sin To break the vow I am engaged in: I am betrayed by keeping company With men like you, men of inconstancy. When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?

Or groan for Joan? or spend a minute's time

In pruning me? When shall you hear that I Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye, A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,

A leg, a lımb-King. Soft! whither away so fast?

A true man or a thief that gallops so? Ber. I post from love; good lover, let me go. 181

Enter JAQUENETTA and COSTARD.

Jaq. God bless the King!

King. What present hast thou there? Cost. Some certain treason.

King. What makes treason here? Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.

King. If it mar nothing neither. The treason and you go in peace away together.

Jag. I beseech your Grace, let this letter be read;

Our person misdoubts it; 'twas treason he said. 190

King. Berowne, read it over. [Berowne reads the letter.

Where hadst thou it? Jaq. Of Costard.

King. Where hadst thou it?

Cost. Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio. [Berowne tears the letter. King. How now! What is in you? Why dost thou tear it?

Ber. A toy, my liege, a toy! Your Grace needs not fear it.

Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.

Dum. It is Berowne's writing, and here is his name. [Gathering up the pieces. me shame.

Guilty, my lord, guilty! I confess, I confess.

King. What?

Ber. That you three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess:

He, he, and you-and you, my liege!and I

Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.

O. dismiss this audience, and I shall tell vou more.

Dum. Now the number is even.

True, true, we are four.

Will these turtles be gone?

King. Hence, sirs, away. Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

[Exeunt Costard and Jaquenetta. Ber. Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O, let us embrace!

As true we are as flesh and blood can be. The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his Young blood doth not obey an old decree. We cannot cross the cause why we were born, 21 1

Therefore of all hands must we be forsworn. King. What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?

Ber. 'Did they?' quoth you. Who sees the heavenly Rosaline

That, like a rude and savage man of Inde At the first op'ning of the goigeous east. Bows not his vassal head and, strucken blind.

Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?

What peremptory eagle-sighted eye Dares look upon the heaven of her brow That is not blinded by her majesty?

King. What zeal, what fury hath inspir'd thee now?

My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon; She, an attending star, scarce seen a light. Ber. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Berowne.

O, but for my love, day would turn to night!

Of all complexions the cull'd sovereignty Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair check, Where several worthies make one dignity, Where nothing wants that want itself doth seek.

Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues-Fie, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not! To things of sale a seller's praise belongs: the passes praise; then praise too short doth blot.

A wither'd hermit, five-score winters worn, Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye. Beauty doth varnish age, as if new-born,

[To Costard] Ah, you whoreson And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy. loggerhead, you were born to do O, 'tis the sun that maketh all things shine! King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.

Ber. Is ebony like her? O wood divine! A wife of 'uch wood were felicity. O, who can give an oath? Where is a book? That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack, If that she learn not of her eye to look. No face is fair that is not full so black.

King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,

The hue of dungeons, and the school of night:

And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

Ber. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.

O, if in black my lady's brows be deckt, It mourns that painting and usurping hair

Should ravish doters with a false aspect; And therefore is she born to make black

Her favour turns the fashion of the days; For native blood is counted painting now; And therefore red that would avoid dispraise

Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her are chimney-sweepers black.

Long. And since her time are colliers counted bright.

King. And Ethiopes of their sweet complexion crack.

Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light. 265

Ber. Your mistresses dare never come in rain

For fear their colours should be wash'd away.

King. 'Twere good yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,

I'll find a tairer face not wash'd to-day. Ber. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here.

King. No devil will fright thee then so much as she.

Dum. I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.

Long. Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see. [Showing his shoe.

Ber. O. if the streets were paved with thine eyes,

Her feet were much too dainty for such tread! Dum. O vile! Then, as she goes, what upward lies

The street should see as she walk'd overhead.

King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?

Ber. Nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.

King. Then leave the hat; and, good Belowne, now prive 280

Our loving lawful, and ou, faith not torn. Dum. Ay, marry, there; some flattery for this evil.

Long. O, some authority how to proceed; Some tricks, some quillets, how to cheat the devil!

Dum. Some salve for periury.

Ber. "Tis more than need. 285
Have at you, then, affection's men-at-arms.
Consider what you first did swear unto:
To fast, to study, and to see no woman—Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.

Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young. 290

And abstinence engenders maladies.

And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,
In that each of you have forsworn his book,
Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look?

For when would you, my lord, or you, or you, Have found the ground of study's excellence Without the beauty of a woman's face? From women's eyes this doctrine I derwe: They are the ground, the books, the academes, From whence doth spring the true Promethean

Why, universal plodding poisons up
The nimble spirus in the arteries,
As motion and long-during action tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller.
Now, for not looking on a woman's face, 305
You have in that forswon the use of eyes,
And study too, the causer of your vow;
For where is any author in the world
Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?
Learning is but an adjunct to ourself, 310
And where we are our learning likewise is;
Then when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes,
With ourselves,

Do we not likewise see our learning there?
O, we have made a vow to study, lords,
And in that vow we have forsworn our books.

For when would you, my liege, or you, or you,

In leaden contemplation have found out Such fiery numbers as the prompting eyes Of beauty's tutors have enrich'd you with? Other slow arts entirely keep the brain; 320 And therefore, finding barren practisers, Scarce show a harvest of their heavy toil;

But love, first learned in a lady's eyes, Lives not alone immured in the brain, But with the motion of all elements 325 Courses as swift as thought in every power, And gives to every power a double power, Above their functions and their offices. It adds a precious seeing to the eye: A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. 330 A lover's ear will hear the lowest sound, that; and, good When the suspicious head of theft is Love's feeling is more soft and sensible Than are the tender horns of cockled snails; Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste.

For valour, is not Love a Hercules, Still climbing trees in the Hesperides? Subtle as Sphinx; as sweet and musical As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair.

And when Love speaks, the voice of all the gods 340

Make heaven drowsy with the harmony.

Never durst poet touch a pen to write

Until his ink were temp'red with Love's sighs:

O, then his lines would ravish savage ears, And plant in tyrants mild humility. 345 From women's eyes this doctrine I derive. They sparkle still the right Promethean fire; They are the books, the arts, the academes, That show, contain, and nourish, all the world.

Else none at all in aught proves excellent.

Then fools you were these women to forswear;

Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.

For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love:

Or for Love's sake, a word that loves all men;

Or for men's sake, the authors of these women; 355
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men—

Let us once lose our oaths to find ourselves, Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths. It is religion to be thus forsworn; For charity itself fulfils the law,

And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!

Ber. Advance your standards, and upon them, lords;

Pell-mell, down with them! But be first advis'd,

In conflict, that you get the sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing; lay these glozes by.

Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too; therefore let us devise

Some entertainment for them in their tents. Ber. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;
Then homeward every man attach the hand

Of his fair mistress. In the afternoon

We will with some strange pastime solace them.

Such as the shortness of the time can shape; For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours, Forerun fair Love, strewing her way with at a great feast of languages and stol'n the flowers.

King. Away, away! No time shall be omuted

That will betime, and may by us be fitted. Ber. Allons! allons! Sow'd cockle reap'd no coin.

And justice always whills in equal measure. Light wenches may prove plagues to men forsworn:

If so, our copper buys no better treasure. [Exeunt.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. The park.

Enter Holorennes, Sir Nathaniel, and You hear his learning. DULL.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir. Your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without scurrility, witty without affection, audacious without impudency, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the King's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tanquam te. His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestical, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thrasonical. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet.

[Draws out his table-book. Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasimes, such insociable and point-devise companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak 'dout' fine, when he should say 'doubt'; 'det' when he should pronounce 'debt'-d, e, b, t, not d, e, t. He clepeth a calf 'cauf', half 'hauf'; neighbour vocatur 'nebour'; 'neigh' abbreviated This is abhominable—which he would call 'abbominable'. It insinuateth me of insanie: ne intelligis, domine? to make frantic, lunatic.

Nath. Laus Deo, bone intelligo.

'bene'. 'Bone'?--'bone' tor Priscian a little scratch'd: 'twill serve. 26

Enter ARMADO, MOTH, and COSTARD.

Nath. Videsne quis venit? Hol. Video, et gaudeo. Arm. [To Moth] Chirrah!

Hol. Quare 'chirrah', not 'sirrah'? 30 Arm. Men of peace, well encount'red. Hol. Most military sir, salutation.

376 scraps.

Cost. O, they have liv'd long on the almsbasket of words. I marvel thy master hatn not eaten thee for a word, for thou are not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus; thou art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon.

Moth. Peace! the peal begins.

Arm. [To Hot.] Monsieur, are you not lett'red?

Moth. Yes, yes; he teaches boys the hornbook. What is a, b, spelt backward with the horn on his head?

Hol. Ba, puentia, with a horn added. Moth. Ba, most silly sheep with a horn.

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant? Moth. The third of the five vowels, if You repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them: a, e. I-

Moth. The sheep; the other two concludes it: o, U.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterraneum, a sweet touch, a quick venue of wit—snip, snap, quick and home. It rejoiceth my intellect. True wit!

Moth. Offer'd by a child to an old man:

which is wit-old.

Hol. What is the figure? What is the figure?

Moth. Horns. Hol. Thou disputes like an infant; go whip thy gig. Moth. Lend me your horn to make one.

and I will whip about your infamy circum circa-a gig of a cuckold's horn.

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread. Hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou halfpenny purse of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion. O, an the heavens were so pleased that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldest thou make me! Go to; thou hast it ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O, I smell false Latin; 'dunghill' for unguem.

Arm. Arts-man, preambulate; we will be singuled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or mons, the hill. Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain.

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the King's most sweet pleasure and affection to congratulate the Princess at her pavilion, in the posteriors of this day; which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most Moth. [Aside to Costard] They have been generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable, for the afternoon. The word is well cull'd, chose, sweet, and apt, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the King is a noble gentleman, and my familiar, I do assure ye, very good friend. For what is inward between us, let it pass. I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy. I beseech thee, apparel thy head. And among other importunate and most serious designs, and of great import indeed, too-but let that pass; for I must tell thee it will please his Grace, by the world, sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger thus dally with my excrement, with my mustachio; but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass. The very all of all is-but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy—that the King would have me present the Princess, sweet chuck. with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antic, or firework. 'Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self are good at such eruptions and sudden breaking-out of mirth, as it were. I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the Nine Worthies. Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rend'red For he hath been five thousand year a boy. by our assistance, the King's command, and this most gallant, illustrate, and learned gentleman, before the Princess-I say none so fit as to present the Nine Worthies. 107

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enought to present them?

Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself, Alexander this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabæus this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass Pompey the Great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Pardon, sir; error: he is not quantity enough for that Worthy's thumb he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? He shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake: and I will have an apology for that purpose. 117

Moth. An excellent device! So, if any of the audience hiss, you may cry 'Well done, Hercules; now thou crushest the snake!' That is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies? Hol. I will play three myself. Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman! Arm. Shall I tell you a thing? 125 Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this fadge not, an antic. I beseech you, follow.

Hol. Via, goodman Dull! Thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir. Hol. Allons! we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play

On the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the hav.

Hol. Most dull, honest Dull! To our sport, away. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The park.

Enter the PRINCESS, MARIA, KATHARINE, and ROSALINE.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart,

If fairings come thus plentifully in. A lady wall'd about with diamonds!

Look you what I have from the loving King.

Ros. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing but this! Yes, as much love in rhyme

As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper

Writ o' both sides the leaf, margent and all, That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name. Ros. That was the way to make his godhead wax; Kath. Ay, and a shiewd unhappy gallows too.

Ros. You'll ne'er be friends with him: 'a kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;

And so she died. Had she been light, like you,

Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit, She might 'a been a grandam ere she died. And so may you; for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark. Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff:

Therefore I'll darkly end the argument. Ros. Look what you do, you do it still i' th' dark. Kath. So do not you; for you are a light wench. Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you; and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for 'past cure is still past care'.

Prin. Well bandied both; a set of wit well play'd.

But, Rosaline, you have a favour too? 30 Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would you knew.
An if my face were but as fair as yours,
My favour were as great: be witness this.
Nay, I have verses too, I thank Berowne;
The numbers true, and, were the numb'ring

I were the fairest goddess on the ground.
I am compar'd to twenty thousand fairs.
O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!
Prin. Anything like?

Ros. Much in the letters; nothing in the praise.

Prin. Beauteous as ink—a good conclusion.

Kath. Fair as a text B in a copy-book.

Ros. Ware pencils, ho! Let me not die your debtor.

My red dominical, my golden letter:
O that your face were not so full of O's! 45
Kath. A pox of that jest! and I beshrew all shrows!

Prin. But, Katharine, what was sent to you from fair Dumain?

Kath. Madam, this glove.

Prin. Did he not send you twain? Kath. Yes, madam; and, moreover, 47 Some thousand verses of a faithful lover; A huge translation of hypocrisy, Vilely compil'd, profound simplicity.

Mar. This, and these pearl, to me sent

Longaville;

The letter is too long by half a mile.

Prin. I think no less. Dost thou not wish in heart

The chain were longer and the letter short?

Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.

Prin. We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.

Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.

That same Berowne I'll torture ere I go. 65 O that I knew he were but in by th' week! How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seek.

And wait the season, and observe the times, And spend his piodigal wits in bootless rhymes,

And shape his service wholly to my hests, And make him proud to make me proud that jests! 66

So pertaunt-like would I o'ersway his state That he should be my fool, and I his fate. Prin. None are so surely caught, when they are catch'd,

As wit turn'd fool; folly, in wisdom hatch'd,

70

Hath wisdom's warrant and the help of school,

And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.

Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such excess

As gravity's revolt to wantonness.

Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note 73 As fool'ry in the wise when wit doth dote,

As fool'ry in the wise when wit doth dote Since all the power thereof it doth apply To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyer.

Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Boyet. O, I am stabb'd with laughter!
Where's her Grace?

Prin. Thy news, Boyet?

Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare! Arm, wenches, arm! Encounters mounted are Against your peace. Love doth approach disguis'd,

Armed in arguments; you'll be surpris'd.

Muster your wits; stand in your own defence;

85

Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.

Prin. Saint Dennis to Saint Cupid! What are they

That charge their breath against us? Say, scoul, say.

Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore

I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour; 90

When, lo! to interrupt my purpos'd rest, Toward that shade I might behold addrest The King and his companions; warily I stole into a neighbour thicket by,

And overheard what you shall overhear—95 That, by and by, disguis'd they will be here. Their herald is a pretty knavish page, That well by heart hath conn'd his em-

That well by heart hath conn'd his em bassage.

Action and accent did they teach him there: 'Thus must thou speak' and 'thus thy body bear', 100

And ever and anon they made a doubt Presence majestical would put him out; 'For' quoth the King' an angel shalt thou

Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously'. The boy replied 'An angel is not evil; I should have fear'd her had she been a devil'.

With that all laugh'd, and clapp'd him on the shoulder.

Making the bold wag by their praises bolder. One rubb'd his elbow, thus, and fleer'd, and swore

A better speech was never spoke before. Another with his finger and his thumb 112 Cried 'Via! we will do't, come what will come'.

The third he caper'd, and cried 'All goes well'.

The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.

With that they all did tumble on the ground.

With such a zealous laughter, so profound. That in this spleen ridiculous appears, To check their folly, passion's solemn tears

Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?

Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparell'd thus,

Like Muscovites or Russians, as I guess. Their purpose is to parley, court, and dance And every one his love-feat will advance Unto his several mistress: which they'll

By favours several which they did bestow. Prin. And will they so? The gallant: shall be task'd,

For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd; And not a man of them shall have the grace,

Despite of suit, to see a lady's face. Hold. Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear. And then the King will court thee for his Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine.

So shall Berowne take me for Rosaline. And change you favours too; so shall your loves 134

Woo contrary, deceiv'd by these removes. Ros. Come on, then, wear the favours most in sight.

Kath. But, in this changing, what is your intent?

Prin. The effect of my intent is to cross theirs.

They do it but in mocking merriment. And mock for mock is only my intent. 140 Their several counsels they unbosom shall To loves mistook, and so be mock'd withal Upon the next occasion that we meet

With visages display'd to talk and greet. Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to't?

Prin. No, to the death, we will not move a foot,

Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace:

But while 'tis spoke each turn away her

Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart,

And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I do it; and I make no doubt

The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out. There's no such sport as sport by sport To tread a measure with you on this grass. o'erthrown,

To make theirs ours, and ours none but our So shall we stay, mocking intended game,

188

And they well mock'd depart away with [Trumpet sounds within. shame. Bovet. The trumpet sounds; be mask'd: the maskers come.

The Ladies mask.

Enter Blackamoors with music, MOTH as Prologue, the King and his Lords as maskers, in the guise of Russians.

Moth. All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!

Boyet. Beauties no 11cher than rich taffeta. Moth. A holy parcel of the fairest dames

[The Ladies turn their backs to him. That ever turn'd their-backs-to mortal views I

Ber. Then eyes, villain, their eyes. Moth. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortal views! Out-

Bovet. True: out indeed.

Moth. Out of your favours, heavenly spirits, vouchsafe Not to behold—

Ber. Once to behold, rogue.

Moth. Once to behold with your sunbeamed eyes-with your sun-beamed eyes-

Boyet. They will not answer to that epithet;

You were best call it 'daughter-beamed eyes '.

Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

Ber. Is this your perfectness? Be gone, Exit Moth. vou rogue.

Ros. What would these strangers? Know their minds, Boyet.

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will That some plain man recount their purposes.

Know what they would.

What would you with the Bovet. Princess?

Ber. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

Ros. What would they, say they? Boyet. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.

Boyet. She says you have it, and you may be gone.

King. Say to her we have measur'd many miles

To tread a measure with her on this grass. Boyet. They say that they have measur d many a mile

Ros. It is not so. Ask them how many inches

Is in one mile? If they have measured many,

The measure, then, of one is eas'ly told. 100 Boyet. If to come hither you have measur'd miles.

And many miles, the Princess bids you tell How many inches doth fill up one mile. Ber. Tell her we measure them by weary Boyet. She hears herself.

How many weary steps 195 Of many weary miles you have o'ergone Are numb'red in the travel of one mile?

Ber. We number nothing that we spend for you;

Our duty is so rich, so infinite, That we may do it still without accompt. Vouchsafe to show the sunshine of your tace.

That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded taa.

King. Blessed are clouds, to do as such clouds do.

Vouchsate, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine, Those clouds removed, upon our watery evne. Ros. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter:

Thou now requests but moonshine in the water.

Km3. Then in our measure do but vouchsafe one change.

Thou bid'st me beg, this begging is not strange.

Ros. Play, music, then. Nay, you must do it soon. Not yet? No dance! Thus change I like the moon. King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged? Ros. You took the moon at full; but now she's changed. King. Yet still she is the Moon, and I the

The music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it. Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

But your legs should do it Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance, We'll not be nice; take hands. We wil not dance.

King. Why take we hands then? Only to part friends

Curtsy, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.

King. More measure of this measure; be not nice.

Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.

King. Price you yourselves. What buy your company? Ros. Your absence only.

That can never be. 225 King.

Ros. Then cannot we be bought; and so adien_

Twice to your visor and half once to you. King. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.

Ros. In private then.

King. I am best pleas'd with that, They converse abart.

Ber. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

Prin. Honey, and milk, and sugar; there is three.

Ber. Nay, then, two treys, an if you grow so nice.

Metheglin, wort, and malmsey; well run. dice!

There's half a dozen sweets.

Pun. Seventh sweet, adieu! Since you can cog, I'll play no more with

Ber. One word in secret.

Let it not be sweet. Ber. Thou grievest my gall.

Prin. Gall! bitter.

Ber. Therefore meet. [They converse apart.

Dum. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a word?

Mar. Name it. Dum. Fair ladv-

Say you so? Fair lord-Mar. Take that for your fair lady.

Please it you, 240 As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

They converse apart. Kath. What, was your vizard made without a tongue?

Long. I know the reason, lady, why you

Kath. O for your reason! Quickly, sir; I long.

Long. You have a double tongue within your mask,

And would afford my speechless vizard half.

Kath. 'Veal' quoth the Dutchman. Is not 'veal' a calf?

Long. A calf, fair lady! No, a fair lord calf. Kath.

Long. Let's part the word. No, I'll not be your half. Kath.

Take all and wean it; it may prove an ox. Long. Look how you butt yourself in these sharp mocks!

Will you give horns, chaste lady? Do not

Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.

Long. One word in private with you ere I die.

Kath. Bleat softly, then; the butcher hears you cry. [They converse apart. Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen 256

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST

As is the razor's edge invisible. Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen. Above the sense of sense: so sensible Seemeth their conference: their conceits have wings. Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

Ros. Not one word more, my maids; break off, break off.

Ber. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scoff!

King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple wits.

Exeunt King, Lords, and Blackamoors. Prin. Twenty adieus, my frozen Musco-

Are these the breed of wits so wondered at? breaths puff'd out.

Ros. Well-liking wits they have; gross, gross; fat, fat.

Prin. O poverty in wit, kingly-poor flout! Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night?

Or ever but in vizards show their faces? This pert Berowne was out of count'nance quite.

Ros. They were all in lamentable cases! The King was weeping-ripe for a good Prin. Berowne did swear himself out of all suit.

Mar. Dumain was at my service, and his sword.

No point 'quoth I; my servant straight was mute.

Kath. Lord Longaville said I came o'er his heart:

And trow you what he call'd me?

Qualm, perhaps. Prin.

Kath. Yes, in good faith.

Prin. Go, sickness as thou art! 280 Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps.

They will digest this harsh indignity. Prin. Will they return?

They will, they will, God knows, And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows:

Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair.

Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.

Prin. How blow? how blow? Speak to be understood.

Bovet, Fair ladies mask'd are roses in their bud: Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shown.

260

Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown. Prin. Avaunt, perplexity! What shall we do

If they return in their own shapes to woo? Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advis'd.

Let's mock them still, as well known as disguis'd.

Let us complain to them what fools were here.

Disguis'd like Muscovites, in shapeless gear: Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet And wonder what they were, and to what

> Their shallow shows and prologue vilely penn'd,

And their rough carriage so ridiculous, Should be presented at our tent to us.

Boyet. Ladies, withdraw; the gallants are at hand.

Prin. Whip to our tents, as roes run o'er land. [Exeunt Princess, Rosaline, Katharine, and Maria.

Re-enter the King, Berowne, Longaville, and DUMAIN, in their proper habits.

King. Fair sir, God save you! Where's the Princess? Boyet. Gone to her tent. Please it your

And utters it again when God doth please. He is wit's pedlar, and retails his wares But will you hear? The King is my love At wakes, and wassails, meetings, markets, fairs;

Prin. And quick Berowne hath plighted And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth

This is the ape of form, Monsieur the Nice,

That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice

In honourable terms; nay; he can sing A mean most meanly; and in ushering, Mend him who can. The ladies call him sweet;

The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet. 330 This is the flow'r that smiles on every one To show his teeth as white as whales-bone And consciences that will not die in debt Pay him the due of 'honey-tengued

King. A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart, That put Armado's page out of his part!

Re-enter the PRINCESS, ushered by BOYET; ROSALINE, MARIA, and KATHARINE.

Ber. See where it comes! Behaviour. what wert thou

Till this man show'd thee? And what art thou now?

King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!

'Fair' in 'all hail' is foul, as I Prin. conceive.

King, Construe my speeches better, if you mav.

Prin. Then wish me better: I will give you leave. King. We came to visit you, and purpose now To lead you to our court: vouchsafe it then. Prin. This field shall hold me, and so hold your vow: Nor God, nor I, delights in perjur'd men.

King. Rebuke me not for that which you provoke.

The virtue of your eye must break my oath. Prin. You nickname virtue: vice vou should have spoke;

For virtue's office never breaks men's troth.

Now by my maiden honour, yet as pure As the unsullied lily, I protest, a world of torments though I should endure.

I would not yield to be your house's guest; So much I hate a breaking cause to be 355 Of heavenly oaths, vowed with integrity. King. O, you have hv'd in desolation here.

Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame. Prin. Not so, my lord; it is not so, I

We have had pastimes here, and pleasant game;

A mess of Russians left us but of late. King. How, madam! Russians! Ay, in truth, my lord;

Trim gallants, full of courtship and of state. Ros. Madam, speak true. It is not so, my lord.

My lady, to the manner of the days, In courtesy gives undeserving praise. We four indeed confronted were with four In Russian habit; here they stayed an By this white glove—how white the hand.

And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my Henceforth my wooing mind shall be lord. 360

They did not bless us with one happy word. I dare not call them fools; but this I think, When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.

Ber. This jest is dry to me. Fair gentle sweet.

Your wit makes wise things foolish; when we greet.

With eyes best seeing, heaven's fiery eye, 373 By light we lose light; your capacity

Is of that nature that to your huge store Wise things seem foolish and rich things but poor.

Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my eve-

Ber. I am a fool, and full of poverty. 380 Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong.

It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.

Ber. O, I am yours, and all that I possess Ros. All the fool mine?

Ber. I cannot give you less. Ros. Which of the vizards was it that you wore? Ber. Where? when? what vizatd? Why demand you this?

Ros. There, then, that vizard; that superfluous case

That hid the worse and show'd the better face.

King. We were descried; they'll mock us now downright.

Dum. Let us confess, and turn it to a jest Prin. Amaz'd, my lord? Why looks your Highness sad?

Ros. Help, hold his brows ' he'll swoon! Why look you pale?

Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy. Ber. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.

Can any face of brass hold longer out? 395 Here stand I, lady-dart thy skill at me, Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout, Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance.

Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit; And I will wish thee never more to dance. Nor never more in Russian habit wait. 409 O, never will I trust to speeches penn'd, Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue Nor never come in vizard to my friend. Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's express'd

In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes.

And, to begin, wench—so God help me, law!—

My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw Ros. Sans 'sans', I pray you.

Ren. Yet I have a trick Of the old rage; bear with me, I am sick; I'll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see—Write 'Lord have mercy on us' on those three;

They are infected; in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes.

These lords are visited; you are not free, For the Lord's tokens on you do I see.

Pin. No, they are free that gave these tokens to us.

Ber. Our states are forfeit; seek not to undo us.

Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true.

That you stand forfeit, being those that sue?

Ber. Peace; for I will not have to do with you.

Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.

Bei. Speak for yourselves; my wit is at an end.

King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression

Some fair excuse.

Prin. The fairest is confession.
Were not you here but even now, disguis'd?
King. Madam, I was.

Pim. And were you well advis'd? King.I was, fair madam.

Prin. When you then were here, 435
What did you whisper in your lady's ear?

King. That more than all the world I did respect her.

Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will reject hei.

King. Upon mine honour, no.

Prin. Peace, peace, forbear; Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.

King. Despise me when I break this oath of mine.

Prin. I will; and therefore keep it.
Rosaline,

What did the Russian whisper in your ear?
Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear

As precious eyesight, and did value me 4.5 Above this world; adding thereto, more-

That he would wed me, or else die my lover.

Prin. God give thee joy of him! The noble lord

Most honourably doth uphold his word.

King What mean you, madam? By my life, my troth, 450

I never swore this lady such an oath.

Ros. By heaven, you did; and, to confirm it plain,

You gave me this; but take it, sir, again.

King. My faith and this the Princess I did give;

454

I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.

Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she weai;

And Loid Belowne, I thank him, is my dear

What, will you have me, or your pearl again?

Ber. Neither of either; I remit both twain.

I see the trick on't: here was a consent, 460 Knowing aforehand of our merriment, To dash it like a Christmas comedy.

Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight zany,

Some mumble-news, some trencher-knight, some Dick,

That smiles his cheek in years and knows the trick

To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents before; which once disclos'd,

The ladies did change favours; and then we.

Following the signs, woo'd but the sign of she.

Now, to our perjury to add more terror, 170 We are again forsworn in will and error. Much upon this it is; [To Boyet] and might not you

Forestall our sport, to make us thus untrue? Do not you know my lady's foot by th' squier,

And laugh upon the apple of her eye? 475 And stand between her back, sir, and the fire.

Holding a trencher, jesting merrily? You put our page out. Go, you are allow'd; Die when you will, a smock shall be your shroud.

You leer upon me, do you? There's an eye Wounds like a leaden sword.

Boyet. Full merrily Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.

Ber. Lo, he is tilting straight! Peace; I have done.

Enter COSTARD.

Welcome, pure wit! Thou part'st a fair fray.

Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know whether the three Worthies shall come in or no?

Ber. What, are there but three?

Cost. No, sir; but it is vara fine, For every one pursents three.

Ber. And three times thrice is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir,
I hope it is not so.

You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you. sir: we know what we know; 490 I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir-

Is not nine. Ber.

Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereuntil it doth amount.

Ber. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.

Cost. O Lord, sir, it were pity you should get your living by reck'ning, sir.

Ber. How much is it?

Cost. O Lord, sir, the parties themselves. the actors, sir, will show whereuntil it doth amount. For mine own part, I am, as they say, but to parfect one man in one poor man, Pompion the Great, sir.

Ber. Art thou one of the Worthies?

Cost. It pleased them to think me worthy of Pompey the Great; for mine own part. I know not the degree of the Worthy: but I am to stand for him.

Ber. Go, bid them prepare.

Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care. [Exit Costard. King. Berowne, they will shame us; let them not approach.

Ber. We are shame-proof, my lord, and 'tis some policy

To have one show worse than the King's and his company.

King. I say they shall not come.

Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'errule you now.

That sport best pleases that doth least know how:

Where zeal strives to content, and the contents 515

Dies in the zeal of that which it presents. Their form confounded makes most form in mirth,

When great things labouring perish in their birth.

Ber. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter ARMADO.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath as will utter a brace of words.

[Converses apart with the King, and delivers a paper.

Prin. Doth this man serve God?

Ber. Why ask you?

Prin. 'A speaks not like a man of God his making.

Arm. That is all one, my fair, sweet. honey monarch; for, I protest, the schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical; too too vain, too too vain; but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna de la guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couple-[Exit Armado. ment !

King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies. He presents Hector of Troy the swain, Pompey the Great: the parish cuiate, Alexander; Armado's page, Heicules; the pedant, Judas Maccabæus. And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive.

These four will change habits and present the other five.

Ber. There is five in the first show. King. You are deceived, 'tis not so.

Ber. The pedant, the braggart, the hedgepriest, the fool, and the boy; Abate throw at novum, and the whole world again Cannot pick out five such, take each one în his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes amain.

Enter COSTARD, armed for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am-

Ber. You lie, you are not he. Cost. I Pompey am-Boyet. With libbard's head on knee. Ber. Well said, old mocker; I must needs be friends with thee. Cost. 1 Pompey am, Pompey surnam'd the Big-

Dum. The Great.

Cost. It is Great, sir.

Pompey surnam'd the Great,

That oft in field, with targe and shield, did make my foe to sweat:

And travelling along this coast, I here am come by chance, And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass of France. If your ladyship would say 'Thanks, Pompey', I had done.

Prin. Great thanks, great Pompey.

Cost. 'Tis not so much worth; but I hope I was perfect. I made a little fault in Great.

Ber. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

Enter SIR NATHANIEL, for Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I lw'd, I was the world's commander:

By east, west, rorth, and south, I spread my conquering might.

My scutcheon plain declares that I am Alısander-

Boyet. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Ber. Your nose smells 'no' in this, most tender-smelling knight.

Prin. The conqueror is dismay'd. Proceed, good Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander-

Boyet. Most true, 'tis right, you were so, Alisander. 565

Ber. Pompey the Great! Cost. Your servant, and Costard.

640

Ber. Take away the conqueror, take away Alisander.

Cost. [To Sir Nail.] O, sir, you have overthrown Alisander the conqueror! You will be scrap'd out of the painted cloth for this. Your lion, that holds his poleaxe siting on a close-stool, will be given to Ajax. He will be the ninth Worthy. A conqueror and afeard to speak! Run away for shame, Alisander. [Sir Nail. retires] There, an't shall please you, a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dash'd. He is a marvellous good neighbour, faith, and a very good bowler; but for Alisander—alas! you see how 'tis—a little o'erpaited. But there are Worthes acoming will speak their mind in some other soit.

Prin. Stand aside, good Pompey. 586

Enter Holofernes, for Judas; and Moth, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this imp, Whose club kill'd Cerberus, that three-headed canus;

And when he was a babe, a child, a shrimp, Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus Quontam he seemeth in minority, Ergo I come with this apology.

Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish
[Moth retires

Judas I am—

Dum. A Judas! Hol. Not Iscariot, sir.

Judas I am, yeliped Maccabæus.

Dum. Judas Maccabæus clipt is plain

Judas.

Ber. A kissing traitor. How art the prov'd Judas?

Hol. Judas I am-

Dum. The more shame for you, Judas !

Hol. What mean you, sir?

Boyet. To make Judas hang himself.

Hol. Begin, sir; you are my elder. Ber. Well followed: Judas was hange on an elder.

Hol. I will not be put out of countenance

Ber. Because thou hast no face.

Hol. What is this?

Boyet. A cittern-head.

Dum. The head of a bodkin.

Ber. A death's face in a ring. 60 Long. The face of an old Roman coin scarce seen.

Boyet. The pommel of Cæsar's falchion Dum. The carv'd-bone face on a flask.

Ber. Saint George's half-cheek in a brooch.

Dum. Ay, and in a brooch of lead. 610 Ber. Ay, and worn in the cap of a toothdrawer. And now, forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol. You have put me out of counten-

Ber. False: we have given thee faces.

Hol. But you have outfac'd them all. 613 Ber. An thou wert a lion we would do so. Boyet. Therefore, as he is an ass, let him and so adieu, sweet Jude! Nay, why dost

Dum. For the latter end of his name. Ber. For the ass to the Jude; give it him—Jud-as, away. 620 Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boyet. A light for Monsieur Judas! It grows dark, he may stumble.

[Holofernes retires. Prin. Alas, poor Maccabæus, how hath he been baited!

Enter ARMADO, for Hector.

Ber. Hide thy head, Achilles; here comes Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Troyan in respect of this.

Boyet. But is this Hector?

Dum. I think Hector was not so cleantimber'd.

Long. His leg is too big for Hector's. Dum. More calf, certain.

Boyet. No; he is best indued in the small. Ber. This cannot be Hector.

Dum. He's a god or a painter, for he makes faces.

Arm. The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift—

Dum. A gilt nutmeg.

Ber. A lemon.

59

Long. Stuck with cloves.

Dum. No, cloven. Arm. Peace!

The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty, Gave Hector a gift, the heir of Ilion;

A man so breathed that certain he would fight ye, 615

From morn till night out of his pavilion. I am that flower—

Dum. That mint.

Long. That columbine. Arm. Sweet Lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.

Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

550

Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

Arm. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten; sweet chucks, beat not the bones of the buried; when he breathed, he was a man. But I will forward with my device. [To the Princess] Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of hearing.

[Berowne steps forth, and speaks to Costard.

Prin. Speak, brave Hector; we are much delighted.

Arm. I do adore thy sweet Grace's Is heavy in my tongue. The King your slipper.

Boyet. [Aside to Dumain] Loves her by the foot.

Dum. [Aside to Boyet] He may not by the vard.

Aim. This Hector far surmounted Hannıbal-

Cost. The party is gone, fellow Hector. she is gone; she is two months on her will right myself like a soldier.

Arm. What meanest thou?

Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Troyan, the poor wench is cast away. She's quick; the child brags in her belly already; 'tis yours.

Arm. Dost thou in amonize me among potentates? Thou shalt die.

Cost. Then shall Hector be whipt for Jaquenetta that is quick by him, and hang'd for Pompey that is dead by him. 670

Dum. Most rare Pompey! Boyet. Renowned Pompey!

Ber. Greater than Great! Great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the Huge!

Dum. Hector trembles. Ber. Pompey is moved. More Ates, more

Ates! Stir them on! stir them on! Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Ber. Ay, if 'a have no more man's blood in his belly than will sup a flea.

Arm. By the North Pole, I do challenge thee.

Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a Northren man; I'll slash; I'll do it by the sword. I bepray you, let me borrow my arms again.

Dum. Room for the incensed Worthies! Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey!

Moth. Master, let me take you a buttonhole lower. Do you not see Pompey is uncasing for the combat? What mean you? You will lose your reputation.

Arm. Gentlemen and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.

Dum. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.

Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will. Ber. What reason have you for 't? Arm. The naked truth of it is: I have no shirt; I go woolward for penance.

Boyet. True, and it was enjoined him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, he wore none but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, and that 'a wears next his heart for a favour.

Enter as messenger. Monsieur Marcade.

Mar. God save you, madam! Welcome, Marcade; Mar. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring father-Pru... Dead, for my life!

Mar. Even so; my tale is told. Ber. Worthies, away; the scene begins to cloud.

Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath. I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I Exeunt Worthies.

King. 115w fares your Majesty? Prin. Boyet, prepare; I will away to night. King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you stay.

Prin. Prepare, I say. I thank you. gracious lords.

For all your fair endeavours, and entreat, Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe In your rich wisdom to excuse or hide 720 The liberal opposition of our spirits.

If over-boldly we have borne ourselves In the converse of breath—your gentleness Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord. A heavy heart bears not a n mble tongue. Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks

For my great suit so easily obtain'd.

King. The extreme parts of time extremely forms

All causes to the purpose of his speed; And often at his very loose decides That which long process could not arbitrate.

And though the mourning brow of progeny Forbid the smiling courtesy of love The holy suit which fain it would convince. Yet, since love's argument was first on foot, Let not the cloud of sorrow justle it From what it purpos'd; since to wail friends lost Is not by much so wholesome-profitable As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not; my griefs are double.

Ber. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;

And by these badges understand the King. For your fair sakes have we neglected time, Play'd foul play with our oaths; your beauty, ladies,

Hath much deformed us, fashioning our humours

Even to the opposed end of our intents; And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous, As love is full of unbefitting strains,

All wanton as a child, skipping and vain; Form'd by the eye and therefore, like the eye, Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms.

But that thou interruptest our merriment. Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll

To every varied object in his glance: Which parti-coated presence of loose love Put on by us, if in your heavenly eyes 755 Have misbecom'd our oaths and gravities, Those heavenly eyes that look into these The sudden hand of death close up mine faults

Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies, Our love being yours, the error that love makes

Is likewise yours. We to ourselves prove false. By being once false for ever to be true To those that make us both-fair ladies, you; And even that falsehood, in itself a sin, Thus purifies itself and turns to grace.

Prin. We have receiv'd your letters, full of love:

Your favours, the ambassadors of love; And, in our maiden council, rated them At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As bombast and as lining to the time; But more devout than this in our respects Have we not been; and therefore met your loves

In their own fashion, like a merriment.

Dum. Our letters, madam, show'd much more than jest.

Long. So did our looks.

We did not quote them so. Ros. King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour.

Grant us your loves.

A time, methinks, too short To make a world-without-end bargain in. No, no, my lord, your Grace is perjur'd much.

Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this, I'll change my black gown for a faithful If for my love, as there is no such cause, You will do aught-this shall you do for me:

Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed To some forlorn and naked hermitage. Remote from all the pleasures of the world: There stay until the twelve celestial signs Have brought about the annual reckoning. If this austere insociable life Change not your offer made in heat of blood.

If frosts and fasts, hard lodging and thin weeds.

Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love, But that it bear this trial, and last love, Then, at the expiration of the year, Come, challenge me, challenge me by these deserts: And, by this virgin palm now kissing thine, I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut My woeful self up in a mournful house, Raining the tears of lamentation For the remembrance of my father's death.

If this thou do deny, let our hands part, Neither intitled in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny.

To flatter up these powers of mine with rest, eve!

Hence hermit then, my heart is in thy breast. Ber. And what to me, my love? and what to me?

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rack'd .

You are attaint with faults and perjury: Therefore, if you my favour mean to get,

A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never

But seek the weary beds of people sick. Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

A wife?

Kath. A beard, fair health, and honesty: With threefold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. O, shall I say I thank you, gentle wife?

Kath. Not so, my lord; a twelvemonth and a day

I'll mark no words that smooth-fac'd wooers say.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST

To every varied object in his glance: Which parti-coated presence of loose love Put on by us, if in your heavenly eyes 755 Have misbecom'd our oaths and gravities Those heavenly eyes that look into these faults

Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies, Our love being yours, the error that love makes

Is likewise yours. We to ourselves prove false.

By being once false for ever to be true To those that make us both-fair ladies,

And even that falsehood, in itself a sin, Thus purifies itself and turns to grace. Prin. We have receiv'd your letters, full

Your favours, the ambassadors of love; And, in our maiden council, rated them At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As bombast and as lining to the time; But more devout than this in our respects Have we not been; and therefore met your loves

In their own fashion, like a merriment. more than jest.

Long. So did our looks.

We did not quote them so. Ros. King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour.

Grant us your loves.

A time, methinks, too short To make a world-without-end bargain in. No, no, my lord, your Grace is perjur'd much,

Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this, If for my love, as there is no such cause, You will do aught—this shall you do for me:

Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage. Remote from all the pleasures of the world; There stay until the twelve celestial signs Have brought about the annual reckoning. If this austere insociable life

Change not your offer made in heat of blood.

If frosts and fasts, hard lodging and thin Before I saw you; and the world's large

Come, challenge me, challenge me by these deserts;

And, by this virgin palm now kissing thine, I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut My woeful self up in a mournful house, Raining the tears of lamentation For the remembrance of my father's death.

If this thou do deny, let our hands part, Neither intitled in the other's heart.

ACT ONE

HERMIA, daughter to Egeus, in love with

Scene I. Athens. The palace of Theseus. Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial

Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon; but, O, methinks, how slow

This old moon wanes! She lingers my desires.

Like to a step-dame or a dowager. Long withering out a young man's revenue. Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;

Four nights will quickly dream away the

And then the moon, like to a silver bow New-bent in heaven, shall behold the night Of our solemnities.

Go, Philostrate, Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments; Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth; Turn melancholy forth to funerals; The pale companion is not for our pomp. 15

Exit Philostrate. Hippolyta, I woo'd thee with my sword, And won thy love doing thee injuries; But I will wed thee in another key, With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling.

Enter EGEUS, and his daughter HERMIA. LYSANDER, and DEMETRIUS.

Duke!

The. Thanks, good Egeus; what's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint

Against my child, my caughter Hermia. Stand forth, Demetrius. My noble lord, This man hath my consent to marry her. 25 Stand forth, Lysander. And, my gracious Duke.

This man hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child.

Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes.

And interchang'd love-tokens with my child:

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,

With feigning voice, verses of feigning love, And stol'n the impression of her fantasy With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits.

Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeatsmessengers

Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth:

With cunning hast thou filch'd mv daughter's heart;

Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me, To stubborn harshness. And, my gracious Duke,

Be it so she will not here before your Grace Consent to marry with Demetrius. I beg the ancient privilege of Athens: As she is mine I may dispose of her; Which shall be either to this gentleman Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned Or to her death, according to our law Immediately provided in that case.

The. What say you, Hermia? Be advis'd, fair maid.

To you your father should be as a god; One that compos'd your beauties; yea and one

To whom you are but as a form in wax, By him imprinted, and within his power 50 To leave the figure, or disfigure it. Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

The. In himself he is;
But, in this kind, wanting your father's voice,

The other must be held the worthier. 55
Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment look.

Her. I do entreat your Grace to pardon me.

I know not by what power I am made bold, Nor how it may concein my modesty 60 In such a piesence here to plead my thoughts;

But I beseech your Grace that I may know The worst that may befall me in this case, If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to die the death, or to abjure For ever the society of men.

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires,

Know of your youth, examine well your blood,

Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice.

You can endure the livery of a nun, 70 For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd, To live a barren sister all your life, Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.

Thrice-blessed they that master so their blood

To undergo such maiden pilgrimage; 75 But earthlier happy is the rose distill'd Than that which withering on the virgin thorn

Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,

Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause; and by the next new moon—

The sealing-day betwixt my love and me
For everlasting bond of fellowship—

Upon that day either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would,
Or on Diana's altar to protest
For aye austerity and single life.

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia; and,
Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;

Let me have Hermia's; do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander, true, he hath my love;

95

And what is mine my love shall render him;

And she is mine; and all my right of her I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he, As well possess'd; my love is more than his;

My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
If not with vantage, as Demetrius';
And, which is more than all these boasts can be.

I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia.

Why should not I then prosecute my right?

Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,

Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,

And won her soul; and she, sweet lady,

dotes, Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,

Upon this spotted and inconstant man. rre
The. I must confess that I have heard so much.

And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;

But, being over-full of self-affairs, My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come; And come, Egeus; you shall go with me; I have some private schooling for you both. For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself To fit your fancies to your father's will, Or else the law of Athens yields you up—Which by no means we may extenuate—To death, or to a vow of single life. 12x Come, my Hippolyta; what cheer, my love?

Demetrius, and Egeus, go along;
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial, and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

Ege. With duty and desire we follow you.
[Exeunt all but Lysander and Hermia.
Lys. How now, my love! Why is your cheek so pale?

How chance the roses there do fade so fast?

Her. Belike for want of rain, which I could well

Beteem them from the tempest of my eyes.

Lys. Ay me! for aught that I could ever read.

Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;

But either it was different in blood——

Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low.

Lys. Or else misgraffed in respect of years—

Her. O spite! too old to be engag'd to young.

friends-

Her. O hell! to choose love by another's eyes.

Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,

War, death, or sickness, did lay siege to it, Making it momentary as a sound, Swift as a shadow, short as any dream, Brief as the lightning in the collied night 145 That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth. And ere a man hath power to say 'Behold!' The jaws of darkness do devour it up;

So quick bright things come to confusion. Her. If then true lovers have been ever cross'd.

It stands as an edict in destiny.

Then let us teach our trial patience,

Because it is a customary cross,

As due to love as thoughts and dreams and sighs.

Wishes and tears, poor Fancy's followers. Lys. A good persuasion; therefore, hear me, Hermia:

I have a widow aunt, a dowager Of great revenue, and she hath no child— From Athens is her house remote seven leagues-

And she respects me as her only son. There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee; And to that place the sharp Athenian law Cannot pursue us. If thou lovest me then. Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night: And in the wood, a league without the

Where I did meet thee once with Helena To do observance to a morn of May,

There will I stay for thee.

My good Lysander! Her. I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow, By his best arrow, with the golden head, 170 By the simplicity of Venus' doves, By that which knitteth souls and prospers loves, And by that fire which buin'd the Carthage Queen,

When the false Troyan under sail was seen, By all the vows that ever men have broke, In number more than ever women spoke, In that same place thou hast appointed me, To-moriow truly will I meet with thee.

Lys. Keep promise, love. Look, here comes Helena.

Enter HELENA.

Her. God speed fair Helena! Whither away 3

Hel. Call you me fair? That fair again unsav.

Demetrius loves vour fair. O happy fair! Your eyes are lode-stars and your From tongue's sweet air

Hel. None, but your beauty; would that fault were mine!

Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face;

That he hath turn'd a heaven unto a hell!

Lys. Helen, to you our minds we will unfold:

To-morrow night, when Phobe doth behold Her silver visage in the wat'iv glass. Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass, A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal, Through Athens' gates have we devis'd to steal.

Her. And in the wood where often you and I

Upon faint primrose beds were wont to lie. Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet,

There my Lysander and myself shall meet; And thence from Athens turn away our eyes,

To seek new friends and stranger companies.

And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius! Keep word, Lysander; we must starve our sight lovers' food till morrow midnight.

Lys. I will, my Hermia. [Exit Hermia. Ĥelena adieu:

As you on him, Demetrius dote on you! 225 Exit Lysander.

Hel. How happy some o'er other some can be !

Through Athens I am thought as fair as she. But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so; He will not know what all but he do know. And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes, 230 So I, admiring of his qualities.

Things base and vile, holding no quantity. Love can transpose to form and dignity. Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind;

And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind.

Nor hath Love's mind of any judgment taste; Wings and no eyes figure unheedy haste:

And therefore is Love said to be a child. Because in choice he is so oft beguil'd. As waggish boys in game themselves for-

So the boy Love is perjur'd everywhere; For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's evne. He hail'd down oaths that he was only mine;

And when this hail some heat from Heimia felt.

So he dissolv'd, and show'rs of oaths did you. melt.

I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight: Then to the wood will he to-morrow night Pursue her; and for this intelligence If I have thanks, it is a dear expense. But herein mean I to enrich my pain, To have his sight thither and back again.

SCENE II. Athens. Quince's house.

man by man, according to the scrip. Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the Duke and the Duchess on his wedding-day at night.

Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors; and so grow to a point. 9

Quin. Marry, our play is 'The most Lamentable Comedy and most Cruel Death of Pyramus and Thisby'.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer, as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bortom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus? A lover, or a

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.

Quin. That's all one; you shall play it [Exit. in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.

Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice: 'Thisne, Thisne!' [Then speaking small 'Ah Pyramus, my lover dear! Thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!'

Quin. No, no, you must play Pyramus; and, Flute, you Thisby.

Bot. Well, proceed.

Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.

Star. Here, Peter Quince. Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play

Thisby's mother. Tom Snout, the tinker. Snout. Here, Peter Quince. 54 Quin. You, Pyramus' father; myself, Thisby's father; Snug, the joiner, you, the lion's part. And, I hope, here is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the lion's part written? Pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.

Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bot. Let me play the lion too. I will roar that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar that I will make the Duke say 'Let him roar again, let him roar again'.

Quin. An you should do it too terribly you would fright the Duchess and the ladies, that they would shrick; and tha were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us, every mother's

Bot. I grant you, friends, if you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us; but I will aggravate my voice so, tha I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pylamus for Pyramus is a sweet-fac'd man; proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely gentleman-like man therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play baiefac'd. But, masters, here are your parts; and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moonlight; there will we reheatse; for if we meet in the city, we shall be dogg'd with company, and our devices known. In the meantime I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not.

Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse most obscenely and courageously. Take pains; be perfect; adieu.

Quin. At the Duke's oak we meet. 97
Bot. Enough; hold, or cut bow-strings.
[Execunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. A wood near Athens.

Enter a Fairy at one door, and PUCK at another.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale,

Thorough bush, thorough brier, Over park, over pale, Thorough flood, thorough fire, I do wander every where, Swifter than the moon's sphere; And I serve the Fairy Queen, To dew her orbs upon the green.

The cowships tall her pensioners be; In their gold coats spots you see; Those be rubies, fairy favours, In those freckles live their sayours.

I must go seek some dewdrops here, And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. 15 Farewell, thou lob of spirits; I'll be gone. Our Queen and all bar elses come here appe.

Our Queen and all her elves come here anon. Puck. The King doth keep his revels here

Take heed the Queen come not within his sight;

For Oberon is passing fell and wrath, 20 Because that she as her attendant hath A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king. She never had so sweet a changeling; And jealous Oberon would have the child Knight of his train, to trace the forests wild; But she perforce withholds the loved boy, Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her lov.

And now they never meet in grove or green, By fountain clear, or spangled starlight sheen.

But they do square, that all their elves for fear

Creep into acorn cups and hide them there. Fai. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,

Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite

Call'd Robin Goodfellow. Are not you he That frights the maidens of the villagery, Sk m milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,

And bootless make the breathless housewife churn,

And sometime make the drink to bear no barm,

Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?

Those that Hobgobhn call you, and sweet Puck,

You do their work, and they shall have good luck.

Are not you he?

Puck. Thou speakest aright:

I am that merry wanderer of the night. I jest to Oberon, and make him sm.le When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, 45 Neighing in likeness of a filly foal; And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl In very likeness of a roasted crab, And, when she drinks, against her lips

I bob,
And on her withered dewlap pour the ale.
The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh

me;
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she,

And 'tailor' cries, and falls into a cough; And then the whole quire hold their hips and laugh, And waxen in their mirth, and neese, and The auman mortals want their winter swear.

A merrier hour was never wasted there. But room, fairy, here comes Oberon. Fai. And here my mistress. Would that he were gone!

Enter OBERON at one door, with his Train. and TITANIA, at another, with hers.

Obe. Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania. Tita. What, jealous Oberon! Fairies. skip hence;

I have forsworn his bed and company, Obe. Tarry, rash wanton; am not I thy lord?

Tita. Then I must be thy lady; but I know

When thou hast stolen away from fairy land.

And in the shape of Corin sat all day. Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love To amorous Phillida. Why art thou here. Come from the farthest steep of India, But that, forsooth, the bouncing Amazon, Your buskin'd mistress and your warrior love,

To Theseus must be wedded, and you come

To give their bed joy and prosperity? Obe. How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania, Glance at my credit with Hippolyta, Knowing I know thy love to Theseus? Didst not thou lead him through the glimmering night

From Perigouna, whom he ravished? And make him with fair Ægles break his

With Ariadne and Antiopa?

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy; And never, since the middle summer's spring,

Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead, By paved fountain, or by rushy brook, Or in the beached margent of the sea, To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind, But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.

Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain, As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea Contagious fogs; which, falling in the land, Hath every pelting river made so proud 91 That they have overborne their continents. The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,

The ploughman lost his sweat, and the green corn

Hath rotted ere his youth attain'd a beard; The fold stands empty in the drowned field, And crows are fatted with the murr.on flock;

The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud, And the quaint mazes in the wanton green, For lack of tread, are undistinguishable. 100 here:

No night is now with hymn or carol blest; Therefore the moon, the governess of floods. Pale in her anger, washes all the air. That rheumatic diseases do abound. And thorough this distemperature we see The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose: And on old Hiems' thin and icy crown 100 An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds Is, as in mockery, set. The spring, the summer,

The childing autumn, angry winter, change Their wonted liveries; and the mazed world.

By their increase, now knows not which is which.

And this same progeny of evils comes 115 From our debate, from our dissension; We are their parents and original.

Obe. Do you amend it, then; it lies in vou.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon? I do but beg a little changeling boy To be my henchman.

Tita. Set your heart at rest: The fairy land buys not the child of me. His mother was a vot'ress of my order; And, in the spiced Indian air, by night, Full often hath she gossip'd by my side; 125 And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands, Marking th' embarked traders on the flood: When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive

And grow big-bellied with the wanton wind: Which she, with pretty and with swimming

Following—her womb then rich with my young squire—

Would imitate, and sail upon the land, To fetch me trifles, and return again, As from a voyage, rich with merchandise. But she, being mortal, of that boy did die:

And for her sake do I rear up her boy; 136 And for her sake I will not part with him. Obe. How long within this wood intend vou stav? Tita. Perchance till after Theseus' wedding-day.

If you will patiently dance in our round, 140 And see our moonlight revels, go with us; If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.

Obe. Give me that boy and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairles, away.

We shall chide downright if I longer stay. [Exit Titania with her Train. Obe. Well, go thy way; thou shalt not from this grove

Till I torment thee for this injury.

My gentle Puck, come hither. memb'rest

To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember. Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not. Flying between the cold moon and the earth

Cupid, all arm'd; a certain aim he took At a fair vestal, throned by the west, And loos'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow.

As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts;

But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft Quench'd in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon; And the imperial vot'ress passed on, In maiden meditation, fancy-free. Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell. It fell upon a little western-flower. Before milk-white, now purple with love's

And maidens call it Love-in-idleness. Fetch me that flow'r, the herb I showed thee once. The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid 170 Will make or man or woman madly dote Upon the next live creature that it sees. Fetch me this herb, and be thou here again Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about the earth

[Exit Puck. In forty minutes. Ohe. Having once this juice, I'll watch Titania when she is asleep, And drop the liquor of it in her eyes; The next thing then she waking looks upon, Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull, On meddling monkey, or on busy ape, She shall pursue it with the soul of love. And ere I take this charm from off her sight,

As I can take it with another herb, I'll make her render up her page to me. 185 But who comes here? I am invisible; And I will overhear their conference.

Enter DEMETRIUS, HELENA following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.

Where is Lysander and fair Hermia? The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me. 190 Thou told'st me they were stol'n unto this wood.

And here am I, and wood within this wood, Because I cannot meet my Hermia.

Thou re- Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more.

You draw me, you hard-hearted Hel. adamant; But yet you draw not iron, for my heart Is true as steel. Leave you your power to draw, Dem. Do I entice you? Do I speak you

Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth Tell you I do not nor I cannot love you? Hel. And even for that do I love you the more.

I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius, The more you beat me, I will fawn on you. Use me but as your spaniel, spurn me, strike Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave. Unworthy as I am, to follow you.

What worser place can I beg in your love, And yet a place of high respect with me. Than to be used as you use your dog? 210

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit;

For I am sick when I do look on thee.

Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you.

Dem. You do impeach your modesty too much

To leave the city and commit yourself 215 Into the hands of one that loves you not; To trust the opportunity of night, And the ill counsel of a desert place,

With the rich worth of your virginity. Hel. Your virtue is my privilege for that:

It is not night when I do see your face, Therefore I think I am not in the night; Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company,

For you, in my respect, are all the world. Then how can it be said I am alone When all the world is here to look on me? Dem. I'll run from thee and hide me in the brakes.

And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts. Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you. Run when you will; the story shall be chang'd:

Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase; The dove pursues the griffin; the mild hind

Makes speed to catch the tiger-bootless speed,

When cowardice pursues and valour flies. Dem. I will not stay thy questions; let me go;

Or, if thou follow me, do not believe But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,

You do me mischief. Fie, Demetrius I

Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex. 240 We cannot fight for love as men may do: We should be woo'd, and were not made [Exit Demetrius. to woo.

I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell, To die upon the hand I love so well.

Exit Helena. Obe. Fare thee well, nymph; ere he do leave this grove. Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.

Re-enter Puck.

Hast thou the flower there? wanderer.

Puck. Av. there it is.

Obe. I pray thee give it me. I know a bank where the wild thyme blows, Where oxlips and the nodding violet grows, Quite over-canopied with luscious woodhine.

With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine; There sleeps Titania sometime of the night, Lull'd in these flowers with dances and delight:

And there the snake throws her enamell'd skın, Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in; And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,

And make her full of hateful fantasies. Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove:

A sweet Athenian lady is in love With a disdainful youth; anoint his eyes: But do it when the next thing he espies May be the lady. Thou shalt know the man By the Athenian gaiments he hath on. Effect it with some care, that he may prove More fond on her than she upon her love. And look thou meet me ere the first cock And, to speak troth, I have forgot our crow

Puck. Fear not, my loid; your servant shall do so. [Exeunt, Scene II. Another part of the wood. Enter TITANIA, with her Train.

Tita. Come now, a roundel and a fairy song;

Then, for the third part of a minute, hence: Some to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds; Some war with rere-mice for their leathern wings,

To make my small elves coats; and some keep back

The clamorous owl that nightly hoots and wonders

At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep; Then to your offices, and let me rest.

The Fairies sing.

1 Fairy. You spotted snakes with double tongue.

Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen; to Newts and blind-worms, do no wrong.

Come not near our fairy Queen.

Chorus. Philomel with melody Sing in our sweet lullaby. Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Never harm Nor spell nor charm

Come our lovely lady nigh. So good night, with lullaby, 19

Welcome, 2 Fairy. Weaving spiders, come not here; Hence, you long-legg'd spinners, hence.

Beetles black, approach not near; Worm nor snarl do no offence.

Chorus. Philomel with melody, etc. Titania sleeps.

1 Farry. Hence away; now all is well. 25 One aloof stand sentinel. [Exeunt Fairies.

Enter OBERON and squeezes the flower on Titania's evelids.

Obe. What thou seest when thou dost wake.

Do it for thy true-love take; Love and languish for his sake. Be it ounce, or cat, or bear, 30 Pard, or boar with bristled hair, In thy eye that shall appear When thou wak'st, it is thy dear. Wake when some vile thing is near. [Exit.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wand'ring in the wood; way:

We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good. And tarry for the comfort of the day.

Her. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed,

For I upon this bank will rest my head. 40 Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both:

One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth.

Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear,

Lie further off yet; do not lie so near. Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence! Love takes the meaning in love's conference. I mean that my heart unto yours is knit, So that but one heart we can make of it; Two bosoms interchained with an oath, So then two bosoms and a single troth. 50

Then by your side no bed-room me deny, For lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.

Her. Lysander riddles very prettily. Now much beshrew my manners and my pride,

If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied! 55
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lie turther off, in human modesty;
Such separation as may well be said
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid,
So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend.

Thy love ne'er alter till thy sweet life end!

Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer

And then end life when I end loyalty!
Here is my bed; sleep give thee all his rest!
Her. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd!
[They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none 67
On whose eyes I might approve
This flower's force in stirring love.
Night and silence—Who is here?
Weeds of Athens he doth wear:
This is he, my master said,
Despised the Athenian maid;
And here the maiden, sleeping sound,

On the dank and dirty ground. 75 Pretty soul! she durst not lie Near this lack-love, this kill-courtesy.

Churl, upon thy eyes I throw All the power this charm doth Enter DEMETRIUS and HELENA, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.

Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.

Hel. O, wilt thou darkling leave me? Do not so.

Dem. Stay on thy peril; I alone will go.

[Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase!

The more my prayer, the lesser is my Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies, 90 For she hath blessed and attractive eyes. How came here eyes so bright? Not with salt tears;

If so, my eyes are oft'ner wash'd than hers.
No, no, I am as ugly as a bear,
For beasts that meet me run away for fear;

Therefore no marvel though Demetrius 93 Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus. What wicked and dissembling glass of mine

Made me compare with Hermia's sphery eyne?

But who is here? Lysander! on the ground! roo Dead, or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.

Lysander, if you live, good sir, awa'te.

Lysander, if you live, good sir, aware.

Lys. [Waking] And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.

Transparent Helena! Nature shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.

Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word Is that vile name to perish on my sword! Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so. What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?

Yet Heimia still loves you; then be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia! No; I do repent

The tedious minutes I with her have spent. Not Hermia but Helena I love:

Who will not change a raven for a dove? The will of man is by his reason swav'd, 115 And reason says you are the worthier maid. Things growing are not ripe until their season;

So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;

And touching now the point of human skill,

Reason becomes the marshal to my will, 120 And leads me to your eyes, where I o'erlook Love's stories, written in Love's richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?

When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?

Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man, 125

That I did never, no, nor never can, Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye, But you must flout m_f insufficiency? Good troth, you do me wrong, good sooth, you do, In such disdainful manner me to woo. 130 But fare you well; perforce I must confess I thought you lord of more true gentleness. O, that a lady of one man refus'd

Should of another therefore be abus'd!

Lys. She sees not Hermia. Hermia, sleep thou there;

And never may st thou come Lysander near! For, as a suifeit of the sweetest things. The deepest leathing to the stomach i rings, Or as the heresies that men do leave. Are hated most of those they did deceive, So thou, my surfeit and my heresy, 141 Of all be hated, but the most of me! And, all my powers, address your love and

To honour Helen, and to be her knight!

Her. [Starting] Help me, Lysander, help me; do thy best To pluck this crawling serpent from my

What, out of hearing gone? No sound, no word?

Alack, where are you? Speak, an if you hear:

Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.

No? Then I well perceive you are not nigh. Either death or you I'll find immediately. [Ext.

ACT THREE

Scene I. The wood. Titania lying asleep. Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, SNOUT, and STARVELING.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiring-house; and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the Duke.

Bot. Peter Quince!

Quin. What sayest thou, bully Bottom? Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

Snout. By'r lakin, a parlous fear.

Star. I believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit; I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not kill'd indeed; and for the more better assurance, tell them that I Pyramus am not Pyramus but Bottom the weaver. This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Wel, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six. Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afeard of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourself to bring in-God shield us !--a lion among ladies is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to't.

Snout. Therefore another prologue must [Exit. tell he is not a Lon.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through. saying thus, or to the same defect: 'Ladies. or 'Fair ladies, I would wish you' or 'I would request you' or 'I would entreat you not to fear, not to tremble. My life for yours! If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life. No, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are'. And there, indeed, let him name his name. and tell them plainly he is Snug the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things-that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for, you know. Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Snout. Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! Look in the almanack; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then may you leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say he comes to disfigure or to present the person of Moonshine. Then there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snout. You can never bring in a wall.

What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present Wall: and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some rough-cast about him, to signify wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin; when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What hempen homespuns have we swagg'ring here,

So near the cradle of the Fairy Queen? What, a play toward! I'll be an auditor; An actor too perhaps, if I see cause. Quin. Speak, Pyramus. Thisby, stand forth.

Bot. Thisby, the flowers of odious savours sweet-

Quin. 'Odious '--odorous!

-odours savours sweet ; Bot .-So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear. But hark, a voice! Stay thou but here awhile, And by and by I will to thee abbear. [Exit Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e'er played here! [Exit

Flu. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

Flu. Most radiant Pyramus, most lilywhite of hue,

Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most brisky juvenal, and eke most lovely Jew.

As true as truest horse, that yet would never

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb.

Quin. 'Ninus' tomb', man! Why, you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at once, cues and all. Pyramus enter: your cue is past; it is 'never tire'.

Flu. O-As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head.

Bot. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine.

Ouin. O monstrous! O strange! We are haunted. Pray masters! fly, masters! Help!

[Exeunt all but Bottom and Puck. Puck. I'll follow you; I'll lead you about a round,

Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier;

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound, A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire; And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn.

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every IExit.

Bot. Why do they run away? This is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Re-enter SNOUT.

Snout. O Bottom, thou art chang'd! What do I see on thee?

Bot. What do you see? You see an asshead of your own, do you? [Exit Snout.

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom, bless thee! Thou art translated. [Exit. 109 Bot. I see their knavery: this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can; I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid. [Sings.

> The ousel cock, so black of hue, With orange-tawny bill. The throstle with his note so true, The wren with little quill.

Tita. What angel wakes me from my flow'ry bed?

Bot. [Sings]

The finch, the sparrow, and the lark. The plain-song cuckoo grey, 120 Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer nay-for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? Who would give a bird the lie, though he cry 'cuckoo' never so? 124

Tuta. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again.

Mine ear is much enamoured of thy note: So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape; And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me,

On-the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that. And yet, to say the tiuth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days. The more the pity that some honest neighbours will not make Nay, I can gleek upon them friends. occasion.

Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go; Thou shalt remain here whether thou wilt or no.

I am a spirit of no common rate: The summer still doth tend upon my state; And I do love thee; therefore, go with

I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee; And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:

And I will purge thy mortal grossness so That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Peaseblossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustardseed!

Enter PEASEBLOSSOM, COBWEB, MOTH, and MUSTARDSEED.

Peas. Ready.

Cob. And I. Moth. And I.

Mus. And I.

All. Where shall we go? Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman ;

Hop in his walks and gambol in his eyes; Feed him with apricocks and dewberries. With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries ;

The honey bags steal from the humble-bees. And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs. 155

And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eves.

To have my love to bed and to arise: And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,

To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes.

Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies. тбт

Peas. Hail, moital!

Cob. Hail!

Moth. Hail! Mus. Hail!

Pot. I cry your worships mercy, heartily; I beseech your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb. If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentleman?

Mus. Mustardseed.

Bot. Good Master Mustardseed, I know your patience well. That same cowardly grant-like ox-beef hath devour'd many a gentleman of your house. I promise you your kindied hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Mustardseed.

Tita. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.

The moon, methinks, looks with a wat'ry eve:

And when she weeps, weeps every little flower.

Scene II. Another part of the wood. Enter OBERON.

Ohe. I wonder if Titania be awak'd; Then, what it was that next came in her eye, Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger. How now, mad spirit!

What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.

Near to her close and consecrated bower, While she was in her dull and sleeping hour, A crew of patches, rude mechanicals, That work for bread upon Athenian stalls, Were met together to rehearse a play Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.

The shallowest thickskin of that barren sort. Who Pyramus presented, in their sport Forsook his scene and ent'red in a brake; When I did him at this advantage take, 16 An ass's nole I fixed on his head.

Anon his Thisby must be answered,

And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy.

As wild geese that the creeping fowler eye, Or russet-pated choughs, many in sort, 21 Rising and cawing at the gun's report, Sever themselves and madly sweep the sky, So at his sight away his fellows fly;

And at our stamp here, o'er and o'er one falls:

He murder cries, and help from Athens calls. Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong, Made senseless things begin to do them wrong, For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch:

Some sleeves, some hats, from yielders all things catch. I led them on in this distracted fear.

And left sweet Pyramus translated there; When in that moment, so it came to pass, Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise. But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do? Puck. I took him sleeping-that is

Enter DEMETRIUS and HERMIA.

Stand close; this is the same Athenian.

Puck. This is the woman, but not this the Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?

Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe. Her. Now I but chide, but I should use thee worse,

For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.

If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep, Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep.

And kill me too.

The sun was not so true unto the day As he to me. Would he have stolen away From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon This whole earth may be bor'd, and that the moon

May through the centre creep and so displease Her brother's noontide with th' Antipodes. So should a murderer look-so dead, so giun.

Dem. So should the murdered look: and so should I.

Pierc'd through the heart with your stern I'll charm his eyes against she do appear. cruelty;

Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,

As vonder Venus in her glimmering sphere. Her. What's this to my Lysander? Where is he?

Ah. good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me? Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.

Her. Out, dog! out, cur! Thou driv'st me past the bounds

Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him, then?

O, once tell true; tell true, even for my sake!

Durst thou have look'd upon him being awake.

And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave

Could not a worm, an adder, do so much? An adder did it; for with doubler tongue Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood:

Not is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

Her. I provides the dead. I am not guilty of Lysander's blood; Her. I pray thee, tell me then that he is Dem. An if I could, what should I get therefore?

Her. A privilege never to see me more. And from thy hated piesence part I so; 80 See me no more whether he be dead or no. [Exit

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein ; Here, therefore, for a while I will remain. So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe:

Which now in some slight measure it will pay,

If for his tender here I make some stay. [Lies down.

Obe. What hast thou done? Thou hast mistaken quite.

And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight.

Of thy misprision must perforce ensue Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

Puck. Then fate o'er-rules, that, one man holding troth,

A million fail, confounding oath on oath. Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind.

It cannot be but thou hast murd'red him; And Helena of Athens look thou find; 95 All fancy sick she is and pale of cheer, With sighs of love that costs the fresh blood dear.

By some illusion see thou bring her nere: Puck. I go, I go; look how I go, Switter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit.

Obe. Flower of this purple dve. Hit with Cupid's archery, Sink in apple of his eye. When his love he doth espy, 205 Let her shine as gloriously A the Venus of the sky. When thou wak'st, if she be by, Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.

Henceforth be never numb'red among men! Puck. Captain of our fairy band.  Helena is here at hand, And the youth mistook by me Pleading for a lover's fee; Shall we their fond pageant see? Lord, what fools these mortals be! 115 Stand aside. The noise they make

Obe. Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one. That must needs be sport alone; And those things do best please me That befall prepost'rously.

Enter LYSANDER and HELENA.

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?

Scorn and derision never come in tears. Look when 1 vow, I weep; and vows so

In their nativity all truth appears. How can these things in me seem scorn to Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.

When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!

These vows are Hermia's. Will you give her o'er?

W'eigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:

Your vows to her and me, put in two scales, Will even weigh; and both as light as tales. Lys. I had no judgment when to her I swore. Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er. Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

[Awaking] O Helen, nymph, perfect, divine!

To what, my love, shall I compare thine eyne? Crystal is muddy. O, how ripe in show Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy grow!

That pure congealed white, high Tar rus snow. Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a

This princess of pure white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent

To set against me for your merriment. If you were civil and knew courtesy, You would not do me thus much injury. Can you not hate me, as I know you do, But you must join in souls to mock me too?

If you were men, as men you are in show, You would not use a gentle lady so: To yow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,

When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

You both are rivals, and love Hermia: 155 And now both rivals, to mock Helena. A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,

To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes With your derision! None of noble sort Would so offend a virgin, and extort A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius; be not so:

For you love Hermia. This you know I know:

And here, with all good will, with all my

In Hermia's love I yield you up my part; And yours of Helena to me bequeath, 166 Whom I do love and will do till my death. Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will

If e'er I lov'd her, all that love is gone. 170 My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn'd, And now to Helen is it home return'd. There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so. Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know, Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear. Look where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Enter HERMIA.

Fair Helena, who more engilds the night Than all you fiery oes and eyes of light. Why seek'st thou me? Could not this make thee know

The hate I bare thee made me leave thee so? Her. You speak not as you think; it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy! Now I perceive they have conjoin'd all three To fashion this false sport in spite of me. Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid! Have you conspir'd, have you with these contriv'd.

As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds. Had been incorporate. So we grew together. Like to a double cherry, seeming parted. But yet an union in partition, Two lovely berries moulded on one stem:

So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart: Two of the first, like coats in heraldry, Due but to one, and crowned with one

And will you rent our ancient ic e asunder, To join with men in scorning your poor friend?

It is not friendly, 'tis not inaidenly; Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it, Though I alone do feel the injury.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words: I scorn you not; it seems that you scorn me. Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in Deny your love, so rich within his soul, And tender me, forsooth, affection, But by your setting on, by your consent? What though I be not so in grace as you, So hung upon with love, so fortunate, But miserable most, to love unlov'd?

This you should pity rather than despise. Her. I understand not what you mean by this. Hel. Ay, do-persever, counterfeit sad

Wink each at other; hold the sweet jest up; This sport, v 1 carried, shall be chronicled. If you have any pity, grace, or manners, You would not make me such an argument. But fare ye well: 'tis partly my own fault, Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy. Lys. Stay, gentle Helena; hear my excuse: My love, my life, my soul, faii Helena!

Hel. O excellent!

Sweet, do not scorn her so. Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel. Lvs. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:

Lys. Ay, by my life!

And never did desire to see thee more. Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt:

Be certain nothing truer; 'tis no jest That I do nate thee and love Helena.

Her. O me! you juggler! you cankerblossom !

goes the game. pare 200

Between our statures; she hath urg'd her height:

And with her personage, her tall personage. Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him.

And are you grown so high in his esteem Because I am so dwarfish and so low? 295 How low am I, thou painted maypole? Speak.

How low am I? I am not yet so low But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen, Let her not hurt me. I was never curst; 300

I have no gift at all in shrewishness; I am a right maid for my cowardice: Let her not strike me. You perhaps may think, Because she is something lower than myself, That I can match her.

Lower' hark, again. 305 Her. Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.

I evermore did love you, Hermia, Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you;

300

Save that, in love unto Demetrius.

I told him of your stealth unto this wood. And so far am I glad it so did sort, He followed you; for love I followed him; But he hath chid me hence, and threat'ned

To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too; And now, so you will let me quiet go, To Athens will I bear my folly back, And follow you no further. Let me go. You see how simple and how fond I am.

Her. Why, get you gone! Who is't that hinders you?

Hel. A foolish heart that I leave here behind.

Her. What! with Lysander?

With Demetrius. 320 Hel. Lys. Be not afraid; she shall not harm thee, Helena.

Dem. No, sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O, when she is angry, she is keen and shrewd:

She was a vixen when she went to school: And, though she be but little, she is fierce. Her. 'Little' again! Nothing but 'low and 'little'!

Why will you suffer her to flout me thus? Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf; You minimus, of hind'ing knot-grass made:

You bead, you acorn.

You are too officious 330 In her behalf that scorns your services. Let her alone; speak not of Helena;

Take not her part; for if thou dost intend Never so little show of love to her, Thou shalt aby it.

Now she holds me not. 335 Now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right.

Of thine or mine, is most in Helena. Dem. Follow! Nay, I'll go with thee, cheek by jowl.

[Exeunt Lysander and Demetrius. Her. You, mistress, all this coil is long of you. Nay, go not back.

I will not trust you, I; 340 Nor longer stay in your curst company. Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray;

My legs are longer though, to run away Exit.

Her. I am amaz'd, and know not what Exit. to say.

Still thou Obe. This is thy negligence. mistak'st. 345

Or else committ'st thy knaveries wilfully. Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.

Did not you tell me I should know the man But, By the Athenian garments he had on? And so far blameless proves my enterprise We may effect this business yet ere day. 393 That I have 'nointed an Athenian's eyes;

As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight.

Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night; The starry welkin cover thou anon With drooping fog as black as Acheron,

And lead these testy rivals so astray As one come not within another's way.

Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue.

Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong; And sometime rail thou like Demetrius: And from each other look thou lead them thus.

Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep

With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep.

Then crush this herb into Lysander's eve: Whose liquor hath this virtuous property. To take from thence all error with his might And make his cycballs roll with wonted sight.

When they next wake, all this derision 370 Shall seem a dream and fruitless vision: And back to Athens shall the lovers wend With league whose date till death shall never end.

Whiles I in this affair do thee employ, 374 I'll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy:

And then I will her charmed eve release From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste.

For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast:

And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger, 380 At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,

Troop home to churchyards. Damned spirits all,

That in cross-ways and floods have burial, Already to their wormy beds are gone, For fear lest day should look their shames upon;

They wilfully themselves exil'd from light. And must for aye consort with blackbrow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort: I with the Morning's love have oft made sport;

And, like a forester, the groves may tread Even till the eastern gate, all fiery red, Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams, Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams.

notwithstanding, haste, make no delay;

[Exit Oberon.

Puck. Up and down, up and down. I will lead them up and down. I am fear'd in field and town. Goblin, lead them up and down.

Here comes one.

Enter LYSANDER.

400

Lvs. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? Speak thou now.

Puck. Here, villain, drawn and readv. Where art thou?

Lvs. I will be with thee straight.

Puck. Follow me, then, To plainer ground. [Exit Lysander as following the voice.

Enter DEMETRIUS.

Lysander, speak again. Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled? Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars.

Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars.

And wilt not come? Come, recreant, come, thou child:

I'll whip thee with a rod. He is defil'd 410 That draws a sword on thee.

Yea, art thou there? Dem. Puck. Follow my voice; we'll try no manhood here. [Exeunt.

Re-enter LYSANDER.

Lvs. He goes before me, and still dares

When I come where he calls, then he is gone. The villain is much lighter heel'd than I. I followed fast, but faster he did fly, That fallen am I in dark uneven way,

And here will rest me. [Lies down] Come,

Re-enter Puck and DEMETRIUS.

Come hither; I am here. 425 Puck. Dem. Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear.

If ever I thy face by daylight see;

By day's approach look to be visited. 430 [Lies down and sleeps.

Enter HLLENA.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,

Abate thy hours! Shine comforts from the east,

That I may back to Athens by daylight, From these that my poor company detest. And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye, Steal me awhile from mine own company. [Sleeps.

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more: Two of both kinds makes up four. Here she comes, curst and sad. Cupid is a knavish lad, Thus to make poor females mad.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. The wood. Lysander, Demetrius, Helena, and Hermia, lying asleep.

Enter TITANIA and BOTTOM; PEASE-BLOSSOM, COBWEB, MOTH, MUSTARDSEED and other Fairies attending; OBERON behind, unseen.

Tita. Come, sit thee down upon this flow'ry bed,

While I thy amiable cheeks do cov.

Now, go thy way. Faintness constraineth And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head,

To measure out my length on this cold bed. And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.

Bot. Where's Peaseblossom?

Peas. Ready.

Bot. Scratch my head, Peaseblossom Where's Mounsieur Cobweb?

Cob. Ready.

Bot. Mounsieur Cobweb: good mounsieur get you your weapons in your hand and kill me a red-hipp'd humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good mounsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too mucl in the action, mounsieur; and, good mounsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not; I would be loath to have you overflowen with a honey-bag, signior. Where's Mounsieur Mustardseed?

Must. Ready.

Bot. Give me your neaf, Mounsieur Pray you, Mustardseed. leave your curtsy, good mounsieur.

Must. What's your will?

Bot. Nothing, good mounsieur, but to help Cavalery Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, mounsieur; for methinks I am marvellous hairy about the face: and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me I must scratch.

Tita. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?

Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music. bones.

Tita. Or say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat.

Bot. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay. Good hay. sweet hay, hath no fellow.

Tita. I have a venturous fairy that shall

Enter Puck.

Obe. [Advancing] Welcome, good Robin. Seest thou this sweet sight? Her dotage now I do begin to pity; For, meeting her of late behind the wood, Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool, I did upbraid her and fall out with her. For she his hairy temples then had rounded With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers: And that same dew which sometime on the

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kınd, So flew'd, so sanded; and their heads are

With ears that sweep away the morning

Crook-knee'd and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls :

Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,

Each under each. A cry more tuneable Was never holla'd to, nor cheer'd with horn, In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly. Judge when you hear. But, soft, what nymphs are these?

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep.

And this Lysander, this Demetrius is, This Helena, old Nedar's Helena. I wonder of their being here together

The. No doubt they rose up early to observe

The rite of May; and, hearing our intent, Came here in grace of our solemnity. But speak, Egeus; is not this the day That Hermia should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is, my lord.

The. I pray you all, stand up. I know you t vo are rival enemies: How comes this gentle concord in the world

That hatred is so far from jealousy To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity? Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazedly, Half sleep, half waking; but as yet, I su ear.

I cannot truly say how I came here. But, as I think-for truly would I speak, And now I do bethink me, so it is-I came with Hermia hither. Our intent Was to be gone from Athens, where we might,

Without the peril of the Athenian law- 150 Ege. Enough, enough, my Lord; you have enough;

I beg the law, the law upon his head. They would have stol'n away, they would, Demetrius, Thereby to have defeated you and me: You of your wife, and me of my consent, Of my consent that she should be your wife. Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth. Of this their purpose hither to this wood; And I in fury hither followed them, Fair Helena in fancy following me. But, my good lord, I wot not by what power-

But by some power it is-my love to Hermia.

Melted as the snow, seems to me now As the remembrance of an idle gaud Which in my childhood I did dote upon; And all the faith, the virtue of my heart, The object and the pleasure of mine eye, Is only Helena. To her, my lord, Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia. But, like a sickness, did I loathe this food: But, as in health, come to my natural taste. Now I do wish it, love it, long for it,

And will for evermore be true to it. The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met; Of this discourse we more will hear anon. Egeus, I will overbear your will; For in the temple, by and by, with us These couples shall eternally be knit. And, for the morning now is something worn. Our purpos'd hunting shall be set aside. Away with us to Athens, three and three; We'll hold a feast in great solemnity. Exeunt Theseus, Hip-Come, Hippolyta.

Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem.

That yet we sleep, we dream. Do not you think

The Duke was here, and bid us follow him? Her. Yea, and my father.

Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why, then, we are awake; et's

And by the way let us recount our dreams

Bot. [Awaking] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer. My next is 'Most fair Pyramus'. Heigh-ho! Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life, stol'n hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream, past the wit of man to say what dream Man is but an ass if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was-there is no man can tell what Methought I was, and methought I had, but man is but a patch'd fool, it he will offer to say what methought I had. The offer to say what methought I had eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream. It shall be call'd 'Bottom's Dream'. because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the Duke. Peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death. [Exit.

Scene II. Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Qum. Have you sent to Bottom's house? Is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is transported.

Flu. If he come not, then the play is marr'd; it goes not forward, doth it? 6
Quin. It is not possible. You have not a man in all Athens able to discharge Pyramus but he.

Flu. No; he hath sireply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens.

Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.

Flu. You must say 'paragon'. A paramour is—God bless us!—a thing of naught.

Enter SNUG.

Snug. Masters, the Duke is coming from the temple; and there is two or three lords and ladies more married. If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men. 17

Flu. O sweet buily Bottom! Thus hath he lost supence a day during his life; he could not have scaped supence a day. An the Duke had not given him supence a day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged. He would have deserved it: surence a day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter BOTTOM.

Bot. Where are these lads? Where are these hearts?

Qum. Bottom! O most courageous day!
O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders; but ask me not what; for if I tell you, I am not true Athenian. I will tell you everything, right as it fell out.

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you is, that the Duke hath dined. Get your apparel together; good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for the short and the long is, our play is preferr'd. In any case, let Thisby have clean linen; and let not him that plays the hon pair his nails, for they shall hang out tor the hon's claws And, most dear actors, eat no onions not garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath, and I do not doubt but to hear them say it is a sweet comedy. No more words. Away, go, away! [Exeunt.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostryie, Lords and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

The. More strange than true. I never may believe

These antique fables, nor these fairy toys. Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,

Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend 5 More than cool reason ever comprehends. The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,

Are of imagination all compact.

One sees more devils than vast hell can hold:

That is the madman. The lover, all as frantic.

Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;

And as imagination bodies forth

The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen

Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing

A local habitation and a name.
Such tricks hath strong imagination
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy;
Or in the night, imagining some fear,
Itow easy is a bush suppos'd a bear?

Hip. But all the story of the night told over.

And all their minds transfigur'd so together, More witnesseth than fancy's images, 25 And grows to something of great constancy, But howsoever strange and admirable.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Joy, gentle friends, joy and fresh days of love

Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us 30 Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed!

The. Come now; what masques, what dances shall we have,

To wear away this long age of three hours Between our after-supper and bed-time? Where is our usual manager of mirth? 35 What revels are in hand? Is there no play To ease the anguish of a torturing hour? Call Philostrate.

Phil. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?

What masque? what music? How shall we begule 40

The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Phil. There is a brief how many sports are ripe;

Make choice of which your Highness will see first. [Giving a paper.

The. 'The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung

By an Athenian eunuch to the harp.' 45
We'll none of that: that have I told my love.

In glory of my kinsman Hercules.
'The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals,
Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage.'
That is an old device, and it was play'd so
When I from Thebes came last a conqueror.
'The thrice three Muses mourning for the death

Of Learning, late deceas'd in beggary.'
That is some satire, keen and critical,
Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

Act sorting with a hupital ceremony. 55
'A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus
And his love Thisby; very tragical mirth.'
Merry and tragical! tedious and brief!
That is hot ice and wondrous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?

60

Phil. A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,

Which is as brief as I have known a play; But by ten words, my lord, it is too long, Which makes it tedious; for in all the play

There is not one word apt, one player fitted.
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
66
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which when I saw rehears'd, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears

The passion of loud laughter never shed. The. What are they that do play it?
Phil. Hard-handed men that work in Athens here,

Which never labour'd in their minds till now:

And now have toil'd their unbreathed memories

With this same play against your nuptial The. And we will hear it.

Phil. No, my noble lord, It is not for you. I have heard it over, And it is nothing, nothing in the world; Unless you can find sport in their intents, Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel

To do you service.

The.

I will hear that play;

pain,

For never anything can be amiss When simpleness and duty tender it. Go, bring them in; and take your places, ladies. [Exit Philostrate. Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'er-charged, And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.

Our sport shall be to take what they mistake; 90
And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect

Takes it in might not marit

Takes it in might, not merit.

Where I have come, great clerks have purposed

To greef me with premeditated welcomes; Where I have seen them shiver and look pale, 95

Make periods in the midst of sentences, Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears, And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off, Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,

Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome; And in the modesty of fearful duty I read as much as from the rattling tongue Of saucy and audacious eloquence.

Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity In least speak most to my capacity.

Re-enter PHILOSTRATE.

is address'd.

The. Let him approach.

[Flourish of trumpets.

Enter OUINCE as the PROLOGUE.

Prol. If we offend, it is with our good will. That you should think, we come not to offend, But with good will. To show our simple skill, That is the true beginning of our end. Consider then, we come but in despite. We do not come, as minding to content you, Our true intent is. All for your delight We are not here. That you should here repent you,

The actors are at hand; and, by their show, You shall know all, that you are like to know, The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.

Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt: he knows not the stop. A good moral my lord: it is not enough to speak, but to speak true. 121

Hip. Indeed he hath play'd on this prologue like a child on a recorder-a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next?

Enter, with a Tiumpet before them, as in dumb show, Pyramus and Thisby, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion.

Prol. Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show;

But wonder on, till truth make all things blain.

This man is Pyramus, if you would know; This beauteous lady Thisby is certain. This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers sunder :

And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are content

To whisper. At the which let no man wonder. This man, with lanthorn, dog, and bush of thorn.

Presenteth Moonshine: for, if you will know, By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo. This grisly beast, which Lion hight by name, The trusty Thisby, coming first by night, Did scare away, or rather did affright; And as she fled, her mantle she did fall; Which Lion vile with bloody mouth did stain. Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall, And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain ; Whereat with blade, with bloody blameful blade, 145

He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast; And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade,

His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest, Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twai;3, Phil. So please your Grace, the Prologue Ai large discourse while here they do remain. [Exeunt Prologue, Pinamue, Th shy.

Lion, c id Mour stane.

The. I wonder if the hon be to speak. Dem. No wonder, my loid: one hon may, when many asses do

Wall. In this same interlude it doth befall That I, one Snout by name, present a wall: Ard such a wall as I would have you think That had in it a crannied hote or chink, 157 Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby, Did whisper often very secretly.

This loam, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show That I am that same wall; the truth is so:

And this the cranny is, right and smister, Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

The. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

Enter Pyramus.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall; silence.

Pyr. O grim-look'd night! O night with hue so black! O might, which ever art when day is not!

O night, O night, alack, alack, alack, 170 I feer my Thisby's promise is forgot! And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall, That stand'st between her father's ground and mine:

Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall. Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine eyne.

[Wall holds up his fingers. Thanks, courteous wall. Jove shield thee well for this !

But what see I? No Thisby do I see.

O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss; Curs'd be thy stones for thus deceiving me! The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. Deceiving me is Thisby's cue. She is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see it will fall pat as I told you; yonder she comes. 185

Enter THISBY.

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans.

For parting my fair Pyramus and me! My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones, Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.

Pyr. I see a voice; now will I to the chink, To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face. 191 Thisby!

This. My love! thou art my love, I think.

Pyr. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace;

And like Limander am I trusty still. 195
This. And I like Helen, till the Fates me

Pyr. Not Shafalus to Procrus was so true. This. As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you. Pyr. O. kiss me through the hole of this vile wall.

This. I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.

Pyr. Will thou at Ninny's tomb me. 'me straightway?

This. Tide life, tide death, I come without delay.

[Exeunt Pyramus and Thisby. Wall. Thus have I, Wall, my part discharged so;

And, being done, thus Wall away doth go.
[Exit Wall.

The. Now is the moon used between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so wilful to hear without warning.

are so will to hear without warning.

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.

The. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Hip. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

The. If we imagine no worse of them than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter LION and MOONSHINE.

Lion. You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear

The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps or floor,

May now, perchance, both quake and tremble here,

When lion rough in wildest rage dot roar.

Then know that I as Snug the joiner am 22 A lion fell, nor else no lion's dam; For, if I should as lion come in strife

Into this place, 'twere pity on my life.

The. A very gentle beast, and of a goo conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord that e'er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour. The. True; and a goose for his discretion Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valou cannot carry his discretion, and the for carries the goose.

The. His discretion, I am sure, canno carry his valour; for the goose carries no the fox. It is well. Leave it to his discretion and let us listen to the Moon.

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moo

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.

The. He is no crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference. 236

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon present;

Ayself the Man t' th' Moon do seem to be.
The. This is the greatest error of all the rest; the man should be put into the lantern. How is it else the man i' th' moon?

Dem. He dares not come there for the andle; for, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hip. I am aweary of this moon. Would be would change!

The. It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the me.

Lys. Proceed, Moon.

Moon. All that I have to say is to tell you that the lanthorn is the moon; I, the Man 1' th' Moon; this thorn-bush, my horn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for all these are in the moon. But silence; here comes Thisby.

Re-enter THISBY.

This. This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love? 255 Lion. [Roaning] O— [Thisby runs off.

Dem. Well roar'd, Lion.

The. Well run, Thisby.

Hip. Well shone, Moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace. 260 [The Lion tears Thisby's mantle, and exit.

The Well mous'd. Lion.

Re-enter Pyramus.

Dem. And then came Pyramus. Lys. And so the lion vanish'd.

Pyr. Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;

I thank thee, Moon, for shining now so bright; 265

For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay, O spite! But mark, poor knight, What dreadful dole is here!

Eyes, do you see? How can it be? O dainty duck! O dear!

Thy mantle good,
What! stain'd with blood? 27
Approach, ye Furies fell.

O Fates! come, come; Cut thread and thrum;

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell.

The. This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Venice. A street.

Enter Antonio, Salerio, and Solanio.

Ant. In sooth I know not why I am so sad.

It wearies me; you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it.

What stuff 'tis made of, whereof i is born, I am to learn;

And such a want-wit sadness makes of me That I have much ado to know myself. Sale: Your mind is tossing on the ocean:

Sale. Your mind is tossing on the ocean; There where your argosies, with portly sail—

Like signiors and rich buighers on the flood, Or as it were the pageants of the sea— Do overpeer the petty traffickers. That curtsy to them, do them reverence,

As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Solan. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth,

The better part of my affections would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind,

Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads:

And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Saler. My wind, cooling my broth, Would blow me to an ague when I thought What harm a wind too great might do at

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run But I should think of shallows and of flats, And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand.

Vailing her high top lower than her ribs
To kiss lier buriai. Should I go to church
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,

Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side.

Would scatter all her spices on the stream. Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks, And, in a word, but even now worth this.

And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought 35
To think on this, and shall I lack the thought

That such a thing bechanc'd would make me sad?

But tell not me; I know Antonio

Is sad to think upon his merchandise. 40 Ant. Believe me, no; I thank my fortune for it.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted, Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate Upon the fortune of this present year; Therefore my merchandist makes me not

sad. 45
Solan. Why then you are in love.
Ant. Fie, fie!

Solan. Not in love neither? Then let us say you are sad Because you are not merry; and 'twere

as easy
For you to laugh and leap and say you are merry,

Because you are not sad. Now, by twoheaded Janus,
50

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:

Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,

And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper; And other of such vinegar aspect

That they'll not show their teeth in way of Which, hearing them, would call their smile

Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kinsman, Gratiano and Lorenzo. Fare ye well; We leave you now with better company.

made you merry,

If worthier friends had not prevented me. Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard.

I take it your own business calls on you, And you embrace th' occasion to depart. Saler. Good morrow, my good lords. Bass. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh? Say when. You grow exceeding strange; must it be so? Saler. We'll make our leisures to attend on yours. [Exeunt Salerio and Solanio.

Lor. My Lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio.

We two will leave you; but at dinner-time, I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Bass. I will not fail you.

Gra. You look not well, Signior Antonio; You have too much respect upon the world; They lose it that do buy it with much Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Ant. I hold the world but as the world. Gratiano-

A stage, where every man must play a part, And mine a sad one.

Let me play the fool. Gra. With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come:

And let my liver rather heat with wine Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Why should a man whose blood is warm within

Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster, Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice

By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio-

I love thee, and 'tis my love that speaks-There are a sort of men whose visages Do cream and mantle like a standing pond, And do a wilful stillness entertain, With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion Of wisdoin, gravity, profound concert; As who should say 'I am Sir Oracle, And when I ope my lips let no dog bark O my Antonio, I do know of these That therefore only are reputed wise For saying nothing; when, I am very sure, If they should speak, would almost damn those ears brothers fools.

I'll tell thee more of this another time. 100 But fish not with this melancholy bait For this fool gudgeon, this opinion. Come, good Lorenzo. Fare ye well awhile: I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner-time.

Saler. I would have stay'd till I had I must be one of these same dumb wise men.

For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Gra. Well, keep me company but two years moe,

Thou shalt not know the sound of thing own tongue.

Ant. Fare you well: I'll grow a talker for this gear.

Gra. Thanks, 1' faith, for silence is only commendable

In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

Exeunt Gratiano and Lorenzo. Ant. Is that anything now?

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well; tell me now what lady is the

To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage, 120 That you to-day promis'd to tell me of?

Bass. 'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio, How much I have disabled mine estate By something showing a more swelling port Than my faint means would grant continuance;

Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd From such a noble rate; but my chief care Is to come fairly off from the great debts Wherein my time, something too prodigal, Hath left me gag'd. To you, Antonio, 130 I owe the most, in money and in love; And from your love I have a warranty To unburden all my plots and purposes How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it; And if it stand, as you yourself still do,

Within the eye of honour, be assur'd My purse, my person, my extremest means, Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight The self-same way, with more advised watch,

To find the other forth; and by adventuring both

I oft found both. I urge this childhood proof.

Because what follows is pure innocence. 145

I owe you much; and, like a wilful youth, comes sooner by white hairs, but com-That which I owe is lost; but if you please To shoot another arrow that self way Which you did shoot the first, I do not nounc'd.

As I will watch the aim, or to find both. 150 Or bring your latter hazard back again And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time

To wind about my love with circumstance; And out of doubt you do me now more wrong

In making question of my uttermost Than if you had made waste of all I have. Then do but say to me what I should do That in your knowledge may by me be done.

And I am prest unto it; therefore, speak. Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left. And she is fair and, fairer than that word.

Of wondrous virtues. Sometimes from her

I did receive fair speechless messages. 164 Her name is Portia-nothing undervalu'd To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia. Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth:

For the four winds blow in from every coast Renowned suitors, and her sunny locks Hang on her temples like a golden fleece, Which makes her seat of Belmont Colchos' strond,

And many Jasons come in quest of her. O my Antonio, had I but the means To hold a rival place with one of them, I have a mind presages me such thrift 175 That I should questionless be fortunate.

Ant. Thou know'st that all my fortunes are at sea:

Neither have I money nor commodity To raise a present sum: therefore go forth, Try what my credit can in Venice do; 180 That shall be rack'd, even to the uttermost, To furnish thee to Belmont to fair Portia. Go presently inquire, and so will I, Where money is; and I no question make To have it of my trust or for my sake. 185

Scene II. Belmont. Portia's house.

Enter PORTIA with her waiting-woman, NERISSA.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is aweary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are; and yet, for aught I see, they are as sick that surfeit with too much as they that starve with nothing. It is no mean happiness, there- better bad habit of frowning than the fore, to be seated in the mean: superfluity Count Palatine; he is every man in no petency lives longer. Por.

Good sentences, and well pro-

They would be better, if we'll Ner. followed.

Por. It to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done than to be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree; such a hore is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband. O me, the word 'choose'! I may neither choose who I would nor refuse who I dislike; so is the will of a hving daughter curb'd by the will of a dead father. Is it not hard, Nenssa, that I cannot choose one. nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations; therefore the lott'ry that he hath devised in these three chests, of gold, silver, and lead-whereof who chooses his meaning chooses you-will no doubt never be chosen by any rightly but one who you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come? 31

Por. I pray thee over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection.

[Exeunt.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince. Por. Ay, that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great appropriation to his own good parts that he can shoe him himself; I am much afear'd my lady his mother play'd false with a smith.

Ner. Then is there the County Palatine. Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say 'An you will not have me, choose'. He hears merry tales and smiles not. I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death's-head with a bone in his mouth than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, Monsieur Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker, but he-why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's, a man. If a throstle sing he fails straight a-cap'ring; he will fence with his own shadow; if I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.

Ner. What say you then to Falconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the court and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. He is a proper man's picture; but, alas, who can converse with a dumb show? How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour everywhere.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again when he was able; I think the Frenchman became his surety, and seal'd under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the Duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning when he is sober; and most vilely in the afternoon when he is drunk. When he is best, he is a little worse than a man, and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. An the worst fall that ever fell, I hope I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for if the devil be within and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ete I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords; they have acquainted me with their determinations, which is indeed to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylia, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will. I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your I may be assured, I wil father's time, a Venetian, a scholar and a I speak with Antonio?

soldier, that came hither in company of the Maiguis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio; as I think, so was he call'd.

Ner. True, madam; he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes look'd upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a Servingman.

How now! what news?

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the Prince his master will be here to-night.

Por. It I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach; if he have the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me.

Come, Nerissa. Surah, go before.

Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Venice. A public place.

Enter Bassanio with Shylock the Jew.

Shy. Three thousand ducats—well. Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months—well. Bass. For the which, as I told you,

Antonio shall be bound.

Shy. Antonio shall become bound—well.

Bass. May you stead me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer? Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio Lound.

Bass. Your answer to that,

Shy. Antonio is a good man. Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. Ho, no, no, no; my meaning in saying he is a good man is to have you understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition: he hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand, moreover, upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England-and other ventures he hath, squand'red abroad. But ships are but boards, sailors but men; there be landrats and water-rats, water-thieves and landthieves-I mean pirates; and then there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient. Three thousand ducats-I think I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assur'd you may. 25 Shy. I will be assur'd I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me. May I speak with Antonio?

Scene 31

Bass. If it please you to dine with us. Shy. Yes, to smell pork, to eat of the habitation which your prophet, the Nazarite, conjured the devil into! I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following: but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? Who is he comes here?

Enter ANTONIO.

Bass. This is Signior Antonio. Shy. [Aside] How like a fawning publican he looks!

I hate him for he is a Christian; But more for that in low simplicity

He lends out money gratis, and brings down

The rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip. I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails.

Even there where merchants most do congregate, On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift.

If I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store, And, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross

Ant. And what of him? Did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would say, Directly int'rest: mark what Jacob did:

When Laban and himself were compromis'd

That all the eanlings which were streak'd and pied

Should fall as Jacob's nire, the ewes, being

This was a way to thrive, and he was blest:

A thing not in his power to bring to pass, Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe But sway'd and fashion'd by the hand of heaven.

> Was this inserted to make interest good? Or is your gold and silver ewes and rams? Shy. I cannot tell; I make it breed as fast.

But note me, signior.

Mark you this, Bassanio, Ant. [Aside] The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose. An evil soul producing holy witness

Is like a villain with a smiling cheek, A goodly apple rotten at the heart.

O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath! Shy. Three thousand ducats-'tis a good round sum.

Three months from twelve; then let me see, the rate-

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft

Sav this: ' Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesd 11 last, You spurn'd me such a day; another time You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies I'll lend you thus much moneys'?

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again, 125 To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too. If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not As to thy friends-for when did friendship take

ACT TWO

Scene I. Belmont. Portia's house.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the PRINCE OF MOROCCO, a tawny Moor all in white, and three or four Followers accordingly, with PORTIA, NERISSA, and Train.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion, The shadowed livery of the burnish'd sun, To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Bring me the fairest cleature northward boin,

Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles, And let us make incision for your love To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine Hath fear'd the valiant: by my love. I

Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led By nice direction of a maiden's eyes; Besides, the lott'ry of my destiny Bars me the right of voluntary choosing. But, if my father had not scanted me, And hedg'd me by his wit to yield myself His wife who wins me by that means I told

Scene II. Venice. A street. Enter LAUNCELOT GOBBO.

Laun. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew my master. The fiend is at mine elbow and tempts me, saying to me 'Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot' or 'good Gobbo' or 'good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away'. My conscience says 'No; take heed, honest Launcelot, take heed, honest Gobbo' or, as aforesaid, 'honest Launcelot Cabba, do not run; scorn running with they heels'. Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack. 'Via!' says the fiend; 'away!' says the fiend. For the heavens, rouse up a brave mind' says the fiend 'and run.' Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my ' My heart, says very wisely to me honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man's son' or rather 'an honest woman's son'; for indeed my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste—well, my conscience says 'Launcelot, budge not'. 'Budge' says the 'Budge not' says my conscience. Conscience, say I 'you counsel well.' 'Fiend,' say I 'you counsel well.' To be dead? rul'd by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who—God bless the mark!—is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who-saving your reverence!is the devil himself. Certainly the Jew is Outbrave the heart most daring on the the very devil incarnation; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of Pluck the young sucking cubs from the hard conscience to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel. I will run, fiend; my heels are at your commandment; I will run.

Enter Old Gobbo, with a basket.

Gob. Master young man, you, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's? Laun. [Aside] O heavens! This is my true-begotten father, who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not. I will try confusions with him.

Gob. Master young gentieman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's? 34 Laun. Turn up on your light hand at the next turning, but, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.

Gob. Be God's sonties, 'twill be a hard Por. First, forward to the temple. After way to hit! Can you tell me whether one 44 Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him or no?

Laun. Talk you of young Master Launcelot? [Aside] Mark me now; now will I raise the waters .- Talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son; his father, though I say't, is an honest exceeding poor man, and, God be thanked. well to live.

Laun. Well, let his father be what 'a will, we talk of young Master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship's friend, and Launcelot, sir.

Laun. But I pray you, ergo, old man, ergo, I beseech you, talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, an't please your mastership.

Laun. Ergo, Master Launcelot. Talk not of Master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman, according to Fates and Destinies and such odd sayings, the Sisters Three and such branches of learning, is indeed deceased; or, as you would say in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, God forbid! The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. 60 Laun. Do I look like a cudgel or a hovelpost, a staff or a prop? Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day, I know you not, young gentleman; but I pray you tell me, is my boy-God rest his soul!-alive or Laun. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind: I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing nie: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son. Give me your blessing; truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long; a man's son may, but in the end truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up; I am sure you are not Launcelot my boy.

Laun. Pray you, let's have no more feeling about ir, but give me your blessing; I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your sen that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son. Laun. I know not what I shall think of that: but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and I am sure Margery your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed. I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord worshipp'd might he be, what a beard hast thou got! Thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin my fill-horse has on his tail.

Laun. It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward; I am sure he had more hair of his tail than I have of my face when I last saw him.

Geb. Lord, how art thou chang'd! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How 'giee you now?

Laun. Well. well; but, for mine own part. as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not test till I have run some ground. My master's a very Jew. Give him a present! Give him a halter. I am famish'd in his service; you may tell every finger I have with my 11bs. Father, I am glad you are come; give me your present to one Master Bassanio, who indeed gives rare new liveries; if I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground. O rare fortune! Here comes the man. To him, father, for I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter Bassanio, with Leonardo, with a Follower or two.

Bass. You may do so: but let it be so hasted that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. See these let ers delivered, put the liveries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit a servant.

Laun. To him, father.

Gcb. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy; wouldst thou aught with me ?

Gob. Here's my son, sir, a poor boy-Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man, that would, sir, as my father My best esteem'd acquaintance; hiz thee, shall specify—

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve-

Laun. Indeed, the short and the long is. I serve the Jew, and have a desire, as my father shall specify-Gob. His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce catercousins-

Laun. To be brief, the very truth is that the Jew, having done me wrong, doth cause me, as my father, being I hope an old man, shall frutify unto you-

Gob. I have here a dish of doves that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is-

Laun. In very brief, the suit is impertinent to myself, as your worship shall know by this honest old man; and, though I say it, though old man, yet poor man, my father.

Bass. One speak for both. What would you?

Laun. Scive you, sir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter, sir. 130

Bass. I know thee well; thou hast obtain'd thy suit.

Shylock thy master spoke with me this day. And hath preferr'd thee, if it be preferment To leave a nich Jew's service to become The follower of so poor a gentleman.

Laun. The old proverb is very well parced between my master Shylock and you, sit: you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speak'st it well. Go. father. with thy son.

Take leave of thy old master, and inquire My lodging out. [To a servant] Give him a livery

More guarded than his fellows'; see it done. Laun. Father, in. I cannot get a service, no! I have ne'er a tongue in my head! [Looking on his falm] Well; if any man in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer to swear upon a book-I shall have good fortune. Go to, here's a simple line of life; here's a small trifle of wives; alas, fifteen wives is nothing; a'leven widows and nine maids is a simple coming-in for one man. And then to scape drowning thrice, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed-here are simple scapes. Well, for this gear. Father, come: I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling. Exeunt Launcelot and Old Gobbo. Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think if Fortune be a woman, she's a good wench on this. These things being bought and orderly bestowed,

Return in haste, for I do feast to-night

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest.

Enter GRATIANO.

Gra. Where's your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit. Gra. Signior Bassanio! 160

Bass. Gratiano!

Gra. I have sut to you.

Bass. You have obtain'd it. Gra. You must not deny me: I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must. But hear thee, Gratiano: 165

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice—

Parts that become thee happily enough, And in such eyes as ours appear not faults. But where thou art not known, why there they show

Something too liberal. Pray thee, take pain To allay with some cold drops of modesty Thy skipping spirit; lest through thy wild behaviour

I be misconst'red in the place I go to And lose my hopes.

Gra. Signior Bassanio, hear me: If I do not put on a sober habit, 175 Talk with respect, and swear but now and

Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely,

Nay more, while grace is saying hood mine

Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say amen, Use all the observance of civility 180 Like one well studied in a sad ostent

To please his grandam, never trust me more. Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing. Gra. Nay, but I bar to-night; you shall not gauge me

By what we do to-night.

Bass. No, that were pity; I would entreat you rather to put on Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends

That purpose merriment. But fare you well;

I have some business.

Gra- And I must to Lorenzo and the rest; But we will visit you at supper-time. 191 [Exeunt.

Scene III. Venice. Shylock's house. Enter Jessica and Launcelot.

Jes. I am sorry thou wilt leave my father

Our house is hell; and thou, a merry devil, Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness. But fare thee well; there is a ducat for thee;

And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou

Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest.

Give him this letter; do it secretly.

And so farewell. I would not have my father

See me in talk with thee.

Laum. Acteu! rears exhibit my tongue.

Most peautiful pagan, most sweet Jew! If a Christian do not play the knave and get thee, I am much deceived. But, acteu!
these foolish drops do something drown my manly spirit; adieu!

Jes. Farewell, good Launcelot.

[Exit.

Alack, what hemous sin is it in me
To be asham'd to be my father's child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners. O Lorenzo, 19
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife,
Become a Christian and thy loving wife.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Venice. A street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salerio, and Solanio.

Lor. Nay, we will slink away in supper-time,

Disguise us at my lodging, and return All in an hour.

Gra. We have not made good preparation.

Saler. We have not spoke us yet of torch-bearers.

Solan. 'Tis vile, unless it may be quaintly ordered;

And better in my mind not undertook.

Lor. 'Tis now but four o'clock; we have two hours
To furnish us.

Enter LAUNCELOT, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Laun. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify.

Lor. I know the hand; in faith, 'tis a fair hand,

And whiter than the paper it writ on Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith!

Laun. By your leave, sir. 15

Lor. Whither goest thou?

Laun. Marry, sir, to bid my old master, the Jew, to sup to-night with my new master, the Christian.

Lor. Hold, here, take this. Tell gentle Jessica

I will not fail her; speak it privately. 20 Go, gentlemen, [Exit Launcelot. Will you prepare you for this masque tonight?

I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Saler. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Solan. And so will I.

U Lor. Meet me and Gratiano as 5 At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Saler. Tis good we do so.

[Exeunt Saler io and Solanio.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair
Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed

How I shall take her from her father's house:

What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with; What page's suit she hath in readiness. If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven, It will be for his gentle daughter's sake; And never date misfortune cross her foot, Unless she do it under this excuse, 56 That she is issue to a faithless Jew. Come, go with me, peruse this as thou goest;

Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer.

Exeunt.

Scene V. Venice. Before Shylock's house. Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see; thy eyes shall be thy judge,

The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio.—

What, Jessica!—Thou shalt not gormandize

As thou hast done with me—What,

4

And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out— Why, Jessica, I say!

Laun. Why, Jessica!

Shy. Who bids thee call? I do not bid thee call.

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter JESSICA.

Jes. Call you? What is your will? 10 Shy. I am bud forth to supper, Jessica; There are my keys. But wherefore should I go?

I am not bid for love; they flatter me; But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon The prodigal Christian. Jessica, my girl, 15 Look to my house. I am right loath 10 go; There is some ill a-brewing towards my rest,

For I did dream of money-bags to-night.
Laun. I besecch you, sir, go; my young master doth expect your reproach. 20

Shy. So do I his. Laun. And they have conspired together; I will not say you shall see a masque, but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a-bleeding on Black Monday last at six o'clock i' th' morning, falling out that year on Ash Wednesday was four year, in th' afternoon.

Shy. What, are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica:

Lock up my doors, and when you hear the drum.

And the vile squealing of the wry-neck'd fife,

Clamber not you up to the casements then, Not thrust your head into the public street To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces:

But stop my house's ears—I mean my casements;

Let not the sound of shallow fopp'ry enter My sober house. By Jacob's staff, I swear I have no mind of feasting foith to-night; But I will go. Go you before me, smah; Say I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir. Mistress, look out at window for all this.

There will come a Christian by Will be worth a Jewess' eye. [Ext. Shy. What says that fool of Hagar's offspring, ha?

Jes. His words were 'Farewell, mistress';

nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder,

45

Snail-slow in piont, and he sleeps by day
More than the wild-cat; drones hive not with me,

Therefore I part with him; and part with

To one that I would have him help to waste His borrowed purse. Well, Jessica, go in; Perhaps I will return immediately.

57 Do as I bid you, shut doors after you. Fast bind, tast find—

A prover never stale in thrifty mind.

Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost,
I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.

Scene VI. Venice. Before Shylock's house.

Enter the maskers, Gratiano and Salerio.

Gra. This is the pent-house under which Lorenzo

Desired us to make stand.

Saler. His hour is almost past.

Gra. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour.

For lovers ever run before the clock.

Saler. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fiy

To seal love's bonds new made than they are wont

To keep obliged faith unforfeited!

Gra. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast 8

With that keen appetite that he sits down? Where is the horse that doth untread again His tedious-measures with the unbated fire That he did pace them first? All things that are

Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd. How like a younker or a prodigal

The scarfed bark purs from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind:

How like the prodigal doth she return. With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails, Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

Enter LORENZO.

Saler. Here comes Lorenzo; more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode!

Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait. When you shall please to play the thieves for wives, I'll watch as long for you then. Approach; Here dwells my father Jew. Ho! who's within?

Enter JESSICA, above, in boy's clothes.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty,

Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love. Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and my love indeed: For who love I so much? And now who knows But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

Lor. Heaven and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.

Jes. Here, catch this casket; it is worth the pains.

I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me, For I am much asham'd of my exchange; But love is blind, and lovers cannot see 36 The pretty follies that themselves commit. For, if they could, Cupid h mself would blush

To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torchbearer.

Jes. What! must I hold a candle to my shames?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.

Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love, And I should be obscur'd.

So are you, sweet, Lor. Even in the lovely garnish of a boy. But come at once,

For the close night doth play the runaway, And we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast. Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself

With some moe ducats, and be with you [Exit above. straight. Gra. Now, by my hood, a gentle, and no

Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily,

For she is wise, if I can judge of her, And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,

And true she is, as she hath prov'd herself; And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter JESSICA, below.

What, art thou come? On, gentlemen.

Our masquing mates by this time for us stav. (Exit with Jessica and Salerio.

Enter ANTONIO.

Ant. Who's there? Gra. Signior Antonio?

Ant. Fie. fie. Gratiano, where are all the rest? 'Tis nine o'clock; our friends all stay for you: No masque to-night; the wind is come about: Bassanio presently will go aboard; I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on't; I desire no more delight

Than to be under sail and gode to-night. Exeunt.

Scene VII. Belmont. Portia's house.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter PORTIA, with the PRINCE OF MOROCCO, and their Trains.

Por. Go draw aside the curtains and discover

The several caskets to this noble Prince. Now make your choice.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears:

'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire'.

The second, silver, which this promise carries:

'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves ' This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt: 'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath '. How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, Prince;

If you choose that, then I am yours withal. Mor. Some god direct my judgment! Let me see;

I will survey th' inscriptions back again. What says this leaden casket?

'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.'

Must give-for what? For lead? Hazard for lead!

This casket threatens; men that hazard all Do it in hope of fair advantages. A golden mind stoops not to shows of dross; I'll then nor give nor hazard aught for lead. What says the silver with her virgin hue?

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'

As much as he deserves! Pause there,

Merocco,
And weigh thy value with an even hand. 25
If thou beest rated by thy estimation,
Thou dost deserve enough, and yet enough
May not extend so far as to the lady;
And yet to be afeard of my deserving
Were but a weak disabling of myself. 31
As much as I deserve? Why, that's the lady!

I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes In graces, and in qualities of breeding; But more than these, in love I do deserve. What if I stray'd no farther, but chose here?

Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold:

'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire'.

Why, that's the lady! All the world desires her;

From the four corners of the earth they come

To kiss this shrine, this mortal-breathing saint.

The Hyrcanian deserts and the vasty wilds Of wide Arabia are as throughfares now For princes to come view fair Portia.

The watery kingdom, whose ambitious head Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar 45 To stop the foreign spirits, but they come As o'er a brook to see fair Portia.

One of these three contains her heavenly picture.

Is't like that lead contains her? 'Twere dampation

To think so base a thought; it were too gross 50

To rib her cerecloth in the obscure grave. Or shall I think in silver she's immur'd, Being ten times undervalued to tried gold? O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem Was set in worse than gold. They have in England

A coin that bears the figure of an angel Stamp'd in gold; but that's insculp'd upon.

But here an angel in a golden bed Lies all within. Deliver me the key; Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may! 60

Por. There, take it, Prince, and if my form lie there,

Then I am yours.

Mor. O hell! what have we here? A carrion Death, within whose empty eye There is a written scroll! I'll read the writing.

All that glisters is not gold, Often have you heard that told; Many a man his life hath sold But my outside to behold.
Gilded tombs do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, ir judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscroll'd.
Fare you well, your suit is cold.'

Cold indeed, and labour lost,
Then faiewell, heat, and welcome, frost.
Portia, adieu! I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave; thus losers part.
[Exit with his train. Flourish of cornets.
Portia. A gentle iddance. Draw the curtains, go.

Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exeunt.

Scene VIII. Venice. A sireet.

Enter Salerio and Solanio.

Saler. Why, man, I saw Bassanio under sail;

With him is Gratiano gone along; And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.

Solan. The villain Jew with outcries rais'd the Duke,

Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.

Saler. He came too late, the ship was under sail;
But there the Duke was given to understand

That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica;
Besides, Antonio certified the Duke
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Solan. I never heard a passion so confus'd.

So strange, outrageous, and so variable, As the dog Jew did utter in the streets.

'My daughter! O my ducats! O my daughter!

Fled with a Christian! O my Christian

ducats!
Justice! the law! My ducats and my daughter!

A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats, Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter!

And jewels—two stones, two rich and precious stones,

Stol'n by my daughter! Justice! Find the girl;
She hath the stones upon her and the

ducats.'

Saler. Why all the boys in Venice follow him,

Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.

Solan. Let good Antonio look he keep his day, 25

65 Or he shall pay for this.

Saler. Marry, well rememb'red; I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,

Who told me, in the narrow seas that part The French and English, there miscarried A vessel of our country richly fraught. 30 I thought upon Antonio when he told

And wish'd in silence that it were not his. Solan. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear:

Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him. Saler. A kinder gentleman treads not the earth.

I saw Bassanio and Antonio part.

Bassanio told him he would make some speed

Of his return. He answered 'Do not so: Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio. But stay the very riping of the time: And for the Jew's bond which he hath of

Let it not enter in your mind of love; Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts

To courtship, and such fair ostents of love As shall conveniently become you there '. 45 And even there, his eye being big with tears, Turning his face, he put his hand behind him.

And with affection wondrous sensible He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted.

Solan. I think he only loves the world for

I pray thee, let us go and find him out, And quicken his embraced heaviness With some delight or other.

Do we so. [Exeunt. Saler.

SCENE IX. Belmont. Portia's house.

Enter NERISSA, and a Servitor.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee, draw the curtain straight:

The Prince of Arragon hath ta'en his oath, And comes to his election presently.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter the PRINCE OF ARRAGON, PORTIA, and their Trains.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble Prince.

If you choose that wherein I am contain'd, rites shall our nuptial Straight solemniz'd:

But if you fail, without more speech, my lord.

You must be gone from hence immediately. Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things:

First, never to unfold to any one TO Which casket 'twas I chose; next, if I fail Of the right casket, never in my life To woo a maid in way of marriage; Lastly,

If I do fail in fortune of my choice. 15 Immediately to leave you and be gone.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear

That comes to hazard for my worthless self. Ar. And so have I address'd me. Fortune now

To my heart's hope! Gold, silver, and base lead.

'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.'

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard. What says the golden chest? Ha! let me see:

'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire '.

What many men desire—that ' many ' may be meant

By the fool multitude, that choose by show.

Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach:

Which pries not to th' interior, but, like the martlet.

Builds in the weather on the outward wall. Even in the force and road of casualty. 30 I will not choose what many men desire. Because I will not jump with common spirits And rank me with the barbarous multitudes. Why, then to thee, thou silver treasurehouse!

Tell me once more what title thou dost bear.

'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.

And well said too: for who shall go about To cozen fortune, and be honourable Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume

To wear an undeserved dignity. O that estates, degrees, and offices, Were not deriv'd corruptly, and that clear honour Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer! How many then should cover that stand bare!

How many be commanded that command! How much low peasantry would then be gleaned

From the true seed of honour! and how much honour

Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times. To be new varnish'd! Well, but to my choice.

'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'

I will assume desert. Give me a key for this,

And instantly unlock my fortunes here.

[He opens the silver casket. Por. [Aside] Too long a pause for that which you find there.

What's here? The portrait of a blinking idiot

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

Presenting me a schedule! I will read it. 55 How much unlike ait thou to Portia! How much unlike my hopes and my deservings! 'Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves. Did I deserve no more than a fool's head? Is that my prize? Are my deserts no better?

Por. To offend and judge are distinct offices

And of opposed natures.

What is here? ! Reads Ar.

'The fire seven times tried this; Seven times tried that judgment is That did never choose amiss. Some there be that shadows kiss, Such have but a shadow's bliss. There be fools alive iwis Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Take what wife you will to bed, I will ever be your head. So be gone; you are sped.'

Still more fool I shall appear By the time I linger here. With one fool's head I came to woo, But I go away with two. Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath, Patiently to bear my wroth. [Exit with his Train.

Per. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moth.

O, these deliberate fools! When they do choose,

They have the wisdom by their wit to lose. Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy: Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Where is my lady? Here; what would my lord? 85 Serv. Madam, there is alighted at your gate

A young Venetian, one that comes before To signify th' approaching of his lord, From whom he bringeth sensible regreets; To wit, besides commends and courteous breath, Gifts of rich value. Yet I have not seen So likely an ambassador of love.

A day in April never came so sweet To show how costly summer was at hand As this fore-spurrer comes before his lord. Por. No more, I pray thee: I am half afeard

Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee, Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising

Come, come, Nerissa, for I long to see 99 Quick Cupid's post that comes so mannerly.

ACT THREE

Scene I. Venice. A street.

Enter Solanio and Salerio.

Solan. Now, what news on the Rialto? Saler. Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd on the narrow seas; the Goodwins I think they call the place, a very dangerous flat and fatal, where the carcases of many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip Report be an honest woman of her word.

Solan, I would she were as lying a gossip in that as ever knapp'd ginger or made her neighbours believe she wept for the death of a third husband. But it is true, without any slips of prolixity or crossing the plain highway of talk, that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio-O that I had a title good enough to keep his name company !-

Saler. Come, the full stop.
Solan. Ha! What sayest thou? Why, the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Saler. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Solan. Let me say amen betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.

Enter SHYLOCK.

How now, Shylock? What news among the merchants?

Shy. You knew, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

Saler. That's certain; I, for my part. knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.

Solan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was flidge; and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damn'd for it.

Saler. That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel 1 30 Solan. Out upon it, old carrion! Rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say my daughter is my flesh and my blood.

Saler. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods than there is between red wine and Rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto; a beggar, that was Ner. Bassanio, Lord Love, if thy will it us'd to come so smug upon the mart. Let be! [Exeunt. him look to his bond. He was wont to call me usurer; let him look to his bond. He was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy; let him look to his bond.

Saler. Why, I am sure, if he forfert, thou wilt not take his flesh. What's that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal. If it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgrac'd me and hind'red me half a million; laugh'd at my losses, mock'd at my gains, scorned my nation, thwaited my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies. And what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses. affections, passions, fed with the same food, burt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means. waimed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? It you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Chiistian, what is his humility? Revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? Why, revenge. The villainy you teach me I will execute; and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Man from Antonio.

Man. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Saler. We have been up and down to seek him

Enter TUBAL.

Solan. Here comes another of the tribe; a third cannot be match'd, unless the devil himself turn Jew. [Exeunt Solanio, Salerio, and Man.

Shy. How now, Tubal, what news from Genoa? Hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why there, there, there! A diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I never felt it till now. Two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, precious jewels. I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear; would she were hears'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them? Why, so-and I know not what's spent in the search. Why, thouloss upon loss! The thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief; and no satisfaction, no revenge; nor no ill luck Before you venture for me. I could teach stirring but what lights o' my shoulders;

o sighs but o' my breathing; no tears but ' my shedding!

Tub Yes, other men have ill luck too: Antonio, as I heard in Genoa-Shy. What, what, what? Ill luck, ill

Tub. Hath an argosy cast away coming tom Tripolis.

Shy. I thank God, I thank God. Is it true, is it true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped ine wieck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal. Good news, good news-ha, ha!-heard in Genoa.

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stick'st a dagger in me-I shall never see my gold again. Fourscore ducats at a sitting! Fourscore ducats! 97

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it; I'll plague him, I'll torture him; I am glad of

Tub. One of them showed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey. Shy. Out upon hei! Thou forturest me, Tubal. It was my turquoise; I had it of Leah when I was a bachelor; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that's true; that's very true. Go, Tubal, fee me an officer; bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he to test: for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I Go. Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue; go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Belmont. Portia's house.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, NERISSA, and all their Trains.

Por. I pray you tarry; pause a day or

Before you hazard: for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company; therefore forbear a awhile.

There's something tells me-but it is not love-

I would not lose you; and you know yourself

Hate counsels not in such a quality. But lest you should not understand me well-

And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought-

I would detain you here some month or two

you

70

How to choose right, but then I am With no less presence, but with much more forsworn:

So will I never be; so may you miss me; But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin, That I had been forsworn. Beshrew your eyes!

They have o'erlook'd me and divided me; One half of me is yours, the other half yours-

Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then vours.

And so all yours. O! these naughty times Puts bars between the owners and their rights:

And so, though yours, not yours. Prove it so,

Let fortune go to hell for it, not I. I speak too long, but 'tis to peize the time, To eke it, and to draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Let me choose : Bass. For as I am, I live upon the rack. 25 Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio? Then confess

What treason there is mingled with your love.

Bass. None but that ugly treason of mistrust.

Which makes me fear th' enjoying of my

There may as well be amity and life 30 Tween snow and fire as treason and my

Por. Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack. Where men enforced do speak anything. Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.

Por. Well then, confess and live.

Bass. 'Confess' and 'love'

Had been the very sum of my confession. O happy torment, when my torturer Doth teach me answers for deliverance!

But let me to my fortune and the caskets. Por. Away, then; I am lock'd in one of them.

If you do love me, you will find me out. Nerissa and the rest, stand all aloof; Let music sound while he doth make his choice:

Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end, Fading in music. That the comparison May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream

And wat'ry death-bed for him. He may win;

And what is music then? Then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects

To a new-crowned monarch; such it is 50 As are those dulcet sounds in break of day That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's

And summon him to marriage. Now be goes, Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee; 238

love.

Than young Alcides when he did redeem 55 The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy To the sea-monster. I stand for sacrifice: The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives. With bleared visages come forth to view The issue of th' exploit. Go, Hercules! 60 Live thou, I live. With much much more dismay

I view the fight than thou that mak'st the fray.

A Song, the whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

Tell me where is fancy bred. Or in the heart or in the head, How begot, how nourished?

Reply, reply. It is engend'red in the eyes, With gazing fed; and fancy dies In the cradle where it lies. Let us all ring fancy's knell:

I'll begin it-Ding, dong, bell. All. Ding, dong, bell

Bass. So may the outward shows be least themselves ;

The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt 75 But, being season'd with a gracious voice, Obscures the show of evil? In religion. What damned error but some sober brow Will bless it, and approve it with a text, Hiding the grossness with fair ornament? There is no vice so simple but assumes 81 Some mark of virtue on his outward parts. How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false

As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars: Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk!

And these assume but valour's excrement To render them redoubted. Look on beauty And you shall see 'tis purchas'd by the weight.

Which therein works a miracle in nature. 90 Making them lightest that wear most of it; So are those crisped snaky golden locks Which make such wanton gambols with the wind

Upon supposed fairness often known To be the dowry of a second head-The skull that bred them in the sepulchre. Thus ornament is but the guiled shore To a most dangerous sea; the beauteous

Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word, The seeming truth which cunning times put on 100 Therefore, thou To entrap the wisest. gaudy gold,

Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge

'Tween man and man; but thou, thou meagre lead,

Which rather threaten'st than dost promise aught,
Thy plainness moves me more than eloquence,

And here choose I. Joy be the consequence
Por. [Aside] How all the other passion fleet to air, As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embrac'd despair, And shudd'ring fear, and gree 1-ey'd jealousy!

O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy, In measure rain thy joy, scant this excess I feel too much thy blessing. Make it less, For fear I surfeit.

Bass. [Opening the leaden casket] What find I here?

Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?

Or whether riding on the balls of mine Seem they in motion? Here are sever'd lips,

Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar Should sunder such sweet friends. Here in her hairs

The painter plays the spider, and hath woven

A golden mesh t' entrap the hearts of men Faster than gnats in cobwebs. But her eyes—

How could he see to do them? Having made one,

Methinks it should have power to steal both his,

And leave itself unfurnish'd. Yet look how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow

In underprizing it, so far this shadow

In underprizing it, so far this shadow

Doth limp behind the substance. Here's the scroll,

The continent and summary of my fortune.

'You that choose not by the view, Chance as fair and choose as true! Since this fortune falls to you, Be content and seek no new. If you be well pleas'd with this, 13 And hold your fortune for your bliss, Turn you where your lady is And claim her with a loving kiss.'

A gentle scroll. Fair lady, by your leave; I come by note, to give and to receive. 140 Like one of two contending in a prize, That thinks he hath done well in people's Hearing applause and universal shout, Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt 144 Whether those peals of praise be his or no;

So, thrice-fair lady, stand I even so, As doubtful whether what I see be true, Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por. You see me, Lord Bassanio, where I stand,

Such as I am. Though for myself alone 150 I would not be ambitious in my wish To wish myself much better, yet for you I would be trebled twenty times myself, A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times more rich,

That only to stand high in your account
I might in virtues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account. But the full sum of me
Is sum of something which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd;

Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all is that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed, 165
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself and what is mine to you and yours
Is now converted. But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same
myself,

Are yours—my lord's. I give them with this ring,

Which when you part from, lose, or give away,

Let it presage the ruin of your love,

And be my vantage to exclaim on you. 175

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words:

Only my blood speaks to you in my veins; And there is such confusion in my powers As, after some oration fairly spoke By a beloved prince, there doth appear 186 Among the buzzing pleased multitude, Where every something, being blent together,

Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy Express'd and not express'd. But when this ring

Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence; 185

O, then be bold to say Bassanio's dead!

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time

That have stood by and seen our wishes prosper

To cry 'Good joy'. Good joy, my lord and lady!

Gra. My Lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady.

I wish you all the joy that you can wish, For I am sure you can wish none from me; And, when your honours mean to solemnize The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thank your loidship you have got me one.

My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours: You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid; You lov'd, I lov'd; for intermission No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.

Your fortune stood upon the caskets there. And so did mine too, as the matter falls; For wooing here until I sweat again,

And swearing till my very roof was dry 205 With oaths of love, at last-if promise last-

I got a promise of this fair one here To have her love, provided that your fortune

Achiev'd her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa? Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas'd Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honoured in your marriage. Gra. We'll play with them: the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and stake down?

Gra. No; we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down-But who comes here? Lorenzo and his Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio. a messenger from Venice.

Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither,

If that the youth of my new int'rest here Have power to bid you welcome. By your leave,

I bid my very friends and countrymen, 225 Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. So do I, my lord;

They are entirely welcome. Lor. I thank your honour. For my part, my lord,

My purpose was not to have seen you here; But meeting with Salerio by the way, 230 He did entreat me, past all saying nay, To come with him along.

Suler. I did, my lord, And I have reason for it. Signior Antonio Commends him to you.

Nor well, unless in mind; his letter there But none can drive him from the envious Will show you his estate.

[Bassanio opens the letter. Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond. 285

Gra. Nerissa, cheer youd stranger: bid her welcome.

Your hand, Salerio. What's the news from Venice? How doth that toyal merchant, good Antonio?

I know he will be glad of our success: We are the Jasons, we have won the fleece. Saler. I would you had won the fleece that he hath lost. Por. There are some shrewd contents in yond same paper

That steals the colour from Bassanio's cheek:

Some dear friend dead, else nothing in the world

Could turn so much the constitution

Of any constant man. What, worse and worse! With leave, Bassanio: I am half yourself.

And I must freely have the half of anything That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia, Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady, When I did first impart my love to you, 255 I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins—I was a gentleman;

And then I told you true. And yet, dear

Rating myself at nothing, you shall see How much I was a braggart. When I told 260

My state was nothing, I should then have told vou

That I was worse than nothing: for indeed I have engag'd myself to a dear friend, Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,

To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady, The paper as the body of my friend, And every word in it a gaping wound Issuing life-blood. But is it tiue, Salerio? Hath all his ventures fail'd? What, not one

From Tripolis, from Mexico, and England, From Lisbon, Barbary, and India, And not one vessel scape the dreadful touch Of merchant-marring rocks?

Saler. Not one, my lord. Besides, it should appear that, if he had The present money to discharge the Jew, He would not take it. Never did I know 276 A creature that did bear the shape of man So keen and greedy to confound a man. He plies the Duke at morning and at night.

And doth impeach the freedom of the state, If they deny him justice. Twenty merchants, 235 The Duke himself, and the magnificoes Saler. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in Of greatest port, have all persuaded with hım:

To Tubal and to Chus, his countrymen, That he would rather have Antonio's flesh Than twenty times the value of the sum That he did owe him; and I know, my .lord.

If law, authority, and power, deny not. It will go hard with poor Antonio.

Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?

The dearest friend to me, the kındest man,

The best condition'd and unwearied spirit In doing courtesies; and one in whom The ancient Roman honour more appears Than any that draws breath in Italy.

Por. What sum owes he the Jew? Bass. For me, three thousand ducats. What! no more?

Por. Pay him six thousand, and deface the Fond; Double six thousand, and then treble that, Before a triend of this description Shall lose a hair through Bassanio's fault. First go with me to church and call me wife, And then away to Venice to your friend; For never shall you lie by Portia's side With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold To pay the petty debt twenty times over. When it is paid, bring your true friend along. My maid Nerissa and myself meantime Will live as maids and widows. Come, away For you shall hence upon your wedding-

Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer;

Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear.

But let me hear the letter of your friend. Bass [Reads] 'Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit; and since, in paying it, it is impossible I should live, all debts are clear'd between you and I, if I might but see you at my death. Notwithstanding. use your pleasure; if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter.'

Por. O love, dispatch all business and be

Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away,

I will make haste; but, till I come again, No bed shall e'er be guilty of my stay, Nor rest be interposer 'twixt us twain.

Scene III. Venice. A street. Enter Shylock, Solanio, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy. Gaoler, look to him. Tell not me of mercy-

Gaoler, look to him.

Hear me yet, good Shylock. Ant. Shy. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond.

I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond.

Thou call'dst me dog before thou hadst a cause.

But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs; The Duke shall grant me justice. wonder.

Thou naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond To come abroad with him at his request. 10 Ant. I pray thee hear me speak.

Shy, I'll have my bond. I will not hear thee speak;

I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-ev'd fool. To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield.

To Christian intercessors. Follow not; I'll have no speaking; I will have my bond. Exit.

Solan. It is the most impenetrable cur That ever kept with men.

Let him alone: Ant. I'll follow him no more with bootless pravers

He seeks my life; his reason well I know: I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures Many that have at times made moan to me: Therefore he hates me.

I am sure the Duke Solan. Will never grant this forfeiture to hold. 25 Ant. The Duke cannot deny the course of law:

For the commodity that strangers have With us in Venice, if it be denied, Will much impeach the justice of the state, Since that the trade and profit of the city Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go; These griefs and losses have so bated me That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh To-morrow to my bloody creditor. Well, gaoler, on; pray God Bassanio come To see me pay his debt, and then I care not. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. Belmont. Portia's house. Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and BALTHASAR.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your piesence,

You have a noble and a true conceit Of godlike amity, which appears most strongly

In bearing thus the absence of your lord. But if you knew to whom you show this honour.

How true a gentleman you send relief, How dear a lover of my lord your husband,

24I

I know you would be prouder of the work Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good, Nor shall not now; for in companions That do converse and waste the time together, Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love There must be needs a like proportion Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit. Which makes me think that this Antonio Being the bosom lover of my 101d, Must needs be like my lord. If it be so, How little is the cost I have bestowed In purchasing the semblance of my soul From out the state of hellish cruelty! This comes too near the praising of myself Therefore, no more of it; hear other things Lorenzo, I commit into your hands The husbandry and manage of my house 25 Until my lord's return: for mine own part. I have toward heaven breath'd a secret vow

To live in prayer and contemplation, Only attended by Nerissa here, Until her husband and my lord's return. 3. There is a monastery two miles off, And there we will abide. I do desire you Not to deny this imposition, The which my love and some necessity Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart I shall obey you in all fair commands. 30 Por. My people do already know my mind,

And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of Lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well till we shall meet again.
Lor. Fair thoughts and happy hours attend on you!

Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleas'd

To wish it back on you. Fare you well, Jessica.

[Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo. Now, Balthasar, 45

As I have ever found thee honest true, So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,

And use thou all th' endeavour of a man In speed to Padua; see thou render this Into my cousin's hands, Doctor Bellario; And look what notes and garments he doth give thee,

Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed

Unto the traject, to the common ferry Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,

But get three gone; I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

Por. Come on, Nerissa, I have work in hand

That you yet know not of; we'll see our husbands

Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?

Por. They shall, Nerissa; but in such a habit

That they shall think we are accomplished With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,

When we are both accoutred like young men,

I'll prove the piettier fellow of the two, 64 And wear my dagger with the braver grace, And speak between the change of man and boy

With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps

Into a manly stride; and speak of trays
Like a fine bragging youth; and tell quaint lies.

How honourable ladies sought my love, 70 Which I denying, they fell sick and died—I could not do withal. Then I'll repent, And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them.

And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell, That men shall swear I have discontinued school

Above a twe.vemonth. I have within my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks.

Which I will practise.

Ner. Why, shall we turn to men? Por. Fie, what a question's that,

If thou wert near a lewd interpreter! 80 But come, I'll tell thee all my whole device When I am in my coach, which stays for us At the park gate; and therefore haste away,

For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

Scene V. Belmont. The garden.

Enter LAUNCELOT and JESSICA.

Laun. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise you. I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter; therefore be o' good cheer, for truly I think you are damn'd. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good, and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Laun. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not—that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope enient indeed; so the sins of my mother should [Exit. be visited upon me.

Laun. Truly then I fear you are damn's both by father and mother; thus when shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Cha rybdis, your mother; well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be sav'd by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Laun. Truly, the more to blame he; we were Christians enow before, e'en as many as could well live one by another. making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, w shall not shortly have a rasher on the coalfor money.

Enter LORENZO.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say; here he comes.

Lor. 1 shall grow jealous of you shortly Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need nor fear us, Lorenzo Launcelot and I are out; he tells me flatly there's no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter; and he says you are no good member of the commonwealth. for in converting Jews to Christians you raise the price of poik.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Laun. It is much that the Moor should be more than reason; but if she be less than an honest woman, she is indeed more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word! I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but Go in, sırrah; bid them prepare parrots. for dinner.

Laun. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Lor. Goodly Lord, what a wit-snapper are you! Then bid them prepare dinner. Laun. That is done too, sir, only 'cover' is the word.

Lor. Will you cover, then, sir? Laun. Not so, sir, neither; I know my

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. 52

Laun. For the table, sir, it shall be serv'd in; for the meat, sir, it shall be cover'd; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conceits shall govern. Exit.

Lor. O dear discretion, how his words are suited !

The fool hath planted in his memory An army of good words; and I do know A many fools that stand in better place, 59 Gainish'd like him, that for a tricksy word Defy the matter. How cheer'st thou. Jessica?

And now, good sweet, say thy opinion, How dost thou like the Lord Bassanio's

Jes. Past all expressing. It is very meet The Lord Bassanio live an upright life, 65 For, having such a blessing in his lady, He finds the joys of heaven here on earth; And if on earth he do not merit it. In reason he should never come to heaven.

Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,

And on the wager lay two earthly women. And Portia one, there must be something

Pawn'd with the other; for the poor rude world

Hath not her fellow.

Even such a husband Hast thou of me as she is for a wife. Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion too of that.

Lor. I will anon; first let us go to dinner. Jes. Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for tabletalk :

Then howsome'er thou speak'st, 'mong other things I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth. [Exeunt.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. Venice. The court of justice.

Enter the DUKE, the Magnificoes, ANTONIO, BASSANIO, GRATIANO, SALERIO, and Others.

Duke. What, is Antonio here? Ant. Ready, so please your Grace. Duke. I am sorry for thee; thou art come to answer

A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch, Uncapable of pity, void and empty

From any dram of mercy. Ant.

I have heard Your Grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify

His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate,

And that no lawful means can carry me Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose My patience to his fury, and am arm'd To suffer with a quietness of spirit The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the Saler. He is ready at the door; he comes, my lord.

Enter SHYLOCK.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face. Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so To excuse the current of thy cruelty. too,

That thou but leadest this fashion of thy malice

To the last hour of act: and then, 'tis thought,

Thou'lt show thy mercy and remorse, more strange

Than is thy strange apparent cruelty; And where thou now exacts the penalty, Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh.

Thou will not only loose the forfeiture. But, touch'd with human gentleness and Forgive a moiety of the principal, Glancing an eye of pity on his losses, That have of late so huddled on his back-Enow to press a royal merchant down, And pluck commiseration of his state From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flint.

From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never traın'd

To offices of tender courtesy. We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

Shy. I have possess'd your Grace of what I purpose,

And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn To have the due and forfeit of my bond. If you deny it, let the danger light Upon your charter and your city's freedom. You'll ask me why I rather choose to have A weight of carrion flesh than to receive 41 Three thousand ducats. I'll not answer that.

But say it is my humour—is it answer'd? What if my house be troubled with a rat, And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats

To have it ban'd? What, are you answer'd yet? Some men there are love not a gaping pig; Some that are mad if they behold a cat; And others, when the bagpipe sings i' th' nose, Cannot contain their urine; for affection, Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood Of what it likes or loathes. Now, for your answer:

As there is no firm reason to be rend'red Why he cannot abide a gaping pig; Why he, a harmless necessary cat; Why he, a woollen bagpipe, but of force Must yield to such inevitable shame As to offend, himself being offended; So can I give no reason, nor I will not, More than a lodg'd hate and a certain loathing

I bear Antonio, that I follow thus

A losing suit against him. Are you answered?

Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man.

Shy. I am not bound to please thee with my answers. Bass. Do all men kill the things they do not love? Shy. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first. Shy. What, wouldst thou have a serpent sting thee twice?

Ant. I pray you, think you question with the lew.

You may as well go stand upon the beach And bid the main flood bate his usual height:

You may as well use question with the wolf. Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;

You may as well forbid the mountain pines To wag their high tops and to make no

When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven:

You may as well do any thing most hard As seek to soften that—than which what's harder ?—

His Jewish heart. Therefore, I do beseech

Make no moe offers, use no farther means, But with all brief and plain conveniency Let me have judgment, and the lew his will.

Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.

Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats

Were in six parts, and every part a ducat I would not draw them; I would have m bond.

Duke. How shalt thou hope for mercy, rend'ring none?

Shy What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,

Which, like your asses and your dogs and mules,

You use in abject and in slavish parts, Because you bought them; shall I say to you

'Let them be free, marry them to your heirs-

Why sweat they under burdens ?--let their beds

Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates

Be season'd with such viands '? You will answer

'The slaves are ours'. So do I answer you: The pound of flesh which I demand of him Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will 'Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so have it.

If you deny me, fie upon your law! There is no force in the decrees of Venice. I stand for judgment; answer; shall I have it?

Duke. Upon my power I may dismiss this court.

Unless Bellario, a learned doctor, 105 Whom I have sent for to determine this, Come here to-day.

My lord, here stays without Saler. A messenger with letters from the doctor, New come from Padua.

Duke. Bring us the letters; call the messenger.

Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man, courage yet!

The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all.

Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood. Ant. I am a tainted wether of the flock.

Meetest for death; the weakest kind of fruit

Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio. Than to live still, and write mine epitaph.

Enter NERISSA, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario greets your Grace. [Presents a letter. Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?

Shy. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt there.

Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,

Thou mak'st thy knife keen; but no metal

No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee? Shy. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

Gra. O, be thou damn'd, inexecrable dog! And for thy life let justice be accus'd. Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith, To hold opinion with Pythagoras

That souls of animals infuse themselves Into the trunks of men. Thy currish spirit Govern'd a wolf who, hang'd for human slaughter, Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet.

And, whilst thou layest in thy unhallowed dam.

Infus'd itself in thee: for thy desires

Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shy. Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond, loud: Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall

To cureless ruin. I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend

A young and learned doctor to our court. Where is he?

He attendeth here hard by 145 Ner. To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

Duke. With all my heart. Some three or four of you Go give him courteous conduct to this place. Meantime, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

Clerk. [Reads] 'Your Grace shall understand that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick; but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome-his name is Balthazar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio the meichant; we turn'd o'er many books together; he is furnished with my opinion which, bettered with his own learning-the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend-comes with him at my importunity to fill up your Grace's request in my stead. I beseech you let his lack of years be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation.'

Enter Portia for Balthazar, dressed like a Doctor of Laws.

Duke. You hear the learn'd Bellario, what he writes:

And here, I take it, is the doctor come. 163 Give me your hand; come you from old Bellano?

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome; take your place.

Are you acquainted with the difference That holds this présent question in the court?

Por. I am informed throughly of the cause.

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

Duke. Antonio and old Shylcck. both stand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylock?

Shylock is my name. Shy. Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;

Yet in such rule that the Venetian law 173 Cannot impugn you as you do proceed. You stand within his danger, do you not?

Ant. Ay, so he says. Por. Do you confess the bond? Ant. I do.

Por. Then must the Jew be merciful. Shy. On what compulsion must I? Tel me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not stiain'd; It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven Upon the place beneath. It is twice bles: It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.

'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes The throned monarch better than his crown: His sceptre shows the force of temporal power.

The attribute to awe and majesty,

Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings:

But mercy is above this sceptred sway, It is enthroned in the hearts of kings, It is an attribute to God himself; 196 And earthly power doth then show likest God's

When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,

Though justice be thy plea, consider this— That in the course of justice none of us Should see salvation; we do pray for mercy, 195

And that same prayer doth teach us all to

The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much

To mitigate the justice of thy plea, Which if thou follow, this strict court of

Venuce
Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

Shy. My deeds upon my head! I crave How much more elder art thou than thy the law,

The penalty and forfeit of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?

Bass. Yes; here I tender it for him in the court:

Yea, twice the sum; if that will not suffice I will be bound to pay it ten times o'er On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart;

If this will not suffice, it must appear That malice bears down truth. And, I beseech you.

Wrest once the law to your authority; 210 To do a great right do a little wrong, And curb this cruel devil of his will.

Por. It must not be; there is no power in Venice

Can alter a decree established;
'Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state; it cannot be.

Shy. A Daniel conie to judgment! Yea, a Daniel!

O wise young judge, how I do honour thee!

Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.

220

Shy. Here 'tis, most reverend Doctor; here it is.

Por. Shylock, there's thrice thy money off'red thee.

Shy. An oath, an oath! I have an oath in heaven.

Shall I lay perjury upon my soul? No, not for Venice.

Por. Why, this bond is forfeit; 225 And lawfully by this the Jew may claim A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off Nearest the merchant's heart. Be merciful. Take thrice thy money; bid me tear the bond.

Shy. When it is paid according to the tenour.

It doth appear you are a worthy judge;
You know the law; your exposition

Hath been most sound; I charge you by the law,

Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar, Proceed to judgment. By my soul I swear There is no power in the tongue of man To alter me. I stay here on my bond. 237

Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court To give the judgment.

For. Why then, thus it is: You must prepare your bosom for his knife. Shy. O noble judge! O excellent young man!

Por. For the intent and purpose of the Hath full relation to the penalty,

Which here appeareth due upon the bond. Shy. 'Tis very true. O wise and upright judge, 245

Por. Therefore, lay bare your bosom. Shy. Ay, his breast—

So says the bond; doth it not, noble judge?
'Nearest his heart', those are the very words.

Por. It is so. Are there balance here to

Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh
The flesh?

Shy. I have them ready.

Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,

To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.

Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?

Por. It is not so express'd, but what of that?

255

'Twere good you do so much for charity.

Shy. I cannot find it; 'tis not in the bond.

Por. You, merchant, have you anything to say?

Ant. But little: I am arm'd and well prepar'd. 259

Give me your hand Bassanio; sare you well. Grieve not that I am fall'n to this for you,

Enter PORTIA and NERISSA.

Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give hini this deed, And let him sign it; we'll away to-night, And be a day before our husbands home This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

Enter GRATIANO.

Gra. Fair sir, you are well o'erta'en. My Lord Bassanio, upon more advice, Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat

Your company at dinner.

That cannot be. Por. His ring I do accept most thankfully. And so, I pray you, tell him. Furthermore, I pray you show my youth old Shylock's house.

Gra. That will I do.

Sir, I would speak with you. [Aside to Portia] I'll see if I can get my husband's ring,

Which I did make him swear to keep for ever.

Por. [To Nerissa] Thou mayst, I warrant. We shall have old swearing

That they did give the rings away to men; But we'll outface them, and outswear them where I will tarry.

Ner. Come, good sir, will you show me to this house?

For do but note a wild and wanton herd, Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,

Which is the hot condition of their blood-If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound.

Or any air of music touch their ears, You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze By the sweet power of music. Therefore the poet

Enter PORTIA and NERISSA.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.

How far that little candle throws his beams! So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:

A substitute shines brightly as a king Until a king be by, and then his state Empties itself, as doth an inland brook Into the main of waters. Music! hark!

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the cuckoo,

By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home. Por. We have been praying for our

Lor. Madam, they are not yet; But there is come a messenger before, To signify their coming.

Go in, Nerissa; Por. ive order to my servants that they take No note at all of our being absent hence: Nor you, Lorenzo: Jessica, nor you. 121 [A tucket sounds. Lor. Your husband is at hand, I hear his A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy trumpet.

We are no tell-tales, madam, fear you not. Por. This night methinks is but the daylight sick;

It looks a little paler; 'tis a day Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their Followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes. If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be For a light wife doth make a heavy

This is the man, this is Antonio,

To whom I am so infinitely bound. Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,

For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Unto the judge that begg'd it, and indeed

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house.

It must appear in other ways than words. Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy. Gra. [To Nerissa] By yonder moon I swear you do me wrong: In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk.

Would he were gelt that had it, for my part, Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! What's the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring That she did give me, whose posy was For all the world like cutler's poetry Upon a knife, 'Love me, and leave me not'.

Ner. What talk you of the posy or the value?

You swore to me, when I did give it you, That you would wear it till your hour of death, And that it should lie with you in your grave;

Though not for me, yet for your vehement

You should have been respective and have kept it.

Gave it a judge's clerk! No, God's my judge, that had it.

Gra. He will, an if he live to be a man. Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man. 160 Gra. Now by this hand I gave it to a youth.

No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk: A prating boy that begg'd it as a fee;

I could not for my heart deny it him. Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,

To part so slightly with your wife's first gıft,

A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.

I gave my love a ring, and made him swear Never to part with it, and here he stands: I dare be sworn for him he would not leave it

Nor pluck it from his finger for the wealth That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,

But God sort all! You are welcome home, You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief;

> Bass. [Aside] Why, I were best to cut my left hand off.

135 And swear I lost the ring defending it. Gra. My Lord Bassanio gave his ring away Ant. No more than I am well acquitted Deserv'd it too; and then the boy, his clerk,

That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine:

And neither man nor master would take aught But the two rings.

Por. What ring gave you, my lord? Not that, I hope, which you receiv'd of me.

Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault. I would deny it; but you see my finger Hath not the ring upon it; it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth: By heaven, I will ne'er come in your bed

Until I see the ring. Nor I in yours Ner.

Till I again see mine.

Sweet Portia, Bass. If you did know to whom I gave the ring,

It you did know for whom I gave the ring, And would conceive for what I gave the ring,

And how unwillingly I left the ring. When nought would be accepted but the ring,

You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,

The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face Or half her worthiness that gave the ring, Or your own honour to contain the ring, You would not then have parted with the ring.

What man is there so much unreasonable, If you had pleas'd to have defended it

With any terms of zeal, wanted the Which, but for him that had your husband's modesty

To urge the thing held as a ceremony? Nerissa teaches me what to believe: I'll die for't but some woman had the ring

Bass. No, by my honour, madam, by my soul.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor, Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me.

And begg'd the ring; the which I did deny him.

And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away Even he that had held up the very life Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?

I was enforc'd to send it after him; I was beset with shame and courtesy; My honour would not let ingratitude So much besmear it. Paidon me, good lady For by these blessed candles of the night Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd 221

The ring of me to give the worthy doctor Por. Let not that doctor e'er come near my house;

Since he hath got the jewel that I loved, And that which you did swear to keep for l will become as liberal as you; I'll not deny him anything I have, No, not my body, nor my husband's bed. Know him I shall, I am well sure of it. Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus: If you do not, if I be left alone,

Now, by mine honour which is yet mine Enter'd my house.

I'll have that doctor for mine bedfellow. Ner. And I his clerk; therefore be well advis'd

How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Gra. Well, do you so, let not me take him then :

For, if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen. Ant. I am th' unhappy subject of these quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;

And in the hearing of these many friends I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes, Wherein I see myself-

Por. In both my eyes he doubly sees himself, In each eye one; swear by your double self, And there's an oath of credit.

Nay, but hear me. Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear I never more will break an oath with thee. wealth,

Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound

again,

My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety. Give him this, And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, Lord Bassanio, swear to keep this ring.

Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!

I had it of him. Pardon me. Por. Bassanio,

For, by this ring, the doctor lay with me. Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano. For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor's clerk.

In lieu of this, last night did lie with me. G.a. Why, this is like the mending of highways

In summer, where the ways are fair enough.

are we cuckolds ere we have What, deserv'd it?

Por. Speak not so grossly. You are all amaz'd.

Here is a letter; read it at your leisure; It comes from Padua, from Bellario; There you shall find that Portia was the doctor.

Nerissa there her clerk. Lorenzo here 270 Shall witness I set forth as soon as you. And even but now return'd; I have not

Antonio, you are welcome;

And I have better news in store for you Than you expect. Unseal this letter soon; There you shall find three of your argosies Are richly come to harbour suddenly. 277 You shall not know by what strange accident

I chanced on this letter.

I am dumb. Ant.

Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the clerk that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. Ay, but the clerk that never means to do it.

Unless he live until he be a man.

Bass. Sweet Doctor, you shall be my bedfellow;

Mark you but that! When I am absent, then lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and living;

For here I read for certain that my ships Are safely come to road.

Por. How new, Lorenzo! Ant. I once did lend my body for his My clerk hath some good comforts too for Ner. Ay, and I'll give them him without a tee.

There do I give to you and Jessica, From the iich Jew, a special deed of gift, After his death, of all he dies possess'd of.

Loi. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way

Of starved people.

Por. It is almost morning, 295
And yet I am sure you are not satisfied
Of these events at full. Let us go in,
And charge us there upon inter gatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so. The first inter'gatory That my Nerissa shall be sworn on is, 301 Whether till the next night she had rather or go to bed now, being two hours to day.

But were the day come, I should wish it dark,

Till I were couching with the doctor's clerk.

Well, while I live, I'll fear no other thing So sore as keeping safe Nerissa's ring.

Exeunt.

ACT ONE

Scene 1. Orchard of Oliver's house.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will but poor a thousand crowns, and, as thou say'st, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well; and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. For my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His borses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hir'd; but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me his countenance seems to take from me. He lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up. [Adam retires.

Oli. Now, sir! what make you here? 20 Orl. Nothing; I am not taught to make any thing.

Oli. What mar you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Oli. Marry, sii, be better employed, and be n ught awhile.

Orl. Shall I keep your hogs, and eat husks with them? What produgal portion have I spent that I should come to such penury?

Oli. Know you where you are, sir? Orl. O, sir, very well; here in your orchard.

Oli. Know you before whom, sir? Orl. Ay, better than him I am before knows me. I know you are my eldest brother; and, in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me. courtesy of nations allows you my better in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us. I have as much of my father in me as you, albeit I confess your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Oli. What, boy! [Strikes him. Orl. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain? Orl. I am no villain; I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys. He was my father; and he is thrice a villain that says such a father begot villains. Wert thou not my brother. I would not take this hand from thy throat till this other had pull'd out thy tongue for saying so. Thou has sail'd on beloved of her uncle than his own daughter: 56

Oli. Let me go, I say.

Orl. I will not, till I please; you shall hear me. My father charg'd you in his will to give me good education: you have train'd me like a peasant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities. The spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it; therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou do? Beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in. I will not long be troubled with you; you shall have some part of your will. I pray you

Orl. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dog. Adam. Is 'old dog' my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service. God be with my old master! He would not have spoke such a word.

[Exeunt Orlando and Adam. Oli. Is it even so? Begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Holla, Dennis!

Enter DENNIS.

Den. Calls your worship?

the Oli. Was not Charles, Duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?

Den. So please you, he is here at the door and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis] 'Twill be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter CHARLES.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship. Oli. Good Monsieur Charles! What's the new news at the new court?

Cha. There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news; that is, the old Duke is banished by his younger brother the new Duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new Duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell if Rosalind, the Duke's daughter, be banished with her father?

Cha. O, no; for the Duke's daughter, her cousin, so loves her, being ever from their cradles bred together, that she would have of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, followed her exile, or have died to stay hates nothing more than he. Yet he's behind her. She is at the court, and no less gentle; never school'd and yet learned; and never two ladies loved as they do. 103 Oli. Where will the old Duke live?

Cha. They say he is already in the Forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England. They say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new Duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguis'd against me to try a fall. To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender: and, for your love, I would be loath to feil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in; therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search and altogether against my will. 122

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein, and have by underhand means laboured to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles, if is the stubbornest young fellow of France: full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother. Therefore use thy discretion: 1 had as lief thou didst break his neck as his finger. And thou wert best look to't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath ta'en thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villaincus this day living. I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder. 140

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. 'If he come to-morrow I'll give him his payment. If ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. And so, God keep your worship!

Oli. Farewell, good Charles. Now will I stir this gamester. I hope I shall see an end full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved; and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. But it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all. Nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither which now I'll go about. [Exit Scene II. A lawn before the Duke's palace. Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz. be merry.

Ros. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of: and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein I see thou lov'st me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the Duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine; so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously temper'd as mine is to thee

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce. I will render thee again in affection. By mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn monster; therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see; what think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I prithee, do, to make sport withal; but love no man in good earnest, nor no further in sport neither than with safety of a pure blush thou mayst in honour come off again.

Ros. What shall be our sport, then?

Cel. Let us sit and mock the good housewite Fortune from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced; and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'Tis true; for those that she makes fair she scarce makes honest; and those that she makes honest she makes very illfavouredly.

Ros. Nay; now thou goest from Fortune's office to Nature's: Fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No: when Nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by Fortune fall into the fire? Though Nature hath given us wit to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is Fortune too hard for Nature, when Fortune makes Nature's natural the cutter-off of Nature's wit.

Cel. Peradventure this is not Fortune's work neither, but Nature's, who perceiveth our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, and hath sent this natural for cur whetstone; for always the duliness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits. How now, wit! Whither wander you?

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Cel. Were you made the messenger? Touch. No, by mine honour: but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool? Touch. Of a certain knight that swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was naught. Now I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Cel. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry, now unmuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By our beards, if we had them, thou

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were. But if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn; no more was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before ever he saw those pancakes or that mustard.

Cel. Prithee, who is't that thou mean'st? Touch. One that old Frederick, your ather, loves.

Cel. My father's love is enough to honour him. Enough, speak no more of him; you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days.

Touch. The more pity that fools may not peak wisely what wise men do foolishly. 79 Cel. By my troth, thou sayest true; for ince the little wit that fools have was ilenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show. Here comes Monsieur Le Beau.

Enter LE BEAU.

Ros. With his mouth full of news. Cel. Which he will put on us as pigeons eed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-cramm'd. 84

Cel. All the better; we shall be the more not be entreated, his own peril on his marketable. Bon jour, Monsieur Le Beau. forwardness. What's the news?

Le Beau. Fair Princess, you have lost much good sport.

Cel. Sport! of what colour?

Le Beau. What colour, madam? How shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the Destinies decrees.

Cel. Well said; that was laid on with a trowel.

Touch, Nay, if I keep not my rank—

Ros. Thou losest thy old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies. I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the Beau.

wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning, and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end; for the best is yet to do; and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cel. Well, the beginning that is dead and Le Beau. There comes an old man and his three sons-

Cel. I could match this beginning with an

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence.

Ros. With bills on their necks: 'Be it known unto all men by these presents'- 109

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the Duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him. So he serv'd the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them that all the beholders take his part with weeping. Ros. Alas!

Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?

Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.

Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day. It is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Res. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? Is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming. Let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter DUKE FREDERICK, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on; since the youth will earth?

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Cel. Alas, he is too young; yet he looks successfully

Duke F. How now, daughter and cousin! Are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege; so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such odds in the man. In pity of the challenger's youth I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated. Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither, good Monsieur Le

Duke F. Do so; I'll not be by.

[Duke Frederick goes abart. Le Beau. Monsieur the Challenger, the Princess calls for you. Orl. I attend them with all respect and

Ros. Young man, have you challeng'd Charles the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair Princess; he is the general challenger. I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth. 154

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are o bold for your years. You have seen too bold for your years. cruel proof of this man's strength; if you saw yourself with your eyes, or knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we will make it our suit to the Duke that the wrestling might not go forward.

Oil. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confess me much guilty to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your fair eyes and gentle wishes go with me to my trial; wherein if I be foil'd, there is but one sham'd that was never gracious; if kill'd, but one dead that is willing to be so. I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me; the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty. Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cel. And mine to eke out hers. Ros. Fare you well. Pray heaven I be deceiv'd in you! Cel. Your heart's desires be with you!

Cha. Come, where is this young gallant that is so desirous to lie with his mother more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Cha. No, I warrant your Grace, you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.

Oil. You mean to mock me after; you should not have mock'd me before; but come your ways.

Ros. Now. Hercules be thy speed, young

Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. [They wresile Ros. O excellent young man!

Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye,

I can tell who should down.

[Charles is thrown. Shout. Duke F. No more, no more. Orl. Yes, I beseech your Grace; I am not vet well breath'd. Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speak, my lord. Duke F. Bear him away. What is thy name, young man? 200 Orl. Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys.

Duke F. I would thou hadst been son to some man else.

The world esteem'd thy father honourable, But I did find him still mine enemy. Thou shouldst have better pleas'd me with this deed. Hadst thou descended from another house. But fare thee well: thou art a gallant youth; I would thou hadst told me of another [Exeunt Duke, Train, and Le Beau. Cel. Were I my father, coz, would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son,

His youngest son-and would not change that calling

To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Ros. My father lov'd Sir Rowland as his And all the world was of my father's mind;

Had I before known this young man his I should have given him tears unto entreaties

Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Gentle cousin, Let us go thank him, and encourage him; My father's rough and envious disposition Sticks me at heart. Sir, you have well deserv'd:

If you do keep your promises in love But justly as you have exceeded all And pity her for her good father's sake; 260 oromise,

Your mistress shall be happy. Ros.

Gentleman. [Giving him a chain from her neck.

Orl. Ready, sir: but his will hath in it a Wear this for me: one out of suits with fortune,

That could give more, but that her hand lacks means.

Shall we go, coz?

Cel Ay. Fare you well, fair gentleman. Orl. Can I not say 'I thank you'? My better parts

Are all thrown down; and that which here stands up

Is but a quintain, a mere lifeless block. 230 Ros. He calls us back. My pride fell with my fortunes; I'll ask him what he would. Did you call. sir?

Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown More than your enemies.

Cel. Will you go, coz? Ros. Have with you. Fare you well. 235

Exeunt Rosalind and Celia. Orl. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?

I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.

O poor Orlando, thou art overthrown! Or Charles or something weaker masters

Re-enter LE BEAU.

Le Beau. Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you To leave this place. Albeit you have deserv'd High commendation, true applause, and love.

Yet such is now the Duke's condition

That he misconstrues all that you have done

The Duke is humorous; what he is, indeed. More suits you to conceive than I to speak of.

Orl. I thank you, sir; and pray you tell me this:

Which of the two was daughter of the Duke That here was at the wrestling?

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners: But yet, indeed, the smaller is his daughter: The other is daughter to the banish'd Duke,

And here detain'd by her usurping uncle, To keep his daughter company; whose loves

Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters. But I can tell you that of late this Duke Hath ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece.

rounded upon no other argument But that the people praise her for her virtues

And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady

224 Will suddenly break forth. Sir, fare you well.

Hereafter, in a better world than this, I shall desire more love and knowledge of Orl. I rest much bounden to you; fare you well. [Exit Le Beau. Thus must I from the smoke into the smother:

From tyrant Duke unto a tyrani brother. But heavenly Rosalind!

Scene III. The Duke's palace.

Enter CELIA and ROSALIND.

Cel. Why, cousin! why, Rosalind! Cupid have mercy! Not a word?

Ros. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs; throw some of them at me; come, lame me with reasons.

Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up. when the one should be lam'd with reasons and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your father? To Ros. No, some of it is for my child's TΩ father. O, how full of briers is this workingday world!

Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday toolery; if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.

Ros. I could shake them off my coat: these buis are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.

Ros. I would try, if I could cry 'hem' and have him.

Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.

Ros. O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.

Cel. O, a good wish upon you! You will try in time, in despite of a fall. But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest. Is it possible, on such a sudden. you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?

Ros. The Duke my father lov'd his father dearly.

Cel. Doth it therefore ensue that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chase I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

Ros. No, faith, hate him not, for my sake Cel. Why should I not? Doth he not deserve well?

Enter DUKE FREDERICK, with Lords.

Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him because I do. Look, here comes the Duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your safest haste.

And get you from our court.

Ros. Me, uncle?

Duke F. You, cousin. Within these ten days if that thou beest found

So near our public court as twenty miles, Thou diest for it. I do beseech your Grace,

Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with f with myself I hold intelligence,

Or have acquaintance with mine own desires:

f that I do not dream, or be not frantic-As I do trust I am not—then, dear uncle, Never so much as in a thought unborn Did I offend your Highness.

Duke F. Thus do all traitors: If their purgation did consist in words. They are as innocent as grace itself.

Let it suffice thee that I trust thee not. Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor.

Tell me whereon the likelihood depends. Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter ; there's enough. Ros. So was I when your Highness took his dukedom: So was I when your Highness banish'd him. Treason is not inherited, my lord;

Or, if we did derive it from our friends, What's that to me? My father was no traitor. Then, good my liege, mistake me not so

To think my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak. Duke F. Ay, Celia; we stay'd her for your sake.

Else had she with her father rang'd along. Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay;

It was your pleasure, and your own remorse;

I was too young that time to value her, But now I know her. If she be a traitor, Why so am I: we still have slept together, Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, eat together:

And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans,

Still we went coupled and inseparable.

Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and her smoothness, Her very silence and her patience.

Speak to the people, and they pity her. 75 Thou art a fool. She robs thee of thy name; And thou wilt show more bright and seem more virtuous

When she is gone. Then open not thy lips. Firm and irrevocable is my doom

Which I have pass'd upon her; she is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence, then, on me, my liege;

I cannot live out of her company. Duke F. You are a fool. You, niece, provide yourself.

If you outstay the time, upon mine honour, And in the greatness of my word, you die. [Exeunt Duke and Lords.

Cel. O my poor Rosalind! Whither wilt thou go?

Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine.

I charge thee be not thou more griev'd than I am.

Ros. I have more cause.

Thou hast not, cousin. Cel. Prithee be cheerful. Know'st thou not the Duke Hath banish'd me, his daughter?

That he hath not. Ros. Cel. No, hath not? Rosalind lacks, then, the love

Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one.

Shall we be sund'red? Shall we part, sweet girl?

No; let my father seek another heir. Therefore devise with me how we may fly, Whither to go, and what to bear with us; And do not seek to take your charge upon you, To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out;

For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,

Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.

Ros. Why, whither shall we go?
Cel. To seek my uncle in the Forest of Arden.

Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us, Maids as we are, to travel forth so far! 105 Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold. Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire. And with a kind of umber smirch my face:

The like do you; so shall we pass along, 10) And never stir assailants

Were it not better, Ros. Because that I am more than common tall, That I did suit me all points like a man?

A gallant curtle-axe upon my thigh, A boar spear in my hand; and—in my heart

Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will-

We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,

As many other mannish cowards have That do outface it with their semblances.

Cel. What shall I call thee when thou art a man? Ros. I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own page, And therefore look you call me Ganymede. But what will you be call'd?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state:

No longer Celia, but Aliena.

Ros. But, cousin, what if we assay'd to steal

The clownish fool out of your father's court? Would he not be a comfort to our travel? Cel. He ll go along o'er the wide world with me:

Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away, And get our jewels and our wealth together: Devise the fittest time and safest way To hide us from pursuit that will be made After my flight. Now go we in content To liberty, and not to banishment. [Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, and two or three LORDS. like foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile,

Hath not old custom made this life more sweet

Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods

More free from peril than the envious court? Here feel we not the penalty of Adam, The seasons' difference; as the icy fang And churlish chiding of the winter's wind, Which when it bites and blows upon my Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and sav This is no flattery; these are counsellors That feelingly persuade me what I am '.

Sweet are the uses of adversity; Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head; 14 And this our life, exempt from public haunt. Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks.

Sermons in stones, and good in everything. I would not change it.

Ami. Happy is your Grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune

Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools, Being native burghers of this desert city, Should, in their own confines, with forked heads

Have their round haunches gor'd.

1 Lord. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques grieves at that: And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp

Than doth your brother that hath banish'd you.

'o-day my Lord of Amiens and myself Did steal behind him as he lay along

Under an oak whose antique root peeps out

Upon the brook that brawls along this wood!

To the which place a poor sequest'red stag.

That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt.

Did come to languish; and, indeed, my lord. The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat

Almost to bursting; and the big round tears

Cours'd one another down his innocent

In piteous chase; and thus the hairy fool. Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook.

Augmenting it with tears.

But what said Jaques? Duke S. Did he not moralize this spectacle? 1 Lord. O, yes, into a thousand similes.

First, for his weeping into the needless stream:

'Poor deer,' quoth he 'thou mak'st a testa-

As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more To that which had too much'. Then, being there alone.

Left and abandoned of his velvet friends: 'Tis right;' quoth he 'thus misery doth part

The flux of company'. Anon, a careless herd.

Full of the pasture, jumps along by him And never stays to greet him. 'Ay,' quoth 'Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens; 55 Tis just the fashion. Wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and there?

Thus most invectively he pierceth through Why would you be so fond to overcome The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life; swearing that Your praise is come too swiftly home before worse,

To fright the animals, and to kill them up In their assign'd and native dwelling-place. Duke S. And did you leave him in this contemplation? 2 Lord. We did, my lord, weeping and commenting Upon the sobbing deer.

Duke S. Show me the place; I love to cope him in these sullen fits, For then he's full of matter.

1 Lord. I'll bring you to him straight. 69 [Exeunt. Scene II. The Duke's palace.

Enter DUKE FREDERICK, with Lords.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them?

It cannot be; some villains of my court Are of consent and sufferance in this.

1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see

The ladies, her attendants of her chamber. Saw her abed, and in the morning early They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress.

2 Lord. My lord, the roynish clown, at whom so oft

Your Grace was wont to laugh, is also missing.

Hisperia, the Princess' gentlewoman, Confesses that she secretly o'erheard Your daughter and her cousin much commend

The parts and graces of the wrestler That did but lately foil the sinewy Charles: And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company, 16

Duke F. Send to his brother; fetch that gallant hither.

If he be absent, bring his brother to me: I'll make him find him. Do this suddenly; And let not search and inquisition quail 20 To bring again these foolish runaways.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. Before Oliver's house.

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM, meeting.

Orl. Who's there?

Adam. What, my young master? O my gentle master!

O my sweet master! O you memory Of old Sir Rowland! Why, what make you

Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you?

valiant?

The bonny prizer of the humorous Duke? you.

Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's Know you not, master, to some kind of men

> Their graces serve them but as enemies? No more do yours. Your virtues, gentle master,

> Are sanctified and holy traitors to you. O, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it! Orl. Why, what's the matter?

Adam. O unhappy youth! Come not within these doors; within this

The enemy of all your graces lives.

Your brother-no, no brother: vet the son_

Yet not the son: I will not call him son Of him I was about to call his father-Hath heard your praises; and this night he means To burn the lodging where you use to lie, At seventeen years many their fortunes And you within it. If he fail of that. He will have other means to cut you off; I overheard him and his practices. This is no place; this house is but a butchery;

Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.

Orl. Why, whither, adam, wouldst thou have me go?

Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.

Orl. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,

Or with a base and boist'rous sword enforce A thievish living on the common road? This I must do, or know not what to do; Yet this I will not do, do how I can. I rather will subject me to the malice Of a diverted blood and bloody brother.

Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred crowns,

The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father, Which I did store to be my foster-nurse, 40 When service should in my old limbs lie lame,

And unregarded age in corners thrown. Take that, and He that doth the ravens

Yea, providently caters for the sparrow, Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold; 45 All this I give you. Let me be your content. servant;

Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;

For in my youth I never did apply Hot and recellious liquors in my blood, Nor did not with unbashful forehead woo The means of weakness and debility; Therefore my age is as a lusty winter, Frosty, but kindly. Let me go with you; I'll do the service of a younger man In all your business and necessities.

Orl. O good old man, how well in thee appears

The constant service of the antique world. When service sweat for duty, not for meed! Thou art not for the fashion of these times, Where none will sweat but for promotion, And having that do choke their service up Even with the having; it is not so with thee

But, poor old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree

That cannot so much as a blossom vield In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry. But come thy ways, we'll go along together, And ere we have thy youthful wages spent | That ever love did make thee run into, We'll light upon some settled low content. Thou hast not lov'd;

But at fourscore it is too late a week; Yet fortune cannot recompense me better Than to die well and not my master's debtor. Exeunt.

Scene IV. The Forest of Arden.

Enter ROSALIND for GANYMEDE, CELIA for ALIENA, and Clown alias Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter, how weary are my spirits! Touch. I case not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.

Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man's apparel, and to cry like a woman: but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat; therefore, courage, good Aliena.

Cel. I pray you bear with me: I cannot go no further.

Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you than bear you; yet I should bear no cross if I did bear you; for I think you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the Forest of Arden. Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden; the more fool I; when I was at home I was in a better place; but travellers must be Enter Corin and Silvius.

Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone. Look you, who comes here, a young man and an old in solemn talk.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still.

Sil. O Corin, that thou knew'st how I do love her!

Cor. I partly guess; for I have lov'd ere now.

Sil. No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess. Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover As ever sigh'd upon a midnight pillow. But if thy love were ever like to mine,

As sure I think did never man love so. How many actions most ridiculous Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy?

Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.

Sil. O, thou didst then never love so beartily!

If thou rememb'rest not the slightest folly

Or if thou hast not sat as I do now, Wearing thy hearer in thy mistress' piaise, That you will feed on; but what is, come Thou hast not lov'd;

Or it thou hast not broke from company Abruptly, as my passion now makes me, Thou hast not lov'd.

O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe! [Exit Silvius. Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound.

I have by hard adventure found mine own Touch. And I mine. I remember, when I was in love, I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile; and I remember the kissing of her batler, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milk'd; and I remember the wooing of a peascod instead of her; from whom I took two cods, and. giving her them again, said with weeping tears 'Wear these for my sake'. We that are true lovers run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Ros. Thou speak'st wiser than thou art ware of.

Touch. Nay, I shall ne'er be ware of mine own wit till I break my shins against it. 55 Ros. Jove, Jove! this shepherd's passion

Is much upon my fashion. Touch. And mine; but it grows something stale with me. Cel. I pray you, one of you question yond

If he for gold will give us any food: I faint almost to death.

Touch. Holla, you clown!

Ros. Peace, fool; he's not thy kinsman. Cor. Who calls?

Touch. Your betters, sir.

Else are they very wretched. Cor. Ros. Peace, I say. Good even to you, friend.

Cor. And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.

Ros. I prithee, shepherd, if that love or gold

Can in this desert place buy entertainment, Bring us where we may rest ourselves and feed.

Here's a young maid with travel much oppress'd,

And faints for succour.

Fair sir, I pity her, And wish, for her sake more than for mine own.

My fortunes were more able to relieve her: But I am shepherd to another man,

And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. My master is of churlish disposition, By doing deeds of hospitality.

Besides, his cote, his flocks, and bounds of 78

34 By reason of his absence, there is nothing see.

And in my voice most welcome shall you be. Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?

Cor. That young swain that you saw here but elewhile.

That little cares for buying any thing. 85 Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty, Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock,

And thou shalt have to pay for it of us. Cel. And we will mend thy wages. I like this place,

And willingly could waste my time in it. 90 Cor. Assuredly the flang is to be sold. Go with me; it you like upon report The soil, the profit, and this kind of life, I will your very faithful feeder be. And buy it with your gold right suddenly. [Exeunt.

Scene V. Another part of the Forest.

Enter Amiens, Jaques, and Others.

Song.

Ami. Under the greenwood tree Who loves to lie with me. And turn his merry note Unto the sweet bird's throat,

Come hither, come hither, come hither. Here shall he see No enemy

But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more, I prithee, more. Ami. It will make you melancholy, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, I prithee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs. More, I prithee, more.

Ami. My voice is ragged; I know I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more; another stanzo. Call you 'em stanzos?

Amı. What you will, Monsieur Jaques. Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?

Ami. More at your request than to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliment is like th' encounter of two dog-apes; and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks I have given him a penny, and he renders me the beggarly thanks. And little recks to find the way to heaven sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I'll end the song. Sirs, cover the while; the Duke will drink under this Are now on sale; and at our sheepcote now, tree. He hath been all this day to look you. Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too disputable for my company. I think of as many matters as he; but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come. 33

Song.

All together here.

Who doth ambition shun, And loves to live i' th' sun, Seeking the food he eats, And pleas'd with what he gets,

Come hither, come hither, come hither.

Here shall he see

No enemy But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. I'll give you a verse to this note that I made yesterday in despite of my invention.

Ami. And I'll sing it. Jaq. Thus it goes:

If it do come to pass
That any man turn ass,
Leaving his wealth and ease
A stubborn will to please,
Ducdame, ducdame, ducdame;
Here shall he see

Gross fools as he, An if he will come to me.

Ami. What's that 'ducdame'?

Jaq. 'Tis a Greek invocation, to call fools into a circle. I'll go sleep, if I can; if I cannot, I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.

Ami. And I'll go seek the Duke; his banquet is prepar'd. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE VI. The forest.

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no further. O, I die for food! Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! No greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little. If this uncouth forest yield anything savage, I will either be food for it or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm's end. I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die; but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou look'st cheerly; and I'll be with thee quickly. Yet thou liest in the bleak air. Come, I will bear thee to some shelter; and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam!

SCENE VII. The forest.

A table set out. Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, and Lords, like outlaws.

Duke S. I think he be transform'd into a beast;

For I can nowhere find him like a man.

1 Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence;

Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical,

We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.

Go seek him; tell him I would speak with him.

Enter JAQUES.

1 Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.

Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this,

That your poor friends must woo your company?

What, you look merrily!

Jaq. A fool, a fool! I met a fool i' th' forest,

A motley fool. A miserable world! As I do live by food, I met a fool,

Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun,

And rail'd on Lady Fortune in good terms, In good set terms—and yet a motley fool. 'Good morrow, fool' quoth I; 'No, sir,' quoth he

'Call me not fool till heaven hath sent me fortune.'

And then he drew a dial from his poke, 20 And, looking on it with lack-lustre eye, Says very wisely 'It is ten o'clock;

Thus we may see' quoth he 'how the world wags;

'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine; 24 And after one hour more 'twill be eleven; And so, from hour to hour, we ripe and ripe, And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot; And thereby hangs a tale'. When I did hear The motley fool thus moral on the time, My lungs began to crow like chanticleer 30 That fools should be so deep contemplative; And I did laugh sans intermission

An hour by his dial. O noble fool! A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.

Duke S. What fool is this?

Jaq. O worthy fool! One that hath been a courtier,

And says, if ladies be but young and fair, They have the gift to know it; and in his brain,

Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit
After a voyage, he hath strange places cramm'd 40

g in this With observation, the which he vents [Exeunt. In mangled forms. O that I were a fool!

I am ambitious for a motley coat. Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

It is my only suit, Jaa. Provided that you weed your better judgments

Of all opinion that grows rank in them That I am wise. I must have liberty Withal, as large a charter as the wind, To blow on whom I please, for so fools have; And they that are most galled with my folly. 50 They most must laugh. And why, sir, must they so? The why is plain as way to parish church: He that a fool doth very wisely hit Doth very foolishly, although he smart, Not to seem senseless of the bob; if not, 55 The wise man's folly is anatomiz'd Even by the squand'ring glances of the fool. Invest me in my motley; give me leave To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of th' intected world, If they will patiently receive my medicine. Duke S. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.

Jaq. What, for a counter, would I do but good?

Duke S. Most mischievous foul sin, in I thought that all things had been savage chiding sin;

For thou thyself hast been a libertine, As sensual as the brutish sting itself; And all th' embossed sores and headed evils

That thou with licence of free foot hast caught

Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

Jag. Why, who cries out on pride That can therein tax any private party? Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea, Till that the wearer's very means do ebb? What woman in the city do I name When that I say the city-woman bears 75 The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders? Who can come in and say that I mean her, When such a one as she such is her neighbour?

Or what is he of basest function

That says his bravery is not on my cost, 80 Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits His folly to the mettle of my speech? There then! how then? what then? Let me see wherein right.

Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free.

Why then my taxing like a wild-goose flies Unclaim'd of any man. But who comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn. Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jag. Why, I have eat none vec. Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be serv'd. of?

Duke S. Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress?

Or else a rude despiser of good manners, That in civility thou seem'st so empty?

Orl. You touch'd my vein at first: the thorny point

Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show

Of smooth civility: yet am I inland bred. And know some nurture. But forbear, I say;

He dies that touches any of this fruit Till I and my affairs are answered.

Jaq. An you will not be answer'd with reason, I must die. TOT

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall force

More than your force move us to gentleness. Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you;

here.

And therefore put I on the countenance Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are

That in this desert inaccessible. Under the shade of melancholy boughs, Lose and neglect the creeping hours of

If ever you have look'd on better days If ever been where belis have knoll'd to church.

If ever sat at any good man's feast, If ever from your eyelids wip'd a tear, And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied, Let gentleness my strong enforcement be; In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

Duke S. True is it that we have seen better days

And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church,

And sat at good men's feasts, and wip'd our eyes

Of drops that sacred pity hath engend'red; And therefore sit you down in gentleness, My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him And take upon command what help we have

That to your wanting may be minist'red. Orl. Then but forbear your food a little while,

Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn, And give it food. There is an old poor

Who after me hath many a weary step 130 Limp'd in pure love; till he be first suffic'd,

265

Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger, I will not touch a bit. Duke S Go find him out. And we will nothing waste till you return. Orl. I thank ye; and be blest for your good comfort! [Exit. Duke S. Thou seest we are not all alone unhappy: This wide and universal theatre

Presents more woeful pageants than the scene 135

Wherein we play in.

Jag. All the world's a stage. And all the men and women merely players; They have their exits and their entrances: And one man in his time plays many parts, His acts being seven ages. At first the infant.

Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms; Then the whining school-boy, with his satchel

And shining morning face, creeping like

Unwillingly to school. And then the lover, Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Then a soldier.

Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,

Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel.

Seeking the bubble reputation

Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice.

In fair round belly with good capon lin'd, With eyes severe and beard of formal cut, Full of wise saws and modern instances; 156 And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon, With spectacles on nose and pouch on side.

His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too

For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice.

Turning again toward childish treble, pipes And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all, That ends this strange eventful history, Is second childishness and mere oblivion; Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

Re-enter ORLANDO with ADAM.

Duke S. Welcome. Set down your venerable burden. And let him feed.

Orl. I thank you most for him.

Adam. So had you need: I scarce can speak to thank you for myself. Duke S. Welcome; fall to. I will not trouble you

As yet to question you about your fortunes. Give us some music; and, good cousin,

Song.

Blow, blow, thou winter wind, Thou art not so unkind エクミ As man's ingratitude;

Thy tooth is not so keen, Because thou art not seen, Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh-ho! sing heigh-ho! unto the green holly. Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly.

Then, heigh-ho, the holly! This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky. That dost not bite so nigh 185 As benefits forgot; Though thou the waters warp. Thy sting is not so shaip

As friend rememb'red not. Heigh-ho! sing, &c.

190 Duke S. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son.

As you have whisper'd faithfully you were. And as mine eye doth his efficies witness Most truly hmn'd and hving in your face, Be truly welcome hither. I am the Duke That lov'd your father. The residue of your fortune.

Go to my cave and tell me. Good old man, Thou art right welcome as thy master is. Support him by the arm. Give me your hand.

And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exeunt.

ACT THREE

Scene I. The palace.

Enter DUKE FREDERICK, OLIVER, and Lords.

Duke F. Not see him since! Sir. sir. that cannot be.

But were I not the better part made mercy, I should not seek an absent argument Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:

Find out thy brother wheresoe'er he is; 5 Seek him with candle; bring him dead or living

Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more

To seek a living in our territory. Thy lands and all things that thou dost call

Worth seizure do we seize into our hands. Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth Of what we think against thee.

Oli. O that your Highness knew my heart in this!

I never lov'd my brother in my life. Duke F. More villain thou. Well, push him out of doors;

And let my officers of such a nature Make an extent upon his house and parlous state, shepherd, lands.

Do this expediently, and turn him going, Exeunt.

SCENE II. The forest.

Enter ORLANDO, with a baber.

Orl. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love;

And thou, thrice-crowned Queen of Night. survey

With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,

Thy huntress' name that my full life doth

O Rosalind ! these trees shall be my books, And in their barks my thoughts I'll character.

That every eye which in this forest looks Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.

Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree, 9 The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter CORIN and TOUCHSTONE.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, Master Touchstone?

is a shepherd's life, it is nought. In respect, shepherd. that it is solitary, I like it very well: but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes Hast any much against my stomach. philosophy in thee, shepherd?

Cor. No more but that I know the more one sickens the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means, and content, is without three good friends; that the property of rain is to wet, and fire to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep; and that a great cause of the night is lack of the sun; that he that hath learned no wit by nature nor art may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wast ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damn'd.

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Touch. Truly, thou art damn'd, like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side. Your

Cor. For not being at court? reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court thou never saw'st good manners; if thou never saw'st good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a Cor. Nor a whit, Touchstone. Those that are good manners at the court are es naiculous in the country as the benaviour of the country is most mockable at the You told me you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands; that courtesy would be uncleanly if courtiers were shenherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance. Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes; and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? And is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, I say;

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard. Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner. Shallow again. A more sounder instance; come.

Cor. And they are often tarr'd over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfum'd with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! thou worm's meat in respect of a good piece of flesn indeed! Learn of the wise, and perpend: Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of creet is of a baser birth than tar—the very itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it uncleanly flux of a cat. Mend the instance,

Cor. You have too courtly a wit for me; l'il rest.

Touch. Wilt thou rest damn'd? God help thee, shallow man! God make incision in thee! thou art raw.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer: I earn that I cat, get that I wear; owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my harm; and the greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze and my lambs suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you: to bring the ewes and the rams together, and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle; to be bawd to a bell-wether, and to betray a she-lamb of a twelvemonth to a crooked-pated, old, cuckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou beest not damn'd for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Cor. Here comes young Master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter ROSALIND, reading a paper.

'From the east to western Inde, Ros. No jewel is like Rosalinde. Her worth, being mounted on the wind, Through all the world bears Rosalinde. All the pictures fairest lin'd

Are but black to Rosalinde. Let no face be kept in mind But the fair of Rosalinde.'

Touch. I'll rhyme you so eight years together, dinners, and suppers, and sleeping hours, excepted. It is the right butterwomen's rank to market.

Ros. Out, fool! Touch. For a taste:

> If a hart do lack a hind, Let him seek out Rosalinde. If the cat will after kind, So be sure will Rosalinde. Winter garments must be lin'd, So must slender Rosalinde. They that reap must sheaf and bind, Then to cart with Rosalinde. Sweetest nut hath sourest rind. Such a nut is Rosalinde. He that sweetest rose will find Must find love's prick and Rosalinde.

This is the very false gallop of verses; why do you infect yourself with them? Ros. Peace, you dull fool! I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bac fruit. Ros. I'll graff it with you, and then I shall graff it with a medlar. Then it will be the carliest fruit i' th' country; for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter CELIA, with a writing.

Ros. Peace !

Here comes my sister, reading;

aside. Cel. 'Why should this a desert be? For it is unpeopled? No: Tongues I'll hang on every tree That shall civil sayings show. Some, how brief the life of man Runs his erring pilgrimage, That the stretching of a span Buckles in his sum of age; Some, of violated vows Twixt the souls of friend and friend : But upon the fairest boughs, Or at every sentence end, Will I Rosalinda write Teaching all that read to know

The quintessence of every sprite Heaven would in little show. Therefore heaven Nature charg'd

That one body should be fill'd With all graces wide-enlarg'd. Nature presently distill'd Helen's cheek, but not her heart, 135

Cleopatra's majesty,

Atalanta's better part, Sad Lucretia's modesty Thus Rosalinde of many parts By heavenly synod was devis'd, Of many faces, eyes, and hearts, To have the touches dearest priz'd. Heaven would that she these gifts should have. And I to live and die her slave,' 144

Ros. O most gentle pulpiter! tedious homily of love have you wearled your parishioners withal, and never cried Have patience, good people '.

Cel. How now! Back, friends; shepherd, go off a little; go with him, sirrah. Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage. IExeunt Corin and Touchstone.

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses? Ros. O, yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Cel. That's no matter; the feet might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering how thy name should be hang'd and carved upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder before you came; for look here what I found on a palm-tree. I was never so berhym'd since Pythagoras' time that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember. 165

Cel. Trow you who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?

Cel. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck. Change you colour?

Ros. I prithee, who?

Cel. O Lord, Lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be remov'd with earthquakes, and so encounter.

Ros. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it possible? 175 Ros. Nay, I prithee now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful, and yet again wonderful, and after that, out of all whooping!

Ros. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a South Sea of discovery. I prithee tell me who is it quickly, and speak apace. I would thou couldst stammer, that thou mightst pour this conceal'd man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narro v-mouth'd bottle-either too much at once or none at good faith, I had as hef have been myself all. I prithee take the cork out of thy mouth that I may drink thy tidings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly. Ros. Is he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard. 103

Ros. Why, God will send more if the man will be thankful. Let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando, that tripp'd up the wrestler's heels and your heart both in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking! Speak sad brow and true maid.

Cel. I' faith, coz, 'tis he.

Ros. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Ros. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doublet and hose? What did he when thou saw'st him? What said he? How Wherein went he? What re? Did he ask for me? look'd he? makes he here? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? And when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first; 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say ay and no to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?

Cel. It is as easy to count atomies as to resolve the propositions of a lover; but take a taste of my finding him, and relish I found him it with good observance. under a tree, like a dropp'd acorn. 220

Ros. It may well be call'd Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit. Cel. Give me audience, good madam.

Ros. Proceed. Cel. There lay he, stretch'd along like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry 'Holla' to thy tongue, prithee; it curvets unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.

Ros. O, ominous! he comes to kill my heart.

Cel. I would sing my song without a burden; thou bring'st me out of tune. Ros. Do you not know I am a woman?

When I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on. Cel. You bring me out. Soft! comes he not here?

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Ros. 'Tis he; slink by, and note him. Jaq. I thank you for your company; but, Had not that been as proper?

alone.

Orl. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society. 24: Jag God buy you; let's meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do desire we may be better strangers.

Jaq. I pray you mar no more trees with writing love songs in their barks. Orl. I pray you mar no moe of my verses with reading them ill-favouredly.

Jag. Rosalind is your love's name?

Orl. Yes, just.

Jaq. I do not like her name. Orl. There was no thought of pleasing you when she was christen'd.

Jag. What stature is she of?

Orl. Just as high as my heart. 254 Jag. You are full of pretty answers. Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and conn'd them out of rings?

Orl. Not so; but I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.

Jaq. You have a nimble wit; I think 'twas made of Atalanta's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will rail against our mistress the world, and all our misery

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world but myself, against whom I know most faults.

Jag. The worst fault you have is to be in love.

Orl. 'Tis a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.

Jag. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool when I found you.

Orl. He is drown'd in the brook; look but in, and you shall see him.

Jaq. There I shall see mine own figure. Orl. Which I take to be either a fool or a cipher. Jag. I'll tarry no longer with you; farewell, good Signior Love.

Orl. I am glad of your departure; adieu, good Monsieur Melancholy.

[Exit Jaques. Ros. [Aside to Celia] I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit play the knave with him.-Do you hear, forester?

Orl. Very well: what would you?

Ros. I pray you, what is't o'clock? Orl. You should ask me what time o' day:

there's no clock in the forest. 284 Ros. Then there is no true lover in the forest, else sighing every minute and groaning every hour would detect the lazy foot of Time as well as a clock.

Orl. And why not the swift foot of Time? 289 Ros. By no means, sir. Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.

Orl. I prithee, who doth he trot withal? Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemniz'd; if the interim be but a se'nnight, Time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven year.

Orl. Who ambles Time withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin and a rich man that hath not the gout; for the one sleeps easily because he cannot study, and the other lives merrily because he feels no pain; the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful learning, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury. These Time ambles withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows; for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.

Orl. Who stays it still withal?

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and teim, and then they perceive not how Time moves.

then they perceive not how Time moves. Orl. Where dwell you, pretty youth? Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like ninge upon a petitionat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Ros. As the coney that you see dwell where she is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many; but indeed an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard h m read many lectures against it; and I thank God I am not a woman, to be touch'd with so many giddy offences as he hath generally tax'd their whole sex withal.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal; they were all like one another as halfpence are; every one fault seeming monstrous till his fellow-fault came to match it.

Orl. I prithee recount some of them.

Ros. No; I will not cast away my physic but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest that abuses our young plants with carving 'Rosalind' on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is so love-shak'd; I pray you tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you; he taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes I am sure you are not prisoner.

Orl. What were his marks?

Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not; a blue eye and sunken, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not; but I pardon you for that, for simply your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue. Then your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbutton'd, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a carcless desolation. But you are no such man; you are rather point-device in your accountrements, as loving yourself than seeming the lover of any other.

Out Pair worth I would I could reals.

Orl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it! You may as soon make her that you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do than to confess she does. That is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that untortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

Oil. Neither hyme nor reason can express how much.

Ros. Love is merely a madness; and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punish'd and cured is that the lunacy is so ordinary that the whippers are in love too. Yet I profess curing it by counsel.

Orl. Did you ever cure any so? Ros. Yes, one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me; at which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing and liking, proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something and for no passion truly anything, as boys and women are for the most part cattle of this colour; would now like him, now loathe him; then entertain him, then forswear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; that I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world and to live in a nook merely monastic. And thus I cur'd him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver But be it as it may be, I will marry thee: as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in 't.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth. Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me Rosalind, and come every day to my cote and woo me.

Orl. Now, by the faith of my love, I will.

Tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll show it you; and, by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth. 397 Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind. Come, sister, will you go? [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques behind.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey: I will fetch up your goats, Audrey. And how, Audrey, am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

Aud. Your features! Lord warrant us!

What features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Jaq. [Aside] O knowledge ill-inhabited. worse than Jove in a thatch'd house!

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what 'poetical' is. Is it honest in deed and word? Is it a true Touch. No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning, and lovers are given to poetry; and what they swear in poetry may be said as lovers they do feign.

Aud. Do you wish, then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly, for thou swear'st to me thou ait honest; now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst

Aud. Would you not have me honest? Touch. No, truly, unless thou wert hardfavour'd; for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Jaq. [Aside] A material fool! Aud. Well, I am not fair; and therefore I pray the gods make me honest.

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness; sluttishness may come hereafter.

and to that end I have been with Sir Oliver Maitext, the vicar of the next village, who hath promis'd to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us.

Jag. [Aside] I would fain see this meeting.

Aud. Well, the gods give us joy!

Touch. Amen. A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said: 'Many a man knows no end of his goods'. Right! Many a man has good horns and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even so. Poor men alone? no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No; as a wall'd town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want. Here comes Sir Oliver.

Enter SIR OLIVER MARTEXT.

Sir Oliver Martext, you are well met. Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any

Sir Oli. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [Discovering himself] Proceed, proceed; I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good Master What-yecall't; how do you, sir? You are very well met. Goddild you for your last company. I am very glad to see you. Even a toy in hand here, sir. Nay; pray be cover'd. Jag. Will you be married, motley?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is; this fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and like green timber warp, warp.

Touch. [Aside] I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another; for he is not like to marry me well; and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

thee.

Touch, Come, sweet Audrey:

We must be married or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good Master Olivei. Not-

O sweet Oliver. O brave Oliver,

Leave me not behind thee.

But-

Wind away. Begone, I say,

I will not to wedding with thee.

[Exeunt Jaques, Touchstone, and Audrey. Sir Oli. 'Tis no matter; ne'er a fantastical knave of them all shall flout me out of my calling. (Exit.

SCENE IV. The forest.

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

Ros. Never talk to me; I will weep. Cel. Do, I prithee; but yet have the grace to consider that tears do not become a man.

Ros. But have I not cause to weep? Cel. As good cause as one would desire; therefore weep.

Ros. His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Cel. Something browner than Judas's. Marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

Ros. I'faith, his hair is of a good coloui. Cel. An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Ros. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.

Cel. He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana. A nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of cliastity is in them.

Ros. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.

Ros. Do you think so?

Cel. Yes; I think he is not a pick-purse nor a horse-stealer; but for his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet or a worm-eaten nut.

Ros. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in; but I think he is not in.

Ros. You have heard him swear downright he was.

Cel. 'Was' is not' is'; besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the contirmer of false reckonings. He attends here in the forest on the Duke, your father.

Ros. I met the Duke yesterday, and had much question with him. He asked me of Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel what parentage I was; I told him, of as good as he; so he laugh'd and let me go. But what talk we of fathers when there is such a man as Orlando?

> Cel. O. that's a brave man! He writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover; as a puny tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. But all's brave that youth mounts and folly guides. Who comes here?

> > Enter CORIN.

Cor. Mistress and master, you have oft engüired

After the shepherd that complain'd of love,

Who you saw sitting by me on the turf, Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess That was his mistress.

Well, and what of him? Cel. Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd

Between the pale complexion of true love And the red glow of scorn and proud

Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you. If you will mark it.

O, come, let us remove! Ros. The sight of lovers feedeth those in love. Bring us to this sight, and you shall say I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exeunt.

Scene V. Another part of the forest.

Enter SILVIUS and PHEBE.

Sil. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe.

Say that you love me not; but say not so In bitterness. The common executioner, Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard.

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck 5 But first begs pardon. Will you sterner be Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalino, Celia, and Corin, at a distance.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner: I fly thee, for I would not injure thee. Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eye. 'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable, That eyes, that are the fiail'st and softest things,

Who shut their coward gates on atomies, Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!

Now I do frown on thee with all my heart; And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee.

Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down;

Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for Cry the man mercy, love him, take his shame.

Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers. in thee.

Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains

Some scar of it; lean upon a rush,

The cicatrice and capable impressure

Thy palm some moment keeps: but now mine eyes,

Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee

Nor, I am sure, there is not force in eyes That can do hurt.

O dear Phebe. If ever-as that ever may be near-

You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy.

Then shall you know the wounds invisible That love's keen arrows make. Phe. But till that time

Come not thou near me; and when that time comes.

Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not; As till that time I shall not pity thee.

Ros. [Advancing] And why, I pray you? Who might be your mother, That you insult, exult, and all at once,

Over the wretched? What though you have no beauty-

As, by my faith, I see no more in you Than without candle may go dark to bed-Must you be therefore proud and pitiless? Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?

I see no more in you than in the ordinary Of nature's sale-work. 'Od's my little life. I think she means to tangle my eyes too! No, faith, proud mistress, hope not after it; 'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,

That can entame my spirits to your worship.

You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,

Like foggy south, puffing with wind and rain?

You are a thousand times a properer man Than she a woman. 'Tis such fools as you That makes the world full of ill-favour'd children.

'Tis not her glass, but you, that flatters her; And out of you she sees herself more proper Than any of her lineaments can show her. But, mistress, know yourself. Down on your knees.

And thank heaven, fasting, for a good man's

For I must tell you friendly in your ear: Sell when you can; you are not for all markets.

offer:

Foul is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer. Now show the wound mine eye hath made So take her to thee, shepherd. Fare you

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a year together:

I had rather hear you chide than this man WOO.

Ros. He's fall'n in love with your fcelness, and she'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll sauce her with bitter words. Why look you so upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I bear you. Ros. I pray you do not fall in love with me.

For I am falser than vows made in wine; Besides, I like you not. If you will know my house,

'Tis at the tuft of olives here hard by. Will you go, sister? Shepherd, ply her hard. Come. sister. Shepherdess, look on him better.

And be not proud; though all the world could see,

None could be so abus'd in sight as he. Come, to our flock.

Exeunt Rosalind, Celia, and Corin. Phe. Dead shepherd, now I find thy saw of might: 'Who ever lov'd that lov'd not at first sight?

Sil. Sweet Phebe.

Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius? Sil. Sweet Phebe, pity me.

Phe. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius. Sil. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be.

If you do sorrow at my grief in love, By giving love, your sorrow and my grief Were both extermin'd.

Phe. Thou hast my love; is not that neighbourly?

Sil. I would have you. Why, that were covetousness. Phe. Silvius, the time was that I hated thee; And yet it is not that I bear thee love;

But since that thou canst talk of love so well,

Thy company, which erst was irksome to me.

I will endure; and I'll employ thee too. But do not look for further recompense 96 Than thine own gladness that thou art employ'd.

Sil. So holy and so perfect is my love, And I in such a poverty of grace, That I shall think it a most plenteous crop To glean the broken ears after the man That the main harvest reaps; loose now and

A scatt'red smile, and that I'll live upon.

Phe. Know'st thou the youth that moke to me erewhile?

Sil. Not very well: but I have met him oft:

And he hath bought the cottage and the bounds

That the old carlot once was master of. Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him; "Tis but a peevish boy; yet he talks well. But what care I for words? Yet words do well

When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.

It is a pie++v youth-not very pretty: But, sure, he's proud; and yet his pride becomes him.

He'll make a proper man. The best thing in him

Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue

Did make offence, his eye did heal it up. He is not very tall; yet for his years he's

His leg is but so-so; and yet 'tis well. There was a pretty redness in his lip, A little riper and more lusty red Than that mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the difference

Betwixt the constant red and mingled damask.

There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him

In parcels as I did, would have gone near To fall in love with him; but, for my part, I love him not, nor hate him not; and yet I have more cause to hate him than to love him:

For what had he to do to chide at me? He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black.

And, now I am rememb'red, scorn'd at me. I marvel why I answer'd not again; But that's all one: omittance is no quittance.

I'll write to him a very taunting letter, And thou shalt bear it; wilt thou, Silvius?

Sil. Phebe, with all my heart.

I'll write it straight; The matter's in my head and in my heart; I will be bitter with him and passing short. Go with me. Silvius. Exeunt.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. The forest.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I prithee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say you are a melancholy laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.

Jad. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post. Jag. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's. which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels; in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad. I fear you have sold your own lands to see other men's; then to have seen much and to have nothing is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jag. Yes, I have gain'd my experience.

Enter ORLANDO.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad. I had rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad-and to travel for it too.

Good day, and happiness, dear Oil. Rosalind!

Jag. Nay, then, God buy you, an you talk in blank verse.

Ros. Farewell, Monsieur Traveller; look you lisp and wear strange suits, disable all the benefits of your own country, be out of love with your nativity, and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola. [Exit Jaques] Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover! An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of the thousand part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapp'd him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him heartwhole.

Orl. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight. I had as lief be woo'd of a snail.

Orl. Of a snail!

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than slowly, he carries his house on his head—a 4 better jointure, I think, than you make a woman; besides, he brings his destiny with him.

105

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beholding to your wives for; but he comes armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Cel. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me; for now I am in a holiday humour, and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, an I were your very very Rosalind?

Oil. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravell'd for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers lacking-God warn us !- matter, the cleanliest shift is to

Orl. How if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress; or I should think my honesty ranker than my wit.

Orl. What, of my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person, I say I will not have you.

Orl. Then, in mine own person, I die. 8. Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, videlicet, in a love-cause. Troilus had his brains dash'd out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have liv'd many a fair year, though Here had turn'd nun. if it had not been for a hot midsummernight; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drown'd; and the foolish chroniclers of that age found it was—Hero of Sestos. But these are all lies: men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind; for, I project, her frown might kill me.

But come, now I will be your Ro alind in a more coming-on disposition; and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me, Rosalind.

Ros. Yes, faith, will I, Fridays and Saturdays, and all.

Orl. And will thou have me? Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Orl. What sayest thou ? Ros. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so.

Ros. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing? Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us. Give me your hand, Orlando. What do you say, sister?

Orl. Pray thee, marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin 'Will you, Orlando '-

Cel. Go to. Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind? Orl. I will.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Orl. Why, now; as fast as she can marry

Ros. Then you must say 'I take thee, Rosalind, for wife'.

Orl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife. Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but—I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband. There's a girl goes before the priest; and, certainly, a woman's thought tuns before her actions. Orl. So do all thoughts; they are wing'd. Ros. Now tell me how long you would have her, after you have possess'd her.

Orl. For ever and a day. Ros. Say 'a day' without the 'ever'. No, no, Orlando; men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cockpigeon over his hen, more clamorous than a parrot against rain, more newfangled than an ape, more giddy in my desires than a monkey. I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are dispos'd to be merry; I will laugh like a hven, and that when thou art inclin'd to sleep.

Orl. But will my Rosalind do so? Ros. By my life, she will do as I do.

Orl. O, but she is wise.

Ros. Or else she could not have the wit to do this. The wiser, the waywarder. Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say 'Wit, whither wilt?'

Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly. it, till you met your wife's wil going to your neighbour's bed.

Orl. And what wit could wit have to 100 excuse that?

17

Ros. Marry, to say she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool!

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind. I will leave thee.

Ros. Alas, dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours!

Orl. I must attend the Duke at dinner; by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways. I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less. That flattering tongue of yours won me. 'Tis but one cast away, and so, come death! Two o'clock is your hour?

Orl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pathetical break-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Therefore beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Orl. With no less religion than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind; so, adieu.

Ros. Well, Time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let Time try. Adieu. Exit Orlando.

Cel. You have simply misus'd our sex in your love-prate. We must have your doublet and hose pluck'd over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Ros. O coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how many fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded; my affection hath an unknown bottom, like the Bay of Portugal. Cel. Or rather, bottomless; that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out. Ros. No; that same wicked bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceiv'd of spleen, and born of madness; that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes, because his own are out-let him be judge how deep I am in love. I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando. I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come. 195

Cel. And I'll sleep.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The forest.

Enter JAQUES and Lords, in the habit of foresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer? 276

Lord. Sir, it was I.

Jag. Let's present him to the Duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head for a branch of victory. Have you no song, forester, for this purpose?

Lord. Yes, sir.

Jaq. Sing it; 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

Song.

What shall he have that kill'd the deer ? 10 His leather skin and horns to wear,

> [The rest shall bear this burden: Then sing him home.

Take thou no scorn to wear the horn:

It was a crest ere thou wast born. Thy father's father wore it: And thy father bore it.

The horn, the horn, the lusty horn, Is not a thing to laugh to scorn. [Exeunt.

Scene III. The forest.

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

Ros. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? And here much Orlando! Cel. I warrant you, with pure love and troubled brain, he hath ta'en his bow and arrows, and is gone forth—to sleep. Look. who comes here.

Enter SILVIUS.

Sil. My errand is to you, fair youth; My gentle Phebe did bid me give you this. I know not the contents; but, as I guess By the stern brow and waspish action Which she did use as she was writing of it. It bears an angry tenour. Pardon me, I am but as a guiltless messenger.

Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter,

And play the swaggerer. Bear this, bear all She says I am not fair, that I lack manners; She calls me proud, and that she could not love me,

Were man as rare as Phœnix. 'Od's my will!

Her love is not the hare that I do hunt; Why writes she so to me? Well, shepherd. well.

This is a letter of your own device. Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents: Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a fool, And turn'd into the extremity of love. I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand A freestone-colour'd hand; I verily did think

That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands:

She has a huswife's hand—but that's no a word; for here comes more company. 73 matter. Exit Silvius.

I say she never did invent this letter: This is a man's invention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure, it is hers.

Ros. Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style;

A style for challengers. Why, she defies me, Like Turk to Christian. Women's gentle brain Could not drop forth such giant-jude invention, Such Ethiope words, blacker in their effect

Than in their countenance. Will you hear the letter?

Sil. So please you, for I never heard it vet;

Yet heard too much of Phebe's crucity. Ros. She Phebes me: mark how the [Reads. tyrant writes.

'Art thou god to shepherd turn'd, 40 That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?'

Can a woman rail thus?

Sil. Call you this railing? Ros. 'Why, thy godhead laid apart, War'st thou with a woman's heart?'

Did you ever hear such railing?

'Whiles the eye of man did woo me, That could do no vengeance to me.

Meaning me a beast.

'If the scorn of your bright eyne 50 Have power to raise such love in mine.

Alack, in me what strange effect Would they work in mild aspect! Whiles you chid me, I did love; How then might your prayers move!

He that brings this love to thee Little knows this love in me; And by him seal up thy mind Whether that thy youth and kind Will the faithful offer take Of me and all that I can make; Or else by him my love deny, And then I'll study how to die.

Sil. Call you this chiding? Cel. Alas, poor shepherd!

Ros. Do you pity him? No, he deserves no pity. Wilt thou love such a woman? What, to make thee an instrument, and play false strains upon thee! Not to be endur'd! Well, go your way to her, for I see love hath made thee a tame snake, and say this to her—that if she love me, I charge her to love thee; if she will not, I will never have her unless thou entreat for Into a bush; under which bush's shade her. If you be a true lover, hence, and not A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,

Enter OLIVER.

Oli. Good morrow, fair ones; pray you, if you know.

Where in the purlieus of this forest stands A sheep-cote fenc'd about with olive trees? Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom. The rank of osiers by the murmuring stream

Left on your right hand brings you to the place.

But at this hour the house doth keep itself: There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,

Then should I know you by description— Such garments, and such years: The boy is fair.

Of female favour, and bestows himself 85 Like a ripe sister; the woman low, And browner than her brother'. Are not

The owner of the house I did inquire for?

Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say we are. Oli. Orlando doth command him to you both: And to that youth he calls his Rosalind

He sends this bloody napkin. Are you he? Ros. I am. What must we understand by

Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know

What man I am, and how, and why, and where. This handkercher was stain'd.

I pray you, tell it. Cel. Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you, He left a promise to return again

Within an hour; and, pacing through the forest.

Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy, Lo, what befell! He threw his eye aside, And mark what object did present itself. Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,

And high top bald with dry antiquity. A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with 105 hair, 65 Lay sleeping on his back. About his neck A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself. Who with her head nimble in threats approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly, Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself, And with indented glides did slip away

Lay couching, head on ground, with catlike watch.

When that the sleeping man should stir: for 'tis The royal disposition of that beast

To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead. This seen, Orlando did approach the man,

And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

Cel. O, I have heard him speak of that same brother;

And he did render him the most unnatural That liv'd amongst men.

And well he might so do, For well I know he was unnatural.

Ros. But, to Orlando: did he leave him there.

Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness? Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purpos'd so;

But kindness, nobler ever than revenge, And nature, stronger than his just occasion. Made him give battle to the lioness, Who quickly fell before him; in which hurtling

From miserable slumber I awak'd.

Cel. Are you his brother?

Was't you he rescu'd? Cel. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?

shame

To tell you what I was, since my conversion

So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am. Ros. But for the bloody napkin?

Oli. By and by. When from the first to last, betwixt us two. Tears our recountments had most kindly bath'd,

As how I came into that desert place- 140 In brief, he led me to the gentle Duke, Who gave me fresh array and entertainment.

Committing me unto my brother's love; Who led me instantly unto his cave, There stripp'd himself, and here upon his arm

The lioness had torn some flesh away, Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted.

And cried, in fainting, upon Rosalind. Brief, I recover'd him, bound up his wound, And after some small space, being strong at heart, He sent me hither, stranger as I am, To tell this story, that you might excuse His broken promise, and to give t is napkin.

Dy'd in his blood, unto the shepherd youth That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

[Rosalind swoons. Cel. Why, how now, Ganymede! sweet Ganvmede!

Oli. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.

Cel. There is more in it. Cousin Ganvmede!

Oli. Look, he recovers.

Ros. I would I were at home.

We'll lead you thither. 160 Cel. I pray you, will you take him by the arm ? Oli. Be of good cheer, youth. You a man! You lack a man's heart.

Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah, a body would think this was well counteifeited. I pray you tell your brother how well I counterfeited. Heigh-ho!

Oli. This was not counterfeit: there is too great testimony in your complexion that it was a passion of earnest.

Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.

Oli. Well then, take a good heart and counterfeit to be a man. Ros. So I do; but, i' faith, I should have been a woman by right.

Cel. Come, you look paler and paler; pray you draw homewards. Good sir, go with us. 175

Oli. That will I, for I must bear answer

How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall devise something; but, I kill him? pray you, commend my counterfeiting to Oii. 'Twas I; but 'tis not I. I do not him. Will you go? [Exeunt.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey: patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked Sir Oliver, Audrey. a most vile Martext. But, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis; he hath no interest in me in the world; here comes the man you mean.

Enter WILLIAM.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown. By my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for: we shall be flouting; we cannot hold.

Will. Good ev'n, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good ev'n, William.

Will. And good ev'n to you, sir. Touch. Good ev'n, gentle friend. thy head, cover thy head; nay, prithee be cover'd. How old are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age. Is thy name William? Will. William, sir. Touch. A fair name. Wast born i' th' forest here?

Art uch?

Will. Faith, sir, so so.

Touch. 'So so' is good, very good, very excellent good; and yet it is not; it is but so so. Art thou wise?

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying: 'The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool'. The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth: -meaning thereby that grapes were made to eat and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

Touch. Then learn this of me: to have is to have; for it is a figure in rhetoric that drink, being pour'd out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other; for all your writers do consent that ipse is he; now, you are not ipse, for I

Will. Which he, sir?

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman. Therefore, you clown, abandon which is in the vulgar leave-the societywhich in the boorish is company-of this female-which in the common is womanwhich together is: abandon the society of this female; or, clown, thou perishest; or, to thy better understanding, diest; or, to wit. I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage. I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel; I will bandy with thee in faction; I will o'er-run thee with policy; I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways; therefore tremble, and depart.

Aud. Do, good William.

Will. God 1est you merry, sir. [Exit.

Enter CORIN.

Cor. Our master and mistress seeks you; come away, away.

Touch. Trip, Audrey, trip, Audrey. attend. I attend. [Exeunt.

Scene II. The forest.

Enter ORLANDO and OLIVER.

acquaintance you should like her? that but seeing you should love her? and loving woo? and, wooing, she should grant? and will you persever to enjoy her?

Oli. Neither call the giddiness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small measure draw a belief from you, to do acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her yourself good, and not to grace me. Be-

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God. sudden consenting; but say with me, I Touch. 'Thank God.' A good answer. love Aliena; say with her that she loves ine; consent with both that we may enjoy each other. It shall be to your good; for my father's house and all the revenue that was old Sir Rowland's will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd. II

Orl. You have my consent. Let your wedding be to-morrow. Thither will I invite the Duke and all's contented followers. Go you and prepare Aliena; for, look you.

here comes my Rosalind.

Enter ROSALIND.

Ros. God save you, brother.

Oli. And you, fair sister. [Exit. Ros. O, my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf!

Orl. It is my arm. Ros. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a ladv.

Ros. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon when he show'd me your handkercher.

Orl. Ay, and greater wonders than that. Ros. O, I know where you are. Nay, 'tis true. There was never any thing so sudden but the fight of two rams and Cæsar's thrasonical brag of 'I came, saw, and overcame'. For your brother and my sister no sooner met but they look'd; no sooner look'd but they lov'd: no sooner lov'd but they sigh'd: no sooner sigh'd but they ask'd one another the reason; no sooner knew the reason but they sought the remedy-and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. They are in the very wrath of love, and they will together. Clubs cannot part them. 39

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow: and I will bid the Duke to the nuptial. But, O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

Ros. Why, then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking. Ros. I will weary you, then, no longer with idle talking. Know of me then—for Orl. Is't possible that on so little now I speak to some purpose—that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit. I speak not this that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch I say I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little lieve then, if you please, that I can do strange things. I have, since I was three year old, convers'd with a magician, most profound in his art and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena shall you marry her. I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Orl. Speak'st thou in sober meanings? 64
Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician.
Therefore put you in your best array, bid your friends; for if you will be married tomorrow, you shall; and to Rosalind, if you will.
688

Enter SILVIUS and PHEBE.

Look, here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness 70

To show the letter that I writ to you.

Ros. I care not if I have. It is my study
To seem despiteful and ungentle to you.
You are there follow'd by a faithful shepherd; Look upon him, love him; he worships

Phe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears:

And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganymede. Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Kos. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and bad voice? service; 2 Page.

And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganymede. Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy, All made of passion, and all made of wishes; All adoration, duty, and observance,

All humbleness, all patience, and impatience.

All purity, all trial, all obedience;

And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.
Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Phe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Ros. Why do you speak too 'Why blame you me to love you?'

Orl. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Ros. Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon. [Fo Silvius] I will help you if I can.
[To Phebe] I would love you if I could.—
To-morrow meet me all together. [To Phebe] I will marry you if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow.
[To Orlando] I will satisfy you if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow. [To Silvius] I will content you if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married to-morrow. [To Orlando] As you love Rosalind, meet. [To Orlando] As you love Phebe, meet;—and as I love no woman, I'll meet. So, fare you well; I have left you commands.

Sil. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phe. Nor I. Orl. Nor I.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey; to-morrow will we be married. Aud. I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire to desire to be a woman of the world. Here come two of the banish'd Duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

1 Page. Well met, honest gentleman. Touch. By my troth, well met. Come sit, sit, and a song.

2 Page. We are for you; sit i' th' middle. 1 Page. Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a

2 Page. I'faith, i'faith; and both in a tune, like two gipsies on a horse.

Song.

It was a lover and his lass,

85

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino, That o'er the green corn-field did pass 16

In the spring time, the only pretty ringtime,

When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding. Sweet lovers love the spring.

Between the acres of the rye,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino, These pretty country folks would lie, In the spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino, How that a life was but a flower, 26 In the spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time, With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino, For love is crowned with the prime, In the spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet Methought he was a brother to your the note was very untuneable.

1 Page. You are deceiv'd, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God buy you; and God mend your voices. [Exeunt. Come, Audrey.

SCENE IV. The forest.

Enter DUKE SENIOR, AMIENS, JAQUES, ORLANDO, OLIVER, and CELIA.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy

Can do all this that he hath promised? Orl. I sometimes do believe and sometimes do not :

As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Enter ROSALIND, SILVIUS, and PHEBE.

Ros. Patience once more, whiles our compact is urg'd:

You say, if I bring in your Rosalind, You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

Ros. And you say you will have her when quarrel was upon the seventh cause. I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms

Ros. You say you'll marry me, if I be willing?

Phe. That will I, should I die the hour

Ros. But if you do refuse to marry me, You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Phe. So is the bargain.

Ros. You say that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promis'd to make all this matter even.

Keep you your word, O Duke, to give your daughter:

yours, Orlando, to receive his cause? You daughter;

Keep your word, Phebe, that you'll marry

Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd; Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her

If she retuse me; and from hence I go, To make these doubts all even.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia. Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd boy

30 Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him daughter.

But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born, And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he reports to be a great magician, Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jag. There is, sure, another flood toward. and these couples are coming to the ark. Here comes a pair of very strange beasts which in all tongues are call'd fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all!

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome. This is the motley-minded gentleman that I have so often met in the forest. He hath been a courtier, he swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flatt'red a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jag. And how was that ta'en up? Touch. Faith, we met, and found the Jag. How seventh cause? Good my lord. like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God 'ild you, sir: I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country copulatives, to swear and to forswear, according as marriage binds and blood breaks. A poor virgin, sir, an illfavour'd thing, sir, but mine own; a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will. Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl in your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir. and such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause: how did you find the quarrel on the seventh Touch. Upon a lie seven times removedbear your body more seeming, Audrey—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard; he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was. This is call'd the Retort Courteous. If I sent him word again it was not well cut, he would send me word he cut it to please himself. This is call'd the Quip Modest. If again it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment. This is call'd the Reply Churlish. If again it was not well cut, he would answer I spake not true. This is call'd the Reproof Valiant. If again it was not well cut, he would say I lie. This is call'd the Countercheck Quaricisome. And so to Lie Circumstantial and the Lie Direct.

Jaq. And how oft did you say his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no further than the Lie Circumstantial, nor he durst not give me the Lie Direct; and so we measur'd swords and parted.

Jaq. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie? Touch. O, su, we quarrel in print by the book, as you have books for good manners. I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort Courteous; the second, the Quip Modest; the third, the Reply Churlish: the fourth, the Reproof Valiant; the fitth, the Countercheck Quairelsome; the sixth. the Lie with Circumstance: the seventh. the Lie Direct. All these you may avoid but the Lie Direct; and you may avoid that too with an If. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If, as: 'If you said so, then I said so'. And they shook hands, and swore brothers. Your If is the only peace-maker; much virtue in If.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord?

He's as good at any thing, and yet a fool. Duke S. He uses his folly like a stalkinghorse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter HYMEN, ROSALIND, and CELIA. Still music.

Hym. Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made even Atone together.

Good Duke, receive thy daughter; Hymen from heaven brought her, Yea, brought her hither,

That thou mightst join her hand with his,

Whose heart within his bosom is.

Ros. [To Duke] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To Orlando] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true,

Why then, my love adieu! 115
Ros. I'll have no father, if you be not he;

I'H have no husband, if you be not he; Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she. 282 Hym. Peace, ho! I bar confusion;
'Tis I must make conclusion r20
Of these most strange events.
Here's eight that must take hands
To join in Hymen's bands,

If truth holds true contents, 124 You and you no closs shall part; You and you are heart in heart; You to his love must accord, 127 Or have a woman to your lord; You and you are sure together, As the winter to foul weather. Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing, Feed yourselves with questioning, That reason wonder may diminish, How thus we met, and these things finish.

Song.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High wedlock then be honoured.
Honour, high honour, and renown,
To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art to me!

Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;

Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

Enter JAQUES DE BOYS.

Jag. de B. Let me have audience for a word or two.

145
I am the second son of old Sir Rowland,

That bring these tidings to this fair assembly.

Duke Frederick, hearing how that every

Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day

Men of great worth resorted to this forest, Address'd a mighty power; which were on foot,

In his own conduct, purposely to take His brother here, and put him to the sword; And to the skirts of this wild wood he came, Where, meeting with an old religious man.

After some question with him, was converted 155

Both from his enterprise and from the world;

His crown bequeathing to his banish'd brother,

And all their lands restor'd to them again That were with him exil'd. This to be true I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man.
Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding:

To one, his lands withheld; and to the other,

A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.

First, in this forest let us do those ends
That here were well begun and well begot;
And after, every of this happy number,
That have endur'd shrewd days and nights
with us,

167

Shall share the good of our returned fortune,

According to the measure of their states.
Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity,
And fall into our rustic revelry.
Play, music; and you brides and bridegrooms all,

With measure heap'd in joy, to th' measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience. If I heard you rightly,

The Duke hath put on a religious life, 175 And thrown into neglect the pompous court.

Jag de B. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I. Out of these convertites

There is much matter to be heard and learn'd.

[To Duke] You to your former honour I bequeath; 180
Your patience and your virtue well deserves

it.
[To Orlando] You to a love that your true faith doth meiit;

[To Oliver] You to your land, and love, and great allies;

[To Silvius] You to a long and well-deserved bed;

[To Touchstone] And you to wrangling; for thy loving voyage 185 Is but for two months victuall'd.—So to your pleasures; breaths, will, for my kind of am for other than for dancing measures. make curtsy, bid me farewell.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To see no pastime I. What you would have

13,

1'll stay to know at your abandon'd cave.

Duke S. Proceed, proceed. We will begin these rites,

As we do trust they'll end, in true delights.
[A dance. Bremit.

EPILOGUE

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue; but it is no more unhandsome than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true that good wine needs no bush. 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue. Yet to good wine they do use good bushes: and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play! I am not furnish'd like a beggar; therefore to beg will not become me. My way is to conjure you; and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please you; and I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women-as I perceive by your simp'ring none of you hates them-that between you and the women the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleas'd me, complexions that lik'd me, and breaths that I defied not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I

Tailor, Haberdasher, and Servants attending on Baptista and Petruchio.

THE SCENE: Padua, and Petruchio's house in the country.

INDUCTION

Scene I. Before an alehouse on a heath. I would esteem him worth a dozen such. 25 Enter Hostess and SLY.

Sly. I'll pheeze you, in faith.

Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue! Sly. Y'are a baggage; the Slys are no rogues. Look in the chronicles: we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore, paucas pallabris; let the world slide. Sessa!

Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

Sly. No, not a denier. Go by, Saint Jeronimy, go to thy cold bed and warm thee.

Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the thirdborough.

Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law. I'll not budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly. [Falls asleep.

Wind horns. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his Train.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds: Brach Merriman, the poor cur, is emboss'd; And couple Clowder with the deepmouth'd brach.

Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it Carry him gently to my fairest chamber. good

At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault? I would not lose the dog for twenty pound. 1 Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he,

my lord: He cried upon it at the merest loss, And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog. 284

Lord. Thou art a fool; if Echo were as fleet.

But sup them well, and look unto them all: To-morrow I intend to hunt again.

1 Hun. I will, my lord.

Lord. What's here? One dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?

2 Hun. He breathes, my lord. Were he not warm'd with ale. This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly. Lord. O monstrous beast, how like a swine he lies! Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.

What think you, if he were convey'd to bed. Wrapp'd in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers.

A most delicious banquet by his bed. And brave attendants near him when he wakes.

Would not the beggar then forget himself? 1 Hun. Believe me, lord, I think he cannot choose.

2 Hun. It would seem strange unto him when he wak'd.

Lord. Even as a flatt'ring dream or worthless fancy. Then take him up, and manage well the

Some one be ready with a costly suit, And ask him what apparel he will wear: Another tell him of his hounds and horse, And that his lady mourns at his disease: 60 Persuade him that he hath been lunatic, And, when he says he is, say that he dreams,

For he is nothing but a mighty lord. This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs; It will be pastime passing excellent, If it be husbanded with modesty.

1 Hun. My lord, I warrant you we will play our part

As he shall think by our true diligence He is no less than what we say he is.

Lord. Take him up gently, and to bed with him:

And each one to his office when he wakes. [Sly is carried out. A trumpet sounds. Sirrah, go see what trumpet 'tis that [Exit Servant. sounds-Belike some noble gentleman that means. Travelling some journey, to repose him

How now! who is it? Serv. An't please your honour, players That offer service to your lordship. Lord. Bid them come near.

Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome. Players. We thank your honour.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

our duty.

Lord. With all my heart. This fellow I remember

Since once he play'd a farmer's eldest son; 'Twas where you woo'd the gentlewoman so well.

I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part

Was aptly fitted and naturally perform'd. Player. I think 'twas Soto that your honour means.

Lord. 'Tis very true; thou didst it excellent.

Well, you are come to me in happy time, 88 The rather for I have some sport in hand Wherein your cunning can assist me much. There is a lord will hear you play to-night; But I am doubtful of your modesties, Lest, over-eying of his odd behaviour,

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

You break into some merry passion And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs, If you should smile, he grows impatient.

Player. Fear not, my lord; we can contain ourselves.

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery.

And give them friendly welcome every one; Let them want nothing that my house affords. [Exit one with the Players. Sirrah, go you to Barthol'mew my page, And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady ; That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber. And call him 'madam', do him obeisance. Tell him from me-as he will win my love-He bear himself with honourable action. Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies Unto their lords, by them accomplished; Such duty to the drunkard let him do, iii With soft low tongue and lowly courtesy, And say 'What is't your honour will com-

Wherein your lady and your humble wife May show her duty and make known her love?'

And then with kind embracements, tempting kisses.

And with declining head into his bosom. Bid him shed tears, as being overloyed To see her noble lord restor'd to health, Who for this seven years hath esteemed

No better than a poor and loathsome beggar.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift To rain a shower of commanded tears, An onion will do well for such a shift, Which, in a napkin being close convey'd, Shall in despite enforce a watery eye. See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou canst;

Player. So please your lordship to accept Anon I'll give thee more instructions.

[Exit a Servingman. I know the boy will well usurp the grace, Voice, gait, and action, of a gentlewoman; I long to hear him call the drunkard 'husband';

And how my men will stay themselves from laughter

When they do homage to this simple peasant.

I'll in to counsel them: haply my presence May well abate the over-merry spleen, 135 Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exeunt.

A bedchamber in the Lord's SCENE II. house

Enter aloft SLY, with Attendants; some with apparel, basin and ewer, and other appurtenances; and Lord.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Slv. For God's sake, a pot of small ale. 1 Serv. Will't please your lordship drink a cup of sack? 2 Serv. Will't please your honour taste of these conserves?

3 Serv. What taiment will your honour wear to-day?

Sly. I am Christophero Sly; call not me 'honour' nor 'lordship'. I ne'er drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserves, give me conserves of beef. Ne'er ask me what raiment I'll wear, for I have no more doublets than backs, no more stockings than legs, nor no more shoes than feet-nay, sometime more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather.

vour honour!

O, that a mighty man of such descent, Of such possessions, and so high esteem, Should be infused with so foul a spirit! 15

Sly. What, would you make me mad? Am not I Christopher Sly, old Sly's son of Burton Heath: by birth a pedlar, by educa tion a cardmaker, by transmutation a bearherd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat alewife of Wincot, if she know me not; if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying'st knave in Christendom. What! I am not bestraught. [Taking a pot of ale] Here's-

3 Serv. O, this it is that makes your lady mourn!

2 Serv. O, this is it that makes your servants droop!

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shuns your house,

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. O noble lord, bethink thee of thy birth! Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,

And banish hence these abject lowly

Look how thy servants do attend on thee, Each in his office ready at thy beck. Wilt thou have music? Hark! Apollo plays, [Music. And twenty caged nightingales do sing. Or wilt thou sleep? We'll have thee to a couch Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed On purpose trimm'd up for Semiramis. Say thou wilt walk: we will bestrew the ground. Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd.

Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.

Dost thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will soar

Above the morning lark. Or wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them

And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1 Serv. Say thou wilt course; thy greyhounds are as swift As breathed stags; ay, fleeter than the roe.

2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? We will fetch thee straight

Adonis painted by a running brook,

And Cytherea all in sedges hid.

Which seem to move and wanton with her breath

Even as the waving sedges play wi'th' wind. Lord. We'll show thee Io as she was a maid

Lord. Heaven cease this idle humour in And how she was beguled and surpris'd, As lively painted as the deed was done.

3 Serv. Or Daphne toaming through a thorny wood,

Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds :

And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep, So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a loid.

Thou hast a lady far more beautiful Than any woman in this waning age.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee

Like envious floods o'er-run her lovely face, She was the fairest creature in the world; And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord and have I such a lady? Or do I dream? Or have I dream'd till now?

I do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak; I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things.

Upon my life, I am a lord indeed. And not a tinker, nor Chastopher Sly. Well, bring our lady hither to our sight; And once again, a pot o' th' smallest ale.

2 Serv. Will't please your Mightiness to wash your hands?

O, how we joy to see your wit restor'd! 75 O, that once more you knew but what you

These fifteen years you have been in a dream:

Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.

Sly. These fifteen years! by my fay, a goodly nap.

But did I never speak of all that time? 1 Serv. O, yes, my lord, but very idle words;

For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,

Yet would you say ye were beaten out of door:

And rail upon the hostess of the house, 84

Scene 21

And say you would present her at the leet. Because she brought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts.

Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house. 3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house not ne such maid,

Nor no such men as you have reckon'd up,

As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece.

And Peter Turph, and Henry Pimpernell, And twenty more such names and men as these.

Which never were, nor no man ever saw. Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends l All. Amen.

Enter the Page as a lady, with Attendants Sly. I thank thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Page. How fares my noble lord? Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enouzh.

Where is my wife?

Page. Here, noble lord; what is thy will with her?

Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me husband?

My men should call me 'lord'; I am your goodman.

Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband:

I am your wife in all obedience. Sly. I know it well. What must I call Lord. Madam.

Sly. Al'ce madam, or Joan madam? Lord. Madam, and nothing else; so lords call ladies.

Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd

And slept above some fifteen year or more. Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me.

Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Sly. 'Tis much. Servants, leave me and [Exeunt Servants. her alone. Madam, undress you, and come now to bed. Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you

To pardon me yet for a night or two; Or, if not so, until the sun he set.

For your physicians have expressly charg'd, In peril to incur your former malady, That I should yet absent me from your bed. I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so that I may hardly tarry so long. But I would be loath to fall I will therefore into my dreams again. tarry in despite of the flesh and the blood. Only, good master, while we do admire

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. You honour's players, hearing your amendment,

Are come to play a pleasant comedy; For so your doctors hold it very meet, Seeing too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood.

And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy, 110 Therefore they thought it good you hear a play And frame your mind to mirth and merri ment.

Which bars a thousand harms and length ens life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it. Is not a comonty a Christmas gambold or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord, it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff? Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we'll see't. Come, madam wife, sit by my side and let the world slip; we shall ne'er be younger. They sit down

A flourish of trumpets announces the play.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Padua. A public place.

Enter Lucenijo and his man Tranio.

Luc. Transo, since for the great desire I had

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts, I am arriv'd for fruitful Lombardy. The pleasant garden of great Italy,

And by my father's love and leave am arın'd

With his good will and thy good company, My trusty servant well approv'd in all, Here let us breathe, and haply institute A course of learning and ingenious studies. Pisa, renowned for grave citizens, Gave me my being and my father first, A merchant of great traffic through the world.

Vincentio, come of the Bentivolii; Vincentio's son, brought up in Florence, 14 It shall become to serve all hopes conceiv'd, To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds. And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study, Virtue and that part of philosophy Will I apply that treats of happiness

By virtue specially to be achiev'd. Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left And am to Padua come as he that leaves A shallow plash to plunge him in the deep, And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. Mi perdonato, gentle master mine; I am in all affected as yourself; Glad that you thus continue your resolve To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy.

This virtue and this moral discipline. Let's be no Stoics nor no stocks, I pray, Or so devote to Aristotle's checks As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd. Balk logic with acquaintance that you have, And practise rhetoric in your common talk; Music and poesy use to quicken you; The mathematics and the metaphysics, serves you.

No profit grows where is no pleasure ta'en; In brief, sir, study what you most affect, 40 Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well dost thou advise.

If. Biondello, thou wert come ashore. We could at once put us in readiness. And take a lodging fit to entertain Such friends as time in Padua shall beget.

Enter BAPTISTA with his two daughters, KATHERINA and BIANCA; GREMIO, a pantaloon, HORTENSIO, suitor to Bianca. Lucentio and Tranio stand by.

But stay awhile: what company is this? Tra. Master, some show to welcome us to

Bab. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,

For how I firmly am resolv'd you know; That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter

Before I have a husband for the elder. If either of you both love Katherina, Because I know you well and love you well, Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Gre. To cart her rather. She's too rough for me.

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Kath. [To Baptista] I pray you, sir, is it vour will

To make a stale of me amongst these mates?

Hor. Mates, maid! How mean you that? No mates for you.

Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Kath. I' faith, sir, you shall never need to fear;

Iwis it is not halfway to her heart; But if it were, doubt not her care should be To comb your noddle with a three-legg'd stool,

And paint your face, and use you like a fool.

Hor. From all such devils, good Lord deliver us!

Gre. And me, too, good Lord!

Tra. Husht, master! Here's some good pastime toward;

That wench is stark mad or wonderful froward.

Luc. But in the other's silence do I see 70 Maid's mild behaviour and sobriety. Peace, Tranio!

Tra. Well said, master; mum! and gaze vour fill.

Bab. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good

What I have said—Bianca, get you in: 25 And let it not displease thee, good Bianca, For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Kath. A pretty peat! it is best Fall to them as you find your stomach Put finger in the eye, an she knew why. Bian. Sister, content you in my discontent.

Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe: My books and instruments shall be my company,

On them to look, and practise by myself.

Luc. Hark, Transo, thou mayst hear Minerva speak! Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange? Sorry am I that our good will effects

Bianca's grief. Gre. Why will you mew her up,

Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell, And make her bear the penance of her tongue?

Bap. Gentlemen, content ye; resolv'd. Go in, Bianca. Exit Bianca.

And for I know she taketh most delight In music, instruments, and poetry, Schoolmasters will I keep within my house

Fit to instruct her youth. If you, Hortensio,

Or, Signior Gremio, you, know any such, Prefer them hither; for to cunning men I will be very kind, and liberal To mine own children in good bringing-up: And so, farewell. Katherina, you may stay; For I have more to commune with Bianca.

[Exit. Kath. Why, and I trust I may go too, may I not? What! shall I be appointed hours, as though, belike, I knew not what to take and what to leave? Ha!

Gre. You may go to the devil's dam; your gifts are so good here's none will hold you. There! Love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out; our cake's dough on both sides. Farewell; yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father. Hor. So will I, Signior Gremio; but a word, I pray. Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brook'd parle, know now, upon advice, it toucheth us both-that we may yet again have access to our fair mistress, and be happy rivals in Bianca's love-to labour and effect one thing specially. 116

Gre. What's that, I pray?

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her That made great Jove to humble him to Gre. A husband? a devil.

Hor. I say a husband.

Think'st thou, Gre. I say a devil. Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be mairied to hell?

Hor. Tush, Gremio! Though it pass your patience and mine to endure her loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gre. I cannot tell; but I had as hef take her dowry with this condition-to be whipp'd at the high cross every morning.

Hor. Faith, as you say, there's small choice in 10tten apples. But, come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintain'd till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to't afresh. Sweet Because she will not be annoy'd with Bianca! Happy man be his dole! He that runs fastest gets the 11ng. How say you, Signior Gremio?

Gre. I am agreed; and would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the house of her! Come on.

[Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio. Tra. I pray, sir, tell me, is it possible That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true, I hever thought it possible or likely. But see! while idly I stood looking on, 145 I found the effect of love in idleness; And now in plainness do confess to thee, That art to me as secret and as dear As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was-Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio, 150 If I achieve not this young modest girl. Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst; Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now:

Affection is not rated from the heart; 155 It love have touch'd you, nought remains but so:

'Redime te captum quam queas minimo'. Luc. Grameicies, lad. Go forward; this contents:

The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.

Tra. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,

Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and of all.

Such as the daughter of Agenor had,

her hand.

When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.

Tra. Saw you no more? Mark'd you not how her sister

Began to scold and raise up such a storm That mortal ears might hardly endure the din?

Luc. Tianio, I saw her coral lips to move, And with her breath she did perfume the air:

Sacred and sweet was all I saw in her.

Tra. Nay, then 'tis time to stir him from his trance.

I pray, awake, sir. If you love the maid, Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands:

Her elder sister is so curst and shrewd 175 That, till the father rid his hands of her, Master, your love must live a maid at home: And therefore has he closely mew'd her up.

suitors. Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he! But art thou not advis'd he took some care

To get her cunning schoolmasters to instruct her?

Tra. Ay, marry, am I, sir, and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I have it, Transo.

Tra. Master, for my hand. Both our inventions meet and jump in one. Luc. Tell me thine first.

You will be schoolmaster. And undertake the teaching of the maid-That's your device.

It is. May it be done? Luc. Tra. Not possible; for who shall bear your part

And be în Padua here Vincentio's son; 190 Keep house and ply his book, welcome his friends.

Visit his countrymen, and banquet them? Luc. Basta, content thee, for I have it

We have not yet been seen in any house, Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces For man or master. Then it follows thus: Thou shalt be master, Transo, in my stead, Keep house and port and servants, as I should:

I will some other be-some Florentine.

Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa. 'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so. Tranio, at once cloak.

Luc. O, yes, I saw sweet beauty in her When Biondello comes, he waits on thee; But I will charm him first to keep his

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Tra. So had you need.

In brief, sir, sith it your pleasure is, And I am tied to be obedient—

For so your father charg'd me at our parting:

Be serviceable to my son' quoth he, 209
Although I think 'twas in another sense—

I am content to be Lucentio,

Because so well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranto, be so because Lucentio

And let me be a slave t' achieve that maid Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye.

Enter BIONDELLO.

Here comes the rogue. Sirrah, where have you been?

Bio. Where have I been! Nay, how now! where are you?

Master, has my fellow Tranio stol'n your clothes?

Or you stol'n his? or both? Pray, what's the news?

Luc. Sirrah, come hither; 'tis no time to jest, 220

And therefore frame your manners to the time.

Your fellow Tranio here, to save my life,
Puts my apparel and my count'nance on,
And I for my escape have put on his;
For in a quarrel since I came ashore 225
I kill'd a man, and fear I was descried.
Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,
While I make way from hence to save my life.

You understand me?

Bion. I, sir? Ne'er a whit. Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth:

'Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him; would I were so too!

Tra. So could I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,

That Lucentio indeed had Baptista's youngest daughter.

But, sirrah, not for my sake but your master's, I advise 235 You use your manners discreetly in all kind of companies.

When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;

But in all places else your master Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, let's go.

One thing more rests, that thyself execute— To make one among these wooers. If thou ask me why—

Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty. [Exeunt.

The Presenters above speak.

1 Serv. My lord, you nod; you do not mind the play.

eed. 205 Sly. Yes, by Saint Anne do I. A good [They exchange habits. our pleasure is, 1987] matter, surely; comes there any more of our pleasure is, 1987.

Page. My lord, 'tis but begun. 245
Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady. Would 'twere done!
[They sit and mark.

Scene II. Padua. Before Hortensio's house.

Enter Petruchio and his man
GRUMIO.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave, To see my friends in Padua; but of all My best beloved and approved friend, Hortensio; and I trow this is his house. Here, sirrah Grumio, knock, I say.

Gru. Knock, sir! Whom should I knock? Is there any man has rebus'd your worship?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

Gru. Knock you here, sir? Why, sir, what am I, sir, that I should knock you here, sir?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate, And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.

Gru. My master is grown quarrelsome. I should knock you first,

And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Pet. Will it not be?

Faith, sirrah, an you'll not knock I'll ring it;

I'll try how you can sol-fa, and sing it.

[He wrings him by the ears. Gru. Help, masters, help! My master is mad. Pet. Now knock when I bid you, sirrah

Pet. Now knock when I bid you, sirral villain!

Enter HORTENSIO.

Hor. How now! what's the matter? My old friend Grumio and my good friend Petruchio! How do you all at Verona? 22

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

'Con tutto il cuore ben trovato' may I say.

Hor. Alla nostra casa ben venuto,

Molto honorato signor mio Pet-

Rise, Grumio, rise; we will compound this quarrel.

Gru. Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he 'leges in Latin. If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service—look you, sir: he bid me knock him and rap him soundly, sir. Well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so; being, perhaps, for aught I see, two and thirty, a pip out? 32 Whom would to God I had well knock'd at

Then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A senseless villain! Good Hortensio. I hade the rascal knock upon your gate, 36 And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Gru. Knock at the gate? O heavens! Spake you not these words plain: 'Sirrah knock me here, rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly '? And come you now with 'knocking at the gate'?

Pet. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio, patience; I am Grumio's And shrewd and froward so beyond all pledge:

Why, this's a heavy chance 'twixt him and you,

Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio. And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale Blows you to Padua here from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters young men through the world

To seek their fortunes farther than at home, Where small experience grows. But in a Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me: Antonio, my father, is deceas'd,

And I have thrust myself into this maze, Haply to wive and thrive as best I may; Crowns in my purse I have, and goods at home.

And so am come abroad to see the world. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee

And wish thee to a shrewd ill-favour'd wife?

Thou'dst thank me but a little for my counsel.

And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich. And very rich; but th'art too much my friend,

And I'll not wish thee to her.

Pet. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as we

Few words suffice; and therefore, if thou know

One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife, 65 As wealth is burden of my wooing dance, Be she as foul as was Florentius' love, As old as Sibyl, and as curst and shrewd As Socrates' Xanthippe or a worse-She moves me not, or not removes, at least. Affection's edge in me, were she as rough As are the swelling Adriatic seas. I come to wive it wealthily in Padua;

If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Gru. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is. Why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet or an aglet-baby, or an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses. Why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Hor. Petruchio, since we are stepp'd thus far 10,

I will continue that I broach'd in jest. I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife

With wealth enough, and young and beauteous:

Brought up as best becomes a gentlewoman: Her only fault, and that is faults enough,

Is—that she is intolerable curst, measure That, were my state far worser than it is, I would not wed her for a mine of gold. 90

Pet. Hortensio, peace! thou know'st not gold's effect.

Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough; For I will board her though she chide as loud

As thunder when the clouds in autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola, An affable and courteous gentleman; Her name is Katherina Minola. Renown'd in Padua for her scolding tongue. Pet. I know her father, though I know not her:

And he knew my deceased father well, 100 I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her; And therefore let me be thus bold with you To give you over at this first encounter, Unless you will accompany me tluther. 104

Gru. I pray you, sir, let him go while the O' my word, an she knew humour lasts him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon hun. She may perhaps call him half a score knaves or so. Why, that's nothing; an he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir: an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it that she shall have no more eyes to see withal than a cat. You know him not, sir. 113

Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee.

For in Baptista's keep my treasure is. 115 He hath the jewel of my life in hold, His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca; And her withholds from me, and other nicre, Suitors to her and rivals in my love; Supposing it a thing impossible— For those defects I have before rehears'd-That ever Katherina will be woo'd. Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en,

That none shall have access unto Bianca Till Katherine the curst have got a husband Gru. Katherine the curst!

A title for a maid of all titles the worst. Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace,

80 And offer me disguis'd in sober robes

To old Baptista as a schoolmaster Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca; That so I may by this device at least Have leave and leisure to make love to her, And unsuspected court her by herself.

Enter GREMIO with LUCENTIO disguised as Cambio.

Gru. Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Master, master, look about you. Who goes there, ha?

Hor. Peace, Grumio! It is the rival of my love. Petruchio, stand by awhile.

Gru. A proper stripling, and an amorous! [They stand aside.

Gre. O, very well; I have perus'd the note.

Hark you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound—

All books of love, see that at any hand; And see you read no other lectures to her. You understand me—over and beside 145 Signior Bartista's liberality,

I'll mend it with a largess. Take your paper too,

And let me have them very well perfum'd; For she is sweeter than perfume itself To whom they go to. What will you read to her?

Luc. Whate'er I read to her, I'll plead for

As for my patron, stand you so assur'd, As firmly as yourself were still in place; Yea, and perhaps with more successful

Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir. Gre. O this learning, what a thing it is! Gru. O this woodcock, what an ass it is! Pet. Peace, sirrah!

Hor. Grumio, mum! [Coming forward]
God save you, Signior Gremio!
Gre. And you are well met, Signior

Hortersio. 160
Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista

Minola.

I promis'd to enquire carefully

About a schoolmaster for the fair Bianca;

And by good fortune I have lighted well

On this young man; for learning and behaviour

163

Fit for her turn, well read in poetry
And other books—good ones, I warrant ye.
Hor. 'Tis well; and I have met a gentleman

Hath promis'd me to help me to another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress; 170 So shall I no whit be behind in duty To fair Bianca, so beloved of me.

Gre. Beloved of me—and that my deeds shall prove.

Gru. And that his bags shall grove.

Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love.

175

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair I'll tell you news indifferent good for either. Here is a gentleman whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his liking, Will undertake to woo curst Katherine;

Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please.

Gre. So said, so done, is well.

Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?

Pet. I know she is an irksome brawling scold;

If that be all, masters, I hear no harm. 185 Gre. No, say'st me so, friend? What countryman?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son. My father dead, my fortune lives for me; And I do hope good days and long to see.

Gre. O sir, such a life with such a wife were strange! 190
But if you have a stomach, to't a God's name;

You shall have me assisting you in all

You shall have me assisting you in all. But will you woo this wild-cat?

Pet. Will I live?

Gru. Will he woo her? Ay, or I'll hang her.

Pet. Why came I hither but to that intent?
Think you a little din can daunt mine ears? Have I not in my time heard lions roar? Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,

Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat?
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field.

And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang?

And do you tel! me of a woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to hear
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire? 206

Tush! tush! fear boys with bugs.

Gru. For he fears none.

Gre. Hortensio, hark:

This gentleman is happily arriv'd,
My mind presumes, for his own good and Hor. I promis'd we would be contributors And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoe'er. Gre. And so we will—provided that he win her.

Gru. I would I were as sure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio, bravely apparelled as Lucentio, and Biondello.

Tra. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold, 215

Tell me, I beseech vou, which is the readiest way

To the house of Signior Baptista Minola?

Bion. He that has the two fair daughters;
is't he you mean?

Tra. Even he, Biondello.

220

Gre. Hark you, sir, you mean not her to- Achieve the elder, set the younger free have you to do?

Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand.

Tra. I love no chiders, sir. Biondello, let's away. Luc. [Aside] Well begun, Transo.

Sir, a word ere you go. Hor.

Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea or no?

Tra. And if I be, sir, is it any offence? Gre. No; if without more words you will get you hence.

Tra. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free

For me as for you?

But so is not she. Gre. Tra. For what reason, I beseech you? For this reason, if you'll know,

That she's the choice love of Signior Petruchio, I shall be your ben venuto. Gremio.

Hor. That she's the chosen of Signior Hortensio.

Tra. Softly, my masters! If you be gentlemen,

Do me this right—hear me with patience. Baptista is a noble gentleman,

To whom my father is not all unknown, And, were his daughter fairer than she is, She may more suitors have, and me for one. Fair Leda's daughter had a thousand wooers:

Then well one more may fair Bianca have: And so she shall: Lucentio shall make one, Though Paris came in hope to speed alone. Gre. What, this gentleman will out-talk us all!

Luc. Sir, give him head; I know he'll prove a jade.

Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?

Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as ask you, Did you yet ever see Baptista's daughter? Tra. No, sir, but hear I do that he hath two:

The one as famous for a scolding tongue As is the other for beauteous modesty go by.

Yea, leave that labour to great Gre. Hercules,

And let it be more than Alcides' twelve. Pet. Sir, understand you this of me, in sooth:

The youngest daughter, whom you hearken

Her father keeps from all access of suitors, And will not promise her to any man Until the elder sister first be wed

The younger then is free, and not before. Tra. If it be so, sir, that you are the man Must stead us all, and me amongst the rest; And if you break the ice, and do this feat,

Tra. Perhaps him and her, sir; what For our access—whose hap shall be to have

Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do conceive:

And since you do profess to be a suitor,

You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman. To whom we all rest generally beholding. Tra. Sir, I shall not be slack; in sign whereof. Please ye we may contrive this afternoon. And quaff carouses to our mistress' health:

And do as adversaries do in law-Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Gru., Bion. O excellent motion! Fellows. let's be gone.

Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it

[Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. Padua. Baptista's house.

Enter KATHERINA and BIANCA.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,

To make a bondmaid and a slave of me-That I disdain; but for these other gawds. Unbind my hands, I'll pull them off myself.

Yea, all my raiment, to my petticoat: Or what you will command me will I do. So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors here I charge thee tell Whom thou lov'st best. See thou dissemble not.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive

I never yet beheld that special face Which I could fancy more than any other. Kath. Minion, thou liest. Is't not Hortensio? Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear Pet. Sir, sir, the first's for me; let her I'll plead for you myself but you shall have him. Kath. O then, belike, you fancy riches more: You will have Gremio to keep you fair. Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?

Nay, then you jest; and now I well perceive

You have but jested with me all this while. I prithee, sister Kate, untie my hands. 21 Kath. [Strikes her] If that be jest, then all the rest was so.

Enter BAPTISTA

Bap. Why, how now, dame! Whence grows this insolence?

Bianca, stand aside—poor girl! she weeps.

[He unbinds her.

Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her. For shame, thou hilding of a devilish spirit, Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee?

When did she cross thee with a bitter word?

Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I'll be reveng'd.

[Flies after Bianca.]

reveng'd. [Flies after Bianca.
Bap. What, in my sight? Bianca, get thee in. [Exit Bianca.

Kath. What, will you not suffer me?
Nay, now I see

She is your treasure, she must have a husband;

I must dance bare-foot on her weddingday,

And for your love to her lead apes in hell. Talk not to me; I will go sit and weep, 35 Till I can find occasion of revenge.

[Exit Katherina.

Bap. Was ever gentleman thus griev'd as I?

But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, with Lucentio in the habit of a mean man; Petruchio, with Hortensio as a musician; and Tranio, as Lucentio, with his boy, Biondello, bearing a lute and books.

Gre. Good morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good morrow, neighbour Gremio.
God save you, gentlemen!

Pet. And you, good sir! Pray, have you not a daughter

Call'd Katherina, fair and virtuous?

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call'd Katherina.

Gre. You are too blunt; go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, Signior Gremio; give me leave.

I am a gentleman of Verona, sir,
That, hearing of her beauty and her wit,
Her affability and bashful modesty,
Her wondrous qualities and mild behaviour,
Am bold to show myself a forward guest Within your house, to make mine eye the witness

Of that report which I so oft have heard. And, for an entrance to my entertainment, I do present you with a man of mine, 55 [Presenting Hortensio.

Cunning in music and the mathematics, To instruct her fully in those sciences, Whereof I know she is not ignorant.

Accept of him, or else you do me wrong—His name is Licio, born in Mantua.

Bab. Y'are welcome, sir, and he for

Bap. Y'are welcome, sir, and he for your good sake;

But for my daughter Katherine, this I know,

She is not for your turn, the more my grief.

Pet. I see you do not mean to part with
her;

Or else you like not of my company. 65
Bap. Mistake me not; I speak but as I find.

Whence are you, sir? What may I call your name?

Pet. Petruchio is my name, Antonio's son, A man well known throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well; you are welcome for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray, Let us that are poor petitioners speak too. Bacare! you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O, pardon me, Signior Gremio! I would fain be doing.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will cuise your wooing.

Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it. To express the ike kindness, myself, that have been more kindly beholding to you than any, freely give unto you this young scholar [presenting Lucential that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics. His name is Cambio. Pray accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks, Signior Gremio. Welcome, good Cambio. [To Tranio] But, gentle sir, methinks you walk like a stranger. May I be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tra. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine

That, being a stranger in this city here, Do make myself a suitor to your daughter, Unto Bianca, fair and virtuous.

90 Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me In the preferment of the eldest sister.

This liberty is all that I request—
That, upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome 'mongst the rest that woo.

And free access and favour as the rest.

And toward the education of your daughters

I here bestow a simple instrument, And this small packet of Greek and Latin books.

If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name? Of whence, I pray?

Tra. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa. By report
I know him well. You are very welcome.

Take you the lute, and you the set of books;

You shall go see your pupils presently. Holla, within!

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentlemen To my daughters; and tell them both

These are their tutors. Bid them use them [Exit Servant leading Hortensio carrying the lute and Lucentio with the books.

We will go walk a little in the orchard, 110 And then to dinner. You are passing welcome.

And so I pray you all to think yourselves. Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste.

And every day I cannot come to woo. 114 You knew my father well, and in him me, Left solely heir to all his lands and goods, Which I have bettered rather than decreas'd.

Then tell me, if I get your daughter's love, What dowry shall I have with her to wife? Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands in possession, twenty thousand And. crowns.

Pet. And for that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survive me, In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Let specialties be therefore drawn between

That covenants may be kept on either hand. Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd.

That is, her love; for that is all in all. Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you,

I am as peremptory as she proud-minded; And where two raging fires meet together. They do consume the thing that feeds their fury.

Though httle fire grows great with little wind.

Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all. So I to her, and so she yields to me; For I am rough, and woo not like a babe. Bap. Well mayst thou woo, and happy be thy speed! But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words. Pet. Ay, to the proof, as mountains are for winds, That shake not though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter HORTENSIO, with his head broke.

Bap. How now, my friend! Why dost thou look so pale?

Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?

Hor. I think she'll sooner prove a soldier: Iron may hold with her, but never lutes. x45 to the lute?

Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the Kate of Kate Hall, my super-dainty Kate, lute to me.

I did but tell her she mistook her frets.

And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering, When, with a most impatient devilish spirit.

'Frets, call you these?' quoth she 'I'll fume with them'.

And with that word she struck me on the head.

And through the instrument my pate made way;

And there I stood amazed for a while, 154 As on a pillory, looking through the lute. While she did call me rascal fiddler And twangling Jack, with twenty such vile

As had she studied to misuse me so.

terms.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench;

I love her ten times more than e'er I did. O, how I long to have some chat with her! Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discomfited: Proceed in practice with my younger daughter:

She's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns.

Signior Petruchio, will you go with us, Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you? Pet. I pray you do.

[Exeunt all but Petruchio. I'll attend her here.

And woo her with some spirit when she comes.

Say that she rail; why, then I'll tell her

She sings as sweetly as a nightingale. Say that she frown; I'll say she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Say she be mute, and will not speak a word: Then I'll commend her volubility, And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. If she do bid me pack, I'll give her thanks, As though she bid me stay by her a week; If she deny to wed, I'll crave the day When I shall ask the banns, and when be married. But here she comes: and now, Petruchio. speak.

Enter KATHERINA.

Good morrow, Kate-for that's your name, I hear.

Kath. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:

They call me Katherine that do talk of me. Pet. You lie, in faith, for you are call'd plain Kate,

And bonny Kate, and sometimes Kate-the curst;

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her But, Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,

For dainties are all Kates, and therefore, Kate,

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Take this of me, Kate of my consolation-Hearing thy mildness prais'd in every town. Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sounded.

Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs, Myself am mov'd to woo thee for my wife. Kath. Mov'd! in good time! Let him that mov'd you hither

Remove you hence. I knew you at the first

You were a moveable.

Pet. Why, what's a moveable?

Kath. A join'd-stool.

Pet. Thou hast hit it. Come, sit on me. Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are

Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are vou.

Kath. No such jade as you, if me you mean.

Pet. Alas, good Kate, I will not burden thee!

For, knowing thee to be but young and light-

Kath. Too light for such a swain as you to catch:

And yet as heavy as my weight should be. Pet. Should be! should—buzz!

Well ta'en, and like a buzzard. Pet. O, slow-wing'd turtle, shall a buzzard take thee?

Kath. Av. for a turtle, as he takes a buzzard.

Pet. Come, come, you wasp; i' faith, you are too angry.

Kath. If I be waspish, best beware my

Pet. My remedy is then to pluck it out. Kath. Av. if the fool could find it where it lies.

Pet. Who knows not where a wasp does wear his sting?

In his tail.

Kath. In his tongue. Whose tongue?

Kath. Yours, if you talk of tales; and so farewell.

Pet. What, with my tongue in your tail? Nay, come again,

Good Kate; I am a gentleman. Kath. That I'll try.

IShe strikes him. Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike

Kath. So may you lose your arms.

If you strike me, you are no gentleman; And if no gentleman, why then no arms. Pet. A herald, Kate? O, put me in thy books! Kath. What is your crest—a coxcomb? Pet. A combless cock, so Kate will be my Kath. No cock of mine: you crow too like a craven.

Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour. Kath. It is my fashion, when I see a crab.

Pet. Why, here's no crab; and therefore look not sour.

Kath. There is, there is.

Pet. Then show it me. Kath. Had I a glass I would. Pet. What, you mean my face?

Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one. Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you.

Kath. Yet you are wither'd.

Pet. 'Tis with cares. Kath. I care not.

Pet. Nav. hear you. Kate-in sooth, you scape not so.

Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry; let me go. Pet. No, not a whit; I find you passing gentle.

'Twas told me you were rough, and coy, and sullen.

And now I find report a very liar:

For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous.

But slow in speech, yet sweet as springtime flowers. Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance. Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,

Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk: But thou with mildness entertain'st thy wooers :

With gentle conference, soft and affable. Why does the world report that Kate doth limp? O sland'rous world! Kate like the hazeltwig

Is straight and slender, and as brown in hue As hazel-nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. O, let me see thee walk. Thou dost not halt. Kath. Go, fool, and whom thou keep'st command.

Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?

O, be thou Dian, and let her be Kate: And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportful!

Where did you study all this Kath. goodly speech? Pet. It is extempore, from my mother wit.

Kath. A witty mother! witless else her son.

Pet. Am I not wise?

Kath. Yes, keep you warm.

Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katherine, in thy bed.

And therefore, setting all this chat aside, Thus in plain terms: your father hath consented

That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on; And will you, nill you, I will marry you.

Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn; I will be sure my Katherine shall be fire. For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty. Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well.

Thou must be married to no man but me: For I am he am born to tame you, Kate. And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate Conformable as other household Kates, 270

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio. Never make Here comes your father. denial

I must and will have Katherine to my wife. Bab. Now, Signior Petruchio, how speed you with my daughter?

Pet. How but well, sir? how but well? It were impossible I should speed amiss. Bab. Why, how now, daughter Katherine.

in your dumps? 276 Kath. Call you me daughter? Now I promise you You have show'd a tender fatherly regard To wish me wed to one half lunatic,

A mad-cap ruffian and a swearing Jack, 280 That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.

Pet. Father, 'tis thus: yourself and all the world

That talk'd of her have talk'd amiss of her. If she be curst, it is for policy, For she's not froward, but modest as the dove : She is not hot, but temperate as the morn; For patience she will prove a second Grissel.

And Roman Lucrece for her chastity. And, to conclude, we have 'greed so well together

That upon Sunday is the wedding-day. 290 Kath. I'll see thee hang'd on Sunday first. Gre. Hark, Petruchio; she says she'll see thee hang'd first.

Tra. Is this your speeding? Nay, then good-night our part!

Pet. Be patient, gentlemen. I choose her for myself:

If she and I be pleas'd, what's that to you? 'Tis bargain'd 'twixt us twain, being alone, That she shall still be curst in company. I tell you 'tis incredible to believe

How much she loves me-O, the kindest Kate!

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath, That in a twink she won me to her love. O, you are novices! 'Tis a world to see How tame, when men and women are alone,

A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew.

Give me thy hand, Kate; I will unto Venice,

To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day. Provide the feast, father, and bid the To house or housekeeping. guests;

Bap. I know not what to say; but give me your hands.

God send you joy, Petruchio! 'Tis a match. Gre., Tra. Amen, say we; we will be witnesses

Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen. adieu.

I will to Venice; Sunday comes apace; We will have rings and things, and fine ariav: And kiss me, Kate; we will be married a Sunday.

[Exeunt Petruchio and Katherina severally. Gre. Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly?

Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's part,

And venture madly on a desperate mart. Tra. 'Twas a commodity lay fretting by you:

'Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas. Bap. The gain I seek is quiet in the match. Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch.

But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter:

Now is the day we long have looked for ; I am your neighbour, and was suitor first. Tra. And I am one that love Bianca more Than words can witness or your thoughts can guess. Gie. Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I. Tra. Greybeard, thy love doth freeze.

Gre. But thine doth try. Skipper, stand back; 'tis age that nourisheth.

Tra. But youth in ladies' eyes that flourisheth.

Bap. Content you, gentlemen; I will compound this strife.

'Tis deeds must win the prize, and he of both

That can assure my daughter greatest dower

Shall have my Bianca's love. Say, Signior Gremio, what can you assure

her ?

Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city

Is richly furnished with plate and gold, Basins and ewers to lave her dainty hands; My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry; In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns; In cypress chests my arras counterpoints, Costly apparel, tents, and canopies,

Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss'd with pearl,

Valance of Venice gold in needle-work; Pewter and brass, and all things that belongs

Then at my

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

I have a hundred milch-kine to the pail. Six score fat oxen standing in my stalls, 350 And all things answerable to this portion. Myself am struck in years, I must confess; And if I die to-morrow this is hers, If whilst I live she will be only mine.

Tra. That 'only' came well in. Sir, list to me:

I am my father's heir and only son; If I may have your daughter to my wife, I'll leave her houses three or four as good Within rich Pisa's walls as any one Old Signior Gremio has in Padua;

Besides two thousand ducats by the year Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.

What, have I pinch'd you, Signior Gremio? Gre. Two thousand ducats by the year of

That she shall have, besides an argosy That now is lying in Marseilles road.

What, have I chok'd you with an argosy? Tra. Gremio, 'tis known my father hath.

no less Than three great argosies, besides two galliasses.

And twelve tight galleys. These I will assure her.

And twice as much whate'er thou off'rest

Gre. Nay, I have off'red all; I have no more:

And she can have no more than all I have; If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why, then the maid is mine from all the world By your firm promise; Gremio is out-vied.

Bap. I must confess your offer is the best; And let your father make her the assurance, She is your own. Else, you must pardon me; If you should die before him, where's her dower?

Tra. That's but a cavil; he is old, I young.

Gre. And may not young men die as well as old ?

Bap. Well, gentlemen,

I am thus resolv'd: on Sunday next you know

My daughter Katherine is to be married: Now, on the Sunday following shall Bianca Be bride to you, if you make this assurance; If not, to Signior Gremio.

And so I take my leave, and thank you both.

Gre. Adieu, good neighbour.

[Exit Baptista. Now, I fear thee not.

Sirrah young gamester, your father were a

To give thee all, and in his waning age Set foot under thy table. Tut, a toy!

An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy. Exit.

Tra. A vengeance on your crafty withered hide! Yet I have fac'd it with a card of ten.

'Tis in my head to do my master good: I see no reason but suppos'd Lucentio Must get a father, call'd suppos'd Vincentio:

And that's a wonder—fathers commonly Do get their children; but in this case of wooing

ACT THREE

Scene I. Padua. Baptista's house.

Enter Lucentio as Cambio, Hortensio as Licio, and BIANCA.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear; you grow too forward, sir.

Have you so soon forgot the entertainment Her sister Katherine welcom'd you withal? Hor. But, wrangling pedant, this is

The patroness of heavenly harmony. Then give me leave to have prerogative: And when in music we have spent an hour. Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so

To know the cause why music was ordain'd! Was it not to refresh the mind of man After his studies or his usual pain?

Then give me leave to read philosophy. And while I pause serve in your harmony. Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these braves of thine. Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong To strive for that which resteth in my choice.

I am no breeching scholar in the schools, I'll not be tied to hours nor 'pointed times, But learn my lessons as I please myself. 20 And to cut off all strife: here sit we down: Take you your instrument, play you the whiles '

His lecture will be done ere you have tun'd. Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune? Luc. That will be never-tune your instrument.

Bian. Where left we last?

Luc.-Here, madam:

'Hic ibat Simois, hic est Sigeia tellus, Hic steterat Priami regia celsa senis. Bian. Construe them.

Luc. 'Hic ibat' as I told you before-'Simois' I am Lucentio—'hic est' son unto Vincentio of Pisa—'Sigeia tellus' disguised thus to get your love—'Hic steterat' and that Lucentio that comes

298

Hor. Madam, my instrument's in tune. Bian. Let's hear. O fie! the treble jars. Luc. Spit in the hole, man, and tune Bian. Now let me see if I can construe t: 'Hic ibat Simois' I know you not— hic est Sigeia tellus' I trust you not— ' Hic steterat Priami ' take heed he hear us not-' regia ' presume not-' celsa senis ' despair not.

Hor. Madam, 'tis now in tune.

All but the bass. Luc. The bass is right; 'tis the base Hor. knave that jars.

[Aside] How fiery and forward our pedant

Now, for my life, the knave doth court my Hortensio will be quit with thee by chang-

Pedascule, I'll watch you better yet. Bian. In time I may believe, yet I mistrust. Luc. Mistrust it not-for, sure, Æacides Was Ajax, call'd so from his grandfather.

Bian. I must believe my master; else, I promise you,
I should be arguing still upon that doubt;

But let it rest. Now, Licio, to you. Good master, take it not unkindly, pray, 55 That I have been thus pleasant with you both.

Hor. [To Lucentio] You may go walk and give me leave awhile;

My lessons make no music in three parts. Luc. Are you so formal, sir? Well, I must wait.

[Aside] And watch withal; for, but I be deceiv'd,

Our fine musician groweth amorous. Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument To learn the order of my fingering, I must begin with rudiments of art, To teach you gamut in a briefer sort, More pleasant, pithy, and effectual, Than hath been taught by any of my trade:

And there it is in writing fairly drawn.

Bian. [Reads]

" "Gamut" I am, the ground of all accord—

"A re" to plead Hortensio's passion-"B mi" Bianca, take him for thy lord-

"C fa ut" that loves with all affection-"D sol re" one clef, two notes have I-

"E la mi" show pity or I die.'
Call you this gamut? Tut, I like it not! Old fashions please me best; I am not so

To change true rules for odd inventions.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books

And help to dress your sister's chamber up. You know to-morrow is the wedding-day. Bian. Farewell, sweet masters, both; I must be gone.

[Exeunt Bianca and Servant. Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

Exit. Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant:

Methinks he looks as though he were in love.

Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble To cast thy wand'ring eyes on every stale— Seize thee that list. If once I find thee ranging,

Scene II. Padua. Before Baptista's house.

BAPTISTA, GREMIO, Enter TRANIO Lucentio, KATHERINA, BIANCA, LU-CENTIO as Cambio, and Attendants.

Bap. [To Tranio] Signior Lucentio, this is the 'pointed day

That Katherine and Petruchio should be married.

And yet we hear not of our son-in-law. What will be said? What mockery will it be

To want the bridegroom when the priest attends

To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage! What says Lucentio to this shame of ours? Kath. No shame but mine: I must forsooth, be forc'd

To give my hand, oppos'd against my heart.

Unto a mad-brain rudesby, full of spleen, Who woo'd in haste and means to wed at leisure.

I told you, I, he was a frantic fool,

Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour;

And, to be noted for a merry man, He'll woo a thousand, 'point the day of marriage, Bian. Why, I am past my gamut long Make friends invited, and proclaim the banns; Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio. 70 Yet never means to wed where he hath woo'd.

Now must the world point at poor Katherine.

And say 'Lo, there is mad Petruchio's wife. If it would please him come and marry her!

Tra. Patience, good Katherine, and Baptista too.

Upon my life, Petruchio means but well, Whatever fortune stays him from his word. Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise:

80

Though he be merry, yet withal he's honest. Kath. Would Katherine had never seen comes. him though!

[Exit, weeping, followed by Bianca and others. Bap. Go, girl, I cannot blame thee now to weep,

For such an injury would vex a very saint:

Much more a shrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter BIONDELLO.

Bion. Master, master! News, and such old news as you never heard of! Bab. Is it new and old too? How may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news to hear of Petruchio's coming?

Bab. Is he come? Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am and sees you there. Tra. But, say, what to thine old news? Bian. Why, Petruchio is coming-in a new hat and an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches thrice turn'd; a pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another lac'd; an old rusty sword ta'en out of the town armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points; his horse hipp'd, with an old mothy saddle First were we sad, fearing you would not and stirrups of no kindred; besides. possess'd with the glanders and like to mose in the chine, troubled with the lampass, infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, sped with spavins, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, sway'd in the back and shoulder-shotten, near-legg'd before, and with a half-cheek'd bit, and a head-stall of sheep's leather which, being restrain'd to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots; one girth six times piec'd, and a woman's crupper of velure, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in studs, and here and there piec'd with pack-thread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir, his lackey, for all the world caparison'd like the horse—with a linen stock on one leg and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gart'red with a red and blue list; an old hat, and the humour of forty fancies prick'd in't for a feather; a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian footboy or a gentleman's lackey.

Tra. 'Tis some odd humour pricks him to this fashion: .

Yet oftentimes he goes but mean-apparell'd.

Bap. I am glad he's come, howsoe'er he Bion. Why, sir, he comes not. Bap. Didst thou not say he comes?

Bion. Who? that Petruchio came? Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came.

Bion. No, sir; I say his horse comes with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that's all one. Bion. Nay, by Saint Jamy, I hold you a penny, A horse and a man

Is more than one, And yet not many.

Enter PETRUCHIO and GRUMIO.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? Who's at home?

Bap. You are welcome, sir.

35

Pet. And yet I come not well. Bap. And yet you halt not.

Tra. Not so well apparell'd As I wish you were.

Pet. Were it better, I should rush in thus. But where is Kate? Where is my lovely bride?

How does my father? Gentles, methinks vou frown:

And wherefore gaze this goodly company As if they saw some wondrous monument, Some comet or unusual prodigy?

Bap. Why, sir, you know this is your wedding-day.

come:

Now sadder, that you come so unprovided. Fie, doff this habit, shame to your estate. An eye-sore to our solemn festival!

Tra. And tell us what occasion of import Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife,

And sent you hither so unlike yourself? 100 Pet. Tedious it were to tell, and harsh to hear: Sufficeth I am come to keep my word, Though in some part enforced to digress, Which at more leisure I will so excuse As you shall well be satisfied withal. But where is Kate? I stay too long from her; The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.

Tra. See not your bride in these unreverent robes;

Go to my chamber, put on clothes of mine. Pet. Not I, believe me; thus I'll visit her. Bap. But thus, I trust, you will not marry

III Pet. Good sooth, even thus; therefore ha' done with words;

To me she's married, not unto my clothes. Could I repair what she will wear in me As I can change these poor accoutrements, 'Twere well for Kate and better for myself. But what a fool am I to chat with you. When I should bid good morrow to my bride

And seal the title with a lovely kiss! [Exeunt Petruchio and Grumio.

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attıre.

We will persuade him, be it possible, To put on better ere he go to church.

Bap. I'll after him and see the event of this.

[Exeunt Baptista, Gremio, Biondello. and Attendants. Tra. But to her love concerneth us to add Her father's liking; which to bring to pass. As I before imparted to your worship,

I am to get a man-whate'er he be It skills not much; we'll fit him to our turn-

And he shall be Vincentio of Pisa, And make assurance here in Padua Of greater sums than I have promised. So shall you quietly enjoy your hope

And marry sweet Bianca with consent. Luc. Were it not that my fellow schoolmaster

Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly, 135 Twere good, methinks, to steal our And I, seeing this, came thence for very marriage;

Which once perform'd, let all the world say

I'll keep mine own despite of all the world. Tra. That by degrees we mean to look

And watch our vantage in this business; We'll over-reach the greybeard, Gremio, The narrow-prying father, Minola, The quaint musician, amorous Licio-All for my master's sake, Lucentio.

Re-enter GREMIO.

Gremio, Signior came you from the church? 145 school.

Tra. And is the bride and bridegroom coming home?

Gre. A bridegroom, say you? 'Tis a groom indeed, find.

Tra. Curster than she? Why, 'tis impossible.

Gre. Why, he's a devil, a devil, a very fiend.

Tra. Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.

I'll tell you, Sir Lucentio: when the priest Should ask if Katherine should be his wife, Ay, by gogs-wouns' quoth he, and swore so loud 156

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book:

And as he stoop'd again to take it up. This mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff

That down fell priest and book, and book and priest.

'Now take them up,' quoth he 'if any list.

Tra. What said the wench, when he rose again?

Gre. Trembled and shook, for why he stamp'd and swore

As if the vicar meant to cozen him.

But after many ceremonies done 165 He calls for wine: 'A health!' quoth he. as if

He had been abroad, carousing to his mates After a storm; quaff'd off the muscadel, And threw the sops all in the sexton's face, Having no other reason But that his beard grew thin and hungerly

And seem'd to ask him sops as he was drinking,

This done, he took the bride about the neck. And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack

That at the parting all the church did echo. shame :

And after me, I know, the rout is coming. Such a mad marriage never was before Hark, hark! I hear the minstrels play. Music blavs

Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHERINA, BIANCA, BAPTISTA, HORTENSIO, GRUMIO, and

Train. Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains. I know you think to dine with me to-day. And have prepar'd great store of wedding cheer;

But so it is-my haste doth call me hence, Gre. As willingly as e'er I came from And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bap. Is't possible you will away tonight?

Pet. I must away to-day before night come.

A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall Make it no wonder; if you knew my business.

> You would entreat me rather go than stay. And, honest company, I thank you all That have beheld me give away myself 190

> To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife. Dine with my father, drink a health to me, Gre. Tut, she's a lamb, a dove, a fool, to For I must hence; and farewell to you all. Tra. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

> Pet. It may not be. Gre. Let me entreat you. Pet. It cannot be.

> > 301

Kath. Let me entreat vou. Pet. I am content.

Kath. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay;

But yet not stay, entreat me how you can. Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Pet. Grumio, my horse. Gru. Ay, sir, they be ready; the oats have eaten the horses.

Kath. Nay, then,

Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day: No, nor to-morrow, not till I please myself. The door is open, sir; there lies your way; You may be jogging whiles your boots are green; For me, I'll not be gone till I please myself. 'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom That take it on you at the first so roundly. Pet. O Kate, content thee; prithee be not angry.

Kath. I will be angry; what hast thou to do?

Father, be quiet; he shall stay my leisure. Gre. Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner.

I see a woman may be made a fool If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command. Obey the bride, you that attend on her;

Go to the feast, revel and domineer. Carouse full measure to her maidenhead: Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves. But for my bonny Kate, she must with

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor

I will be master of what is mine own- 225 She is my goods, my chattels, she is my house.

My household stuff, my field, my barn, My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing, And here she stands; touch her whoever dare; I'll bring mine action on the proudest he That stops my way in Padua. Grumio, Draw forth thy weapon; we are beset with thieves:

Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Fear not, sweet wench; they shall not touch thee, Kate;

I'll buckler thee against a million. [Exeunt Petruchio, Katherina, and Grumio. Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Gre. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing.

Tra. Of all mad matches, never was the vour sister?

Bian. That, being mad herself, she's madly mated.

Gre. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kated. Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridegroom wants

For to supply the places at the table, You know there wants no junkets at the feast.

Lucentio, you shall supply the brideroom's place; And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bab. She shall, Lucentio. Come, gentlemen, let's go. [Exeunt.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. Petruchio's country house. Enter GRUMIO.

Gru. Fie, fie on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all foul ways! Was ever man so beaten? Was ever man so ray'd? Was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm them. Now were not I a little pot and soon hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me. But I with blowing the fire shall warm myself; for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Holla, ho! Curtis!

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that calls so coldly?

Gru. A piece of ice. If thou doubt it, thou mayst slide from my shoulder to my heel with no greater a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis.

Curt. Is my master and his wife coming. Grumio ?

Gru. O, ay, Curtis, ay; and therefore fire, fire; cast on no water.

Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported?

Gru. She was, good Curtis, before this frost; but thou know'st winter tames man, woman, and beast; for it hath tam'd my old master, and my new mistress, and myself, fellow Curtis.

Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast.

Gru. Am I but three inches? Why, thy horn is a foot, and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand -she being now at hand—thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

like. Curt. I prithee, good Grumio, tell me Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of how goes the world? Gru. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine; and therefore fire. Do thy duty, horse-tail till they kiss their hands. and have thy duty, for my master and they all ready? mistress are almost frozen to death.

Curt. There's fire ready; and therefore.

much news as wilt thou.

Curt. Come, you are so full of convcatching! Gru. Why, therefore, fire; for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, rushes strew'd, cobwebs swept, the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, the carpets laid, and everything in order?

Curt. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news.

Gru. First know my horse is tired: my master and mistress fall'n out.

Curt. How?

Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale.

Curt. Let's ha't, good Grumio.

Gru. Lend thine ear.

Curt. Here.

Gru. There.

Striking him. Curt. This 'tis to feel a tale, not to hear

Gru. And therefore 'tis call'd a sensible tale; and this cuff was but to knock at your ear and beseech list'ning. begin: Imprimis, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress—

Curt. Both of one horse?

Gru. What's that to thee?

Curt. Why, a horse.

Gru. Tell thou the tale. But hadst thou not cross'd me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoil'd, how he left her with the horse upon her, how he beat me because her horse stumbled, how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me, how he swore, how she pray'd that never pray'd before, how I cried, how the horses ran away, how her bridle was burst, how I lost my crupper-with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienc'd to thy grave.

Curt. By this reck'ning he is more shrew than she.

Gru. Ay, and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find when he comes home. But what talk I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop, and the rest; let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd and their garters of an indifferent knit; let them curtsy with their left legs, and not presume to touch a hair of my master's good Grumio, the news? 35 Cust. Do you hear, ho? You must meet Gru. Why, 'Jack boy! ho, boy!' and as my master, to countenance my mistress. 86 Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curt. Who knows not that?

Gru. Thou, it seems, that calls for company to countenance her.

Curt. I call them forth to credit her. Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter four or five Servingmen.

Nath. Welcome home, Grumio! Phil. How now, Grumio! Jos. What, Grumio!

Nich. Fellow Grumio!

Nath. How now, old lad!

Gru. Welcome, you!—how now, you!what, you !-fellow, you !-and thus much for greeting. Now, my spruce companions. is all ready, and all things neat?

Nath. All things is ready. How near is our master?

Gru. E'en at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not-Cock's passion, silence! I hear my master.

Enter PETRUCHIO and KATHERINA.

Pet. Where be these knaves? What, no man at door To hold my stirrup nor to take my horse!

Where is Nathamel, Gregory, Philip? All Serv Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Here, sir! here, sir! here, sir! here,

You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms! What, no attendance? no regard? no duty? Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before. Pet. You peasant swain! you whoreson malt-horse drudge!

Did I not bid thee meet me in the park And bring along these rascal knaves with thee? Gru. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully

And Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i'

th' heel: There was no link to colour Peter's hat,

And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing;

There were none tine but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory;

The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly; Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.

Pet. Go, rascals, go and fetch my supper in. Execut some of the Servingmen.

[Sings] Where is the life that late I led? Where are those—

95

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW

Sit down, Kate, and welcome. Soud, soud soud, soud!

Re-enter Servants with supper.

Why, when, I say? Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.

Off with my boots, you rogues! you villains, when?

[Sings] It was the friar of orders grey, As he forth walked on his wav-

Out, you rogue! you pluck my foot awry; Take that, and mend the plucking off the other. [Strikes him.

Be merry, Kate. Some water, here, what, ho! 133

Enter One with water.

Where's my spaniel Troilus? Sirrah, get vou hence.

And bid my cousin Ferdinand come hither: [Exit Servingman. One, Kate, that you must kiss and be acquainted with. Where are my slippers? Shall I have some water? Come. Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily.

You whoreson villain! will you let it fall? [Strikes him.

Kath. Patience, I pray you; 'twas a fault unwilling. LIO Pet. A whoreson, beetle-headed, flap-ear'd knave! Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach. Will you give thanks, sweet Kate, or else shall I? What's this? Mutton?

1 Serv.

Ay.
Who brought it? Pet. Peter.

Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat. What dogs are these? Where is the rascal cook?

How durst you villains bring it from the dresser

And serve it thus to me that love it not? There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all;

[Throws the meat, &c., at them. You heedless joltheads and unmanner'd slaves! What, do you grumble? I'll be with you [Exeunt Servants. straight. Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet;

The meat was well, if you were so contented. Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away,

And I expressly am forbid to touch it; 155 For it engenders choler, plantath anger; And better 'twere that both of us did fast, Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,

Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Be patient; to-morrow't shall be mended. And for this night we'll fast for company. Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Servants severally.

Nath. Peter, didst ever see the like? Peter. He kills her in her own humour.

Re-enter CURTIS.

Gru. Where is he? 165 Curt. In her chamber. Making a sermon of continency to her,

And rails, and swears, and rates, that she, poor soul,

Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak.

And sits as one new risen from a dream. 170 Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exeunt.

Re-enter PETRUCHIO.

Pet. Thus have I politicly begun my reign.

And 'tis my hope to end successfully. My falcon now is sharp and passing empty. And till she stoop she must not be fullgorg'd,

For then she never looks upon her lure. Another way I have to man my haggard, To make her come, and know her keeper's call,

That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites

That bate and beat, and will not be obedient. τ80

She eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat: Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not;

As with the meat, some undeserved fault I'll find about the making of the bed . And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster, This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:

Ay, and amid this hurly I intend That all is done in reverend care of her-And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night: And if she chance to nod I'll rail and brawl And with the clamour keep her still awake. This is a way to kill a wife with kindness, And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour.

He that knows better how to tame a shrew, Now let him speak; 'tis charity to show. [Exit.

Scene II. Padua. Before Baptista's house. Enter TRANIO as Lucentio, and HORTENSIO as Licio.

Tra. Is't possible, friend Licio, that Mistress Bianca

Doth fancy any other but Lucentio? I tell you, sir, she bears me fair in hand. Hor. Sir, to satisfy you in what I have said,

Stand by and mark the manner of his teaching [They stand aside.

Enter BIANCA and LUCEPTIO as Cambio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profit you to what you read?

Bian. What, master, read you? First resolve me that.

Love'.

Bian. And may you prove, sii, master of your art!

While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart.

They retire. Hor. Quick proceeders, marry! Now tell me, I pray,

You that durst swear that your Mistiess Bianca

Lov'd none in the world so well as Lucentio. Tra. O despiteful love! unconstant womankind!

I tell thee, Licio, this is wonderful. Hor. Mistake no more: I am not Licio, Nor a musician as I seem to be; But one that scorn to live in this disguise For such a one as leaves a gentleman And makes a god of such a cullion. Know, sir, that I am call'd Hostensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often

Of your entire affection to Bianca; And since mine eyes are witness of her In gart and countenance surely like a lightness. I will with you, if you be so contented, Forswear Bianca and her love for ever

Hor. Sec, how they kiss and court! Signior Lucentio,

Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow Never to woo her more, but do forswear her, As one unworthy all the former favours 30 That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath.

Never to marry with her though she would entreat;

Fie on her! See how beastly she doth court him!

Hor. Would all the would but he had quite forsworn!

For me, that I may surely keep mine oath, I will be married to a wealthy widow Ere three days pass, which hath as long lov'd me

As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard.

And so farewell, Signior Lucentio. Kindness in women, not their beauteous Shall win my love; and so I take my leave, in resolution as I swore before, (E.J. Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace

As longeth to a lover's blessed case! Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle lore, And have forsworn you with Hortensio.

Bian. Tranio, you jest: but have you both forsworn me?

Tru. Mistress, we have.

Then we are rid of Licio. Tra. I' faith, he'll have a lusty widow now, Luc. I read that I profess, 'The Art to That shall be woo'd and wedded in a day. Bian. God give him joy!

Tra. Ay, and he'll tame her.

tongue.

He says so, Tranio. Tra. Faith, he is gone unto the tamingschool.

Bian. The taming-school! What, is there such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master,

That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long, To tame a shiew and charm her chattering

Enter BIONDELLO.

Bion. O master, master, I have watch'd so long That I am dog-weary; but at last I spied 20 An ancient angel coming down the hill Will serve the turn.

What is he, Biondello? Bion. Mastei, a inercatante or a pedant, I know not what; but formal in apparel, father.

Luc. And what of him, Transo? Tra. It he be credulous and trust my tale, I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio, And give assurance to Baptista Minola As if he were the right Vincentio. Take in your love, and then let me alone. Exeunt Lucentio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

And you, sir; you are welcome. Tra. Travel you tar on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir. at the farthest for a week or two;

But then up farther, and as far as Rome; And so to Tripoli, if God lend me life.

Tra. What countryman, I pray? Of Mantua. Tra. Of Mantua, sir? Marry, God forbid,

And come to Padua, careless of your life! Ped. My life, sir! How, I pray? For that goes hard.

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua To come to Padua. Know you not the cause?

Your ships are stay'd at Venice; and the Upon entreaty have a present aims: Duke.

come, You might have heard it else proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas, sir, it is worse for me than so ! For I have bills for money by exchange From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy, of this will I do, and this I will advise you-First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been, Pisa renowned for grave citizens.

Tra. Among them know you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him,

A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to Bion. [Aside] As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity, This favour will I do you for his sake; And think it not the worst of all your fortunes That you are like to Sir Vincentio. His name and credit shall you undertake, And in my house you shall be friendly

Tra. Then go with me to make the matter good.

This, by the way, I let you understand: 115 My father is here look'd for every day To pass assurance of a dow'r in marriage 'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here.

In all these circumstances I'll instruct you. Go with me to clothe you as becomes you. Exeunt.

Scene III. Petruchio's house.

Enter KATHERINA and GRUMIO.

Gru. No, no, forsooth; I dare not for my life.

Kath. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Beggars that come unto my father's door 306

If not, elsewhere they meet with charity: For private quarrel 'twixt your Duke and But I, who never knew how to entreat. Nor never needed that I should entreat. Am starv'd for meat, giddy for lack of sleep;

With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed:

And that which spites me more than all these wants-

He does it under name of perfect love: As who should say, if I should sleep or eat,

'Twere deadly sickness or else present death.

I prithee go and get me some repast: I care not what, so it be wholesome food. Gru. What say you to a neat's foot? Kath. 'Tis passing good; I prithee let me have it.

Gru. I fear it is too choleric a meat. How say you to a fat tripe finely broil'd? Kath. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me.

Gru. I cannot tell; I fear 'tis choleric. What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?

Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon. Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Kath. Why then the beef, and let the mustard rest. Gru. Nay, then I will not; you shall have the mustard

Or else you get no beef of Grumio.

Kath. Then both, or one, or anything thou wilt.

Gru. Why then the mustard without the beef.

Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave. Beats him. Ped. O, sir, I do; and will repute you That feed'st me with the very name of meat.

Sorrow on thee and all the pack of you That triumph thus upon my misery! Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter PETRUCHIO, and HORTENSIO with meat.

Pet. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all amort?

Hor. Mistress, what cheer?

Faith, as cold as can be. Kath. Pet. Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.

Here, love, thou seest how diligent I am, To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee. I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.

What, not a word? Nay, then thou lov'st it not,

And all my pains is sorted to no proof. Here, take away this dish.

I pray you, let it stand. Kath.

Scene 31

Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks:

And so shall mine, before you touch the O mercy, God! what masquing stuff is meat.

Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame.

Come, Mistress Kate, I'll bear you company Pet. [Aside] Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lovest me.-

Much good do it unto thy gentle heart! Kate, eat apace. And now, my honey love, Will we return unto thy father's house And revel it as bravely as the best,

With silken coats and caps, and golden rings,

With ruffs and cuffs and farthingales and things,

With scarfs and fans and double change of brav'ry,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all the knav'ry. What, hast thou din'd? The tailor stavs thy lessure, To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Lay forth the gown.

Enter Haberdasher.

What news with you, sir? Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Why, this was moulded on a Pet. porringer:

A velvet dish. Fie, fie! 'tis lewd and filthy; Why, 'tis a cockle or a walnut-shell, A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap.

Away with it. Come, let me have a bigger. Kath. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit Brav'd in mine own house with a skein of the time,

And gentlewomen wear such caps as these. Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too,

And not till then.

Hor. [Aside] That will not be in haste. Kath. Why, sir, I trust I may have leave to speak;

And speak I will. I am no child, no babe. Your betters have endur'd me say my mind, And if you cannot, best you stop your ears. My tongue will tell the anger of my heart, Or else my heart, concealing it, will break; And rather than it shall, I will be free Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Pet. Why, thou say'st true; it is a paltry cap,

A custard-coffin, a bauble, a silken pie : I love thee well in that thou lik'st it not. Kath. Love me or love me not, I like the What's this? A sleeve? 'Tis like a demicannon.

What, up and down, carv'd like an applefart?

Here's snip and nip and cut and slish and slash.

Like to a censer in a barber's shop. Why, what a devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this?

Hor. [Aside] I see she's like to have neither cap nor gown.

Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well.

According to the fashion and the time. Pet. Marry, and did: but if you rememb'red,

I did not bid you mar it to the time. Go, hop me over every kennel home, For you shall hop without my custom, sir. 50 I'll none of it; hence! make your best

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments; More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable:

Belike you mean to make a puppet of me. Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee. Tai. She says your worship means to make a puppet of her.

Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest. thou thread, thou thimble,

Thou yard, three-quarters, half-vard. quarter, nail, be fac'd nor brav'd. I say unto thee, I bid thy master cut out the gown; but I did not bid him cut it to pieces. Ergo, thou liest.

Tai. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify.

Pet. Read it.

Gru. The note lies in's throat, if he say I

Tai. [Reads] 'Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown '-

Gru. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it and beat me to death with a bottom of brown bread: I said a gown.

Pet. Proceed.

Tai. [Reads] 'With a small compass'd cape'-

Gru. I confess the cape.

Tai. [Reads] 'With a trunk sleeve'-130

Gru. I confess two sleeves.

Tai. [Reads] ' The sleeves curiously cut.' Pet. Ay, there's the villainy.

Gru. Error i' th' bill, sir; error i' th' bill! I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sew'd up again; and that I'll prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tai. This is true that I say; an I had thee in place where, thou shouldst know it.

Gru. I am for thee straight; take thou the bill, give me thy mete-yard, and spare not me.

Hor. God-a-mercy, Grumio! Then he shall have no odds.

Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not 151

Gru. You are i' th' right, sir; 'tis for my mistress.

Pet. Go, take it up unto thy master's use. Gru. Villain, not for thy life! Take up my mistress' gown for thy master's use! Pet. Why, sir, what's your conceit in that? Gru. O, sir, the conceit is deeper than you think for. Take up my mistress' gown to his master's use!

O fie, fie, fie!

Pet. [Aside] Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor paid.-

Go take it hence; be gone, and say no more.

Hor. Tailor, I'll pay thee for thy gown to-morrow;

Take no unkindness of his hasty words. Away, I say; commend me to thy master.

Let's see: I think 'tis now some seven o'clock.

And well we may come there by dinnertime.

Kath. I dare assure you, sir, 'tis almost two,

And 'twill be supper-time ere you come there.

Pet. It shall be seven ere I go to horse. Look what I speak, or do, or think to do, You are still crossing it. Sirs, let't alone; I will not go to-day; and ere I do, It shall be what o'clock I say it is.

Hor. Why, so this gallant will command the sun.

Scene IV. Padua. Before Baptista's house. Enter Transo as Lucentio, and the Pedant dress'd like Vincentio.

Tra. Sir, this is the house; please it you that I call?

Ped. Ay, what else? And, but I be deceived.

Signior Baptista may remember me Near twenty years ago in Genoa,

Where we were lodgers at the Pegasus. Tra. 'Tis well; and hold your own, in any case,

With such austerity as longeth to a father.

Enter BIONDELLO.

Ped. I warrant you. But, sir, here comes your boy;

'Twere good he were school'd.

Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah Biondello, Now do your duty throughly, I advise you. Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.

Bion. Tut, fear not me.

Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

Bion. I told him that your father was at Venice,

And that you look'd for him this day in Padua.

Tra. Th'art a tall fellow; hold thee that to drink.

Here comes Baptista. ance, sir.

Enier Baptista, and Lucentio as Cambio. Signior Baptista, you are happily met.

[To the Fedant] Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of;

I pray you stand good father to me now; Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft, son!

Sir, by your leave: having come to Padua To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio Made me acquainted with a weighty cause Of love between your daughter and himself: And-for the good report I hear of you, And for the love he beareth to your daughter,

And she to him-to stay him not too long. I am content, in a good father's care, To have him match'd; and, if you please to like

No worse than I, upon some agreement Me shall you find ready and willing With one consent to have her so bestow'd: For curious I cannot be with you, Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to

Your plainness and your shortness please

Or both dissemble deeply their affections: And therefore, if you say no more than church is at your command at all hours, 86

That like a father you will deal with him. And pass my daughter a sufficient dower, The match is made, and all is done-Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Tra. I thank you, sir. Where then do you know best

As shall with either part's agreement stand? Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio, for you know

Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants;

Besides, old Gremio is heark'ning still, And happily we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, an it like you. There doth my father lie; and there this night We'll pass the business privately and well. Send for your daughter by your servant

Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone. Exit Biondello. Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way?

Welcome! One mess is like to be your cheer:

Come, sir; we will better it in Pisa. Bap. I follow you. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Lucentio as Cambio, and BIONDELLO.

Bion. Cambio.

Luc. What say'st thou, Biondello?

Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you? Luc. Brondello, what of that?

Bion. Faith, nothing; but has left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.

Luc. I pray thee moralize them.

Bion. Then thus: Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.

Luc. And what of him?

Bion. His daughter is to be brought by

Luc. And then?

Bion. The old priest at Saint Luke's Luc. And what of all this?

Bion. I cannot tell, except they are busied about a counterfeit assurance. Take your assurance of her, cum privilegio ad imprimendum solum; to th' church take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses.

If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,

But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

Luc. Hear'st thou, Biondello? Bion. I cannot tarry. I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke's to bid the priest be ready to come against you [Exit. come with your appendix.

SCENE V. A public road.

Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHERINA, HORTENSIO, and Servants.

Pet. Come on, a God's name: once more toward our father's.

Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!

Kath. The moon? The sun! It is not moonlight now.

Pet. I say it is the moon that shines so bright.

Kath. I know it is the sun that shines so bright.

Pet. Now by my mother's son, and that's myself.

It shall be moon, or star, or what I list, Or ere I journey to your father's house. Go on and fetch our horses back again. Evermore cross'd and cross'd: nothing but cross'd!

Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go. Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far.

And be it moon, or sun, or what you please; And if you please to call it a rush-candle, Henceforth I vow it shall be so for me. Pet. I say it is the moon.

Kath. I know it is the moon. Pet. Nay, then you lie; it is the blessed sun. Kath. Then, God be bless'd, it is the blessed sun;

But sun it is not, when you say it is not: And the moon changes even as your mind. What you will have it nam'd, even that it is, And so it shall be so for Katherine.

Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways, the field is

Pet. Why, how now, Kate, I hope thou art not mad!

This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, withered.

And not a maiden, as thou sayst he is. Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking

That have been so bedazzled with the sun That everything I look on seemeth green: Now I perceive thou art a reverend father. Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking.

Pet. Do, good old grandstre, and withal make known

Which way thou travellest—if along with us.

We shall be joyful of thy company. Vin. Fair sir, and you my merry mistress. That with your strange encounter much amaz'd me, My name is call'd Vincentio, my dwelling Pisa,

And bound I am to Padua, there to visit 55 A son of mine, which long I have not seen. Pet. What is his name?

Enter Petruchio, Katherina, Vincentio. GRUMIO, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door; this is Lucentio's house:

My father's bears more toward the marketplace;

Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir. Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go;

I think I shall command your welcome here.

And by all likelihood some cheer is toward. [Knocks.

Gre. They're busy within; you were best knock louder.

Pedant looks out of the window.

Ped. What's he that knocks as he would beat down the gate? Vin. Is Signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merry withal? Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself; he shall need none so long as I live. Pet. Nay, I told you your son was well beloved in Padua. Do you hear, sir? To leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you tell Signioi Lucentio that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with hım.

Ped. Thou liest: his father is come from Padua, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father? Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Vincential Why, how now, Pet. [To gentleman! Why, this is flat knavery to take upon you another man's name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain; I believe 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter BIONDELLO.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together. God send 'em good shipping! But who is here? Mine old master, Now we are undone and forthcoming. Vincentio ! brought to nothing.

Vin. [Seeing Biondello] Come hither.

crack-hemp.

Bion. I hope I may choose, sir, Vui. Come hither, you rogue.

What, have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you! Ne, sir. I could mut forget you, for I never saw you before its all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father. Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old worshipful old master? Yes, marry, sir; see where he looks out of the window.

Vm. Is't so, indeed? [He beats Biondello. Bion. Help, help! Here's a madman will muider me.

Ped Help, son! help, Signior Baptista! Exit from above. Pet Prithee, Kate, let's stand aside and see the end of this contioversy. [They stand aside.

Re-enter Pedant below ; BAPTISTA, TRANIO.

and Servants. Tra. Sir, what are you that offer to beat my servant? Vin. What am I, sir? Nay, what are you, sit? O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloak, and a copatain hat! O, I am undone! I am undone While I play the good husband at home, my son and my scrvant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what's the matter? 60 Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman. Why, sir, what 'cerns it you if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it. Vin. Thy father! O villain! he is a sailmaker in Bergamo. Bap. You mistake, sir; you mistake, sir.

Pray, what do you think is his name? 69 Vin. His name! As if I knew not his name! I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! His name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, Signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O, he hath murd'red his master! Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the Duke's name. O, my son, my son! Tell me, thou villam, where is my son, Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer.

Enter One with an Officer.

Carry this mad knave to the gaol. Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be

Vin. Carry me to the gaol!

Gre. Stay, Officer; he shall not go to prison.

80

Bab. Talk not. Signior Gremio: I say he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, Signior Baptista, lest you be cony-catch'd in this business; I dare swear this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear if thou dar'st.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it. Tra. Then thou wert best say that I am not Lucentio. Gre. Yes. I know thee to be Signior

Lucentio.

Bab. Away with the dotard; to the gaol with him! Vin. Thus strangers may be hal'd and abus'd. O monstrous villain! Re-enter BIONDELLO, with LUCENTIO and BIANCA.

Bion. O. we are spoil'd: and yonder he is! Deny him, forswear him, or else we are [Exeunt Biondello, Tranio, and all undone.

Pedant, as fast as may be. Luc. [Kneeling] Pardon, sweet father. Vin. Lives my sweet son?

Bian. Pardon, dear father.

How hast thou offended? Ban. Where is Lucentio?

Here's Lucentio. Right son to the right Vincentio, That have by marriage made thy daughter

While counterfeit supposes blear'd thine. While I with self-same kindness welcome

Gre. Here's packing, with a witness, to Brother Petruchio, sister Katherina, Tranio. That fac'd and brav'd me in this matter so? Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio? Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio. Love wrought these miracles.

Bianca's love Made me exchange my state with Tranio, While he did bear my countenance in the town: And happily I have arrived at the last Unto the wished haven of my bliss.

What Tranio did, myself enforc'd him to; Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake. Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose that would have sent me to the gaol.

Bap. [To Lucentio] But do you hear, sir? Have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you, go to; but I will in to be revenged for this villainy. [Exit.

Bap. And I to sound the depth of this knavery. [Exit.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown. [Exeunt Lucentio and Bianca. Gre. My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;

Out of hope of all but my share of the feast.

Kath. Husband, let's follow to see the end of this ado.

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will. Kath. What, in the midst of the street? Pet. What, art thou asham'd of me? 130 Kath. No. sir; God forbid; but asham'd to kiss.

Pet. Why, then, let's home again. Come. sirrah, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss; now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well? Come, my sweet Kate:

Better once than pever, for never too late. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Lucentio's house.

Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, Bianca, Petru-KATHERINA, Hortensio, and Widow. The Servingmen with TRANIO, BIONDELLO, and GRUMIO, bringing in a banquet.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree;

And time it is when raging war is done To smile at scapes and perils overblown. My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome, thine. And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow. Feast with the best, and welcome to my house.

My banquet is to close our stomachs up After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down;

For now we sit to chat as well as eat.

[They sit. Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!

Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.

Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.

Wid. Then never trust me if I be afeard. Pet. You are very sensible, and yet you miss my sense:

I mean Hortensio is afcard of you.

Wid. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round.

Pet. Roundly replied. Kath. Mistress, how mean you that?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him. Pet. Conceives by me l How likes Hortensio that?

Hor. My widow says thus she conceived her tale. Pet. Very well mended. that, good widow. Kiss Ium Kath. ' He that is giddy thinks the world turns round. I pray you tell me what you meant by that. Wid. Your husband, being troubled with Let's each one sena shrew. Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe : To come at first when he doth send for her. And now you know my meaning. Kath. A very mean meaning. Right, I mean you. Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you. Pet. To her, Kate! Hor. To her, widow! Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down. Hor. That's my office. Pet. Spoke like an officer-ha' to thee, [Drinks to Hortensio. Bap. How likes Gremio these quickwitted folks? Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together Bian. Head and butt! An hasty-witter

Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since " ". have begun,

Have at you for a bitter jest or two.

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush, And then pursue me as you draw your bow.

You are welcome all.

[Exeunt Bianca, Katherina, and Widow. Pet. She hath prevented me. Here. Signior Tranio.

This bird you sim'd at, though you hit her not;

Therefore a health to all that shot and miss'd. Tra. O, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his grevhound. Which runs himself, and catches for his master. Pet. A good swift simile, but something currish.

Tra. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself:

'Tis thought your deer does hold you at a Bap. O, O, Petruchio! Tranio hits you

Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.

Hor. Confess, confess; hath he not hit vou here?

For. 'A mas a limbe guill'of the, I confess : illid, as the jest did skipce away from me. for The ben to one it mount? I you two cutanget.

bhall win the wager which we will propose. Hor. Contenc. What's the wager?

Liec. Twenty crowns. Pet. Twenty crowns !

I'll venture so much of my hawk or hound. But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then. Hor.

Content. Pet.

A match! 'tis done. Hor. Who shall begin? That will I.

Co. Biondello, bid your mistress come to Bion. I go. Bab. Son, I'll be your half Bianca comes. Lac. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-entier BIONDELLO.

May now! what news?

Sir, my mistress sends you word 198 932. "it'e' she is busy and she cannot come. "el. How! She's busy, and she cannot come!

is that an answer? Gire. Ay, and a kind one too. Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse. Pet. I hope better.

Hor. Sırrah Biondello, go and entreat my To come to me forthwith. [Exit Biondello.

O, ho! entreat her! Nay, then she must needs come. Hor. I am afraid, sir,

Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter BIONDELLO.

Now, where's my wife? Bion. She says you have some goodly jest in hand:

She will not come: she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come! O vile,

Intolerable, not to be endur'd!

Sirrah Grumio, go to your mistiess; Say I command her come to me.

[Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer. What? Pet. Hor. She will not.

313

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Re-enter KATHERINA.

Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Katherina!

Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me? 100
Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?

Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.

Pet. Go, fetch them hither; if they deny to come,

S. singe me them soundly forth unto their husbands.

Away. I say, and bring them hither straight. [Exit Katherina. Lin Here is a wonder, if you talk of a Monder.

Flor. And so it is. I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life, Au awful rule, and right supremacy;

And, to be short, what not that's sweet and happy.

Bap. Now fair befall thee, good Petruchiol The wager thou hast won; and I will add Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns; Another dowry to another daughter, 114 For she is chang'd, as she had never been. Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet.

And show more sign of her obedience, Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter Katherina with Bianca and Widow.

See where she comes, and brings your froward wives

As prisoners to her womanly persuasion. 120 Katherine, that cap of yours becomes you not:

Off with that bauble, throw it underfoot. [Katherina complies.

Wid. Lord, let me never have a cause to sigh

Till I be brought to such a silly pass!

Bian. Fie! what a foolish duty call you
this?

Luc. I would your duty were as foolish too;
The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,

Hath cost me a hundred crowns since supper-time!

Bian. The more fool you for laying on my duty.

Pet. Katherine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women r30
What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, you're mocking; we will have no telling.

Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Pel. I say she shall. And first begin with her.

Kath. Fie, fie! unknit that threatening unkind brow,

And dark not scornful glances from those eyes

To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor. It blots thy beauty as frosts do bite the meads,

Confounds thy fame as whirlwinds shake fair buds,

And in no sense is meet or amiable.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled—

Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty; And while it is so, none so dry or thirsty Will deign to sip or touch one drop of it. 145 Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,

Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,

And for thy maintenance commits his body To painful labour both by sea and land, To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,

Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;

And craves no other tribute at thy hands But love, fair looks, and true obedience— Too little payment for so great a debt. Such duty as the subject owes the prince,

Even such a woman oweth to her husband; And when she is froward, peevish, sullen, sour,

And not obedient to his honest will, What is she but a foul contending rebel And graceless traitor to her loving lord? I am asham'd that women are so simple To offer war where they should kneel for peace;

Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,

When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.

Why are our bodies soft and weak and smooth, 165
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world.

But that our soft conditions and our hearts hould well agree with our external parts? Come, come, you froward and unable worms!

My mind hath been as big as one of yours, My heart as great, my reason haply more, To bandy word for word and frown for frown;

But now I see our lances are but straws, Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,

That seeming to be most which we indeed least are.

hen vail your stomachs, for it is no boot, and place your hands below your husband's foot;

n token of which duty, if he please,

My hand is ready, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why, there's a wench! Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

Vin. 'Tis a good hearing when children are toward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing when women are froward.

Pet. Come, Kate. we'll to bed. 184

We three are married, but you two are sped. [To Lucenuo] 'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old 'ad, for thou And being a winner, God give you good shalt ha't.

[Exeunt Petruchio and Kathering. Hor. Now go thy ways; thou hast tam'd a curst shrow. Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tam'd so. Exeunt.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

THE KING OF FRANCE. THE DUKE OF FLORENCE. BERTRAM, Count of Rousillon. LAFEU, an old lord. PAROLLES, a follower of Bertram. Two French Lords, serving with Bertram. servants to the Countess LAVACHE, a clown, of Rousillon. A Page, Countess of Rousillon, mother to Bertram. HELENA, a gentlewoman protected by the Countess. A Widow of Florence. DIANA, daughter to the Widow. neighbours and friends to the Violenta, Mariana, Widow. Lords, Officers, Soldiers, etc., French and Florentine.

THE SCENE: Rousillon; Paris; Florence; Marseilles.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Rousillon. The Count's balace. Enter BERTRAM, the COUNTESS OF ROUSIL-LON, HELENA, and LAFEU, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his Majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the King a husband, madam; you, sir, a father. He that so generally is at all times good must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.
Count. What hope is there of his Majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandon'd his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father—O, that 'had', how sad a passage 'tis!--whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretch'd so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the King's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the King's disease. Laf. How call'd you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so-

Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed, madam: the King very lately spoke of him admiringly and mourningly; he was skilful ness enough to have liv'd still, if knowledge Share with thy birthright! Love all, trust could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the King languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord, and bequeathed to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which makes fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities. there commendations go with pity-they are virtues and traitors too. In her they are the better for their simpleness: she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this. Helena; go to, no more, lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow than to have-

Hel. I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead: excessive grief the enemy to the Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes. Laf. How understand we that?

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram, and succeed thy father

In manners, as in shape! Thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy good-a few.

The wrong to none; be able for thing enemy Rather in power than use, and keep thy friend

Under thy own life's key; be check'd for silence.

But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will.

That thee may furnish, and my prayers pluck down.

Fall on thy head! Farewell. My lord, "Tis an unseason'd courtier; good my lord. Advise him.

He cannot want the best Laf. That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him! Farewell. Bertram. [Exit Countess. Ber. The best wishes that can be forg'd in your thoughts be servants to you! [To Helenal Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her. Laf. Farewell, pretty lady; you must hold the credit of your father.

Exeunt Bertram and Lafeu. Hel. O, were that all! I think not on my father;

And these great tears grace his remembrance more

Than those I shed for him. What was he

I have forgot him; my imagination Carries no favour in't but Bertram's. I am undone; there is no living, none, If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one That I should love a bright particular star And think to wed it, he is so above me. In his bright radiance and collateral light Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself: The hind that would be mated by the lion Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague.

To see him every hour; to sit and draw His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls, In our heart's table—heart too capable 89 Of every line and trick of his sweet favour. But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter PAROLLES.

[Aside] One that goes with him. I love him for his sake;

And yet I know him a notorious liar, Think him a great way fool, solely a coward:

Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him That they take place when virtue's steely bones

Looks bleak i' th' cold wind; withal, full oft we see

Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly. Par. Save you, fair queen!

Hel. And you, monarch !

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity? Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you; let me ask you a question. Man is enemy to virginity; how may we barricado it against him? Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak. Unfold to us some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none. Man, setting down before you, will undermine you and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers and blowers-up! Is there no military policy how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up; marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin got till virginity was first lost. That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Virginity by being once lost may be ten times found; by being ever kept, it is ever 'Tis too cold a companion; away lost. with't. 125

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though thetefore I die a virgín.

Par. There's little can be said in't: 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity is to accuse your mothers: which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin; virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. ginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not; you cannot choose but lose by't. Out with't. Within ten year it will make itself ten, which is a goodly increase; and the principal itself not much the worse. Away with't.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see. Marry, ill to like him at ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will that ne'er it likes. lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth. Off with't while 'tis vendible; answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion, richly suited but unsuitable; just like the brooch and the toothpick, which wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge than in your cheek. And your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French wither'd pears: it looks ill, it eats drily; marry, 'tis a marry, yet 'tis a wither'd pear. Will you thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulanything with it?

Hel. Not my virginity yet.

There shall your master have a thousand loves,

A phoenix, captain, and an enemy,

A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign, A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear :

His humble ambition, proud humility, His jarring concord, and his discord dulcet, His faith, his sweet disaster; with a world Of pretty, fond, adoptious christendoms That blinking Cupid gossips. Now shall he-

I know not what he shall. God send him well!

The court's a learning-place, and he is one-

Par. What one, i' faith?

Hel. That I wish well. 'Tis pity-

Par. What's pity?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't

Which might be felt; that we, the poorer

Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes, Might with effects of them follow our friends

And show what we alone must think, which never Returns us thanks.

Enter Page.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls [Exit Page. for you. Par. Little Helen, farewell; if I can remember thee, I will think of thee at

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars, I.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars? Hel. The wars hath so kept you under that you must needs be born under Mars. Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go so much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety; but the composition that your valour and fear makes in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear well.

Par. I am so full of businesses I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and wither'd pear; it was formerly better; understand what advice shall thrust upon ness, and thine ignorance makes thee away. Farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends. Get thee a good husband, and A mother, and a mistress, and a friend, 155 use him as he uses thee. So, farewell. 201 Exit.

> Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie. Which we ascribe to heaven. The fated sky

> Gives us free scope; only doth backward pull

> Our slow designs when we ourselves are dull.

> What power is it which mounts my love so high,

That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eve?

The mightiest space in fortune nature brings

To join like likes, and kiss like native things.

Impossible be strange attempts to those 210 That weigh their pains in sense, and do suppose

What hath been cannot be. Who ever strove

To show her merit that did miss her love? The King's disease—my project may deceive me, 214

But my intents are fix'd, and will not leave me. [Exit.

Scene II. Paris. The King's balace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the KING OF FRANCE, with letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by th' ears;

Have fought with equal fortune, and continue

A braving war.

180

So 'tis reported, sir. 1 Lord.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible. We here receive it.

certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria.

With caution, that the Florentine will move

For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial.

1 Lord. His love and wisdom. Approv'd so to your Majesty, may plead ro For amplest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer. And Florence is denied before he comes: Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see The Tuscan service, freely have they leave To stand on either part. 2 Lord.

It well may serve 15 A nursery to our gentry, who are sick

318

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here?

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEU, and PAROLLES.

1 Lord. It is the Count Rousillon, my good lord,

Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face;

Frank nature, rather curious than in haste, Hath well compos'd thee. Thy father's moral parts Mayst thou inherit too! Welcome to Pans.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your Majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness now,

As when thy father and myself in friend-

First tried our soldiership. He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipled of the bravest. He lasted long;

But on us both did haggish age steal on, 29 And wore us out of act. It much repairs me To talk of your good father. In his youth He had the wit which I can well observe To-day in our young lords; but they may jest

Till their own scorn return to them un-

Till their own scorn return to them unnoted

Ere they can hide their levity in honour. 35 So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were.

His equal had awak'd them; and his honour,

Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time His tongue obey'd his hand. Who were below him

He us'd as creatures of another place; And bow'd his eminent top to their low making them proud of his humility

In their poor praise he humbled. Such a

Might be a copy to these younger times; Which, followed well, would demonstrate them now

But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir, Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;

So in approof lives not his epitaph As in your royal speech.

King. Would I were with him! He would always say—

Methinks I hear him now; his plausive

He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them To grow there, and to bear—' Let me not live'—

This his good melanchely oft began, On the catastrophe and heel of pastime, When it was out—'Let me not live' quoth he 'After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses

All but new things disdain; whose judgments are

Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies

Expire before their fashions'. This he wish'd.

I, after him, do after him wish too,

Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, I quickly were dissolved from my hive, 66 To give some labourers room.

2 Lord. You're loved, sir; They that least lend it you shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know't. How long is't, Count, 69

Since the physician at your father's died? He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord. King. If he were living, I would try him

Lend me an arm—the rest have worn me

With several applications. Nature and sickness 74
Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, Count;

My son's no dearer.

Ber. Thank your Majesty.

[Exeunt. Flourish.

Scene III. Rousillon. The Count's palace. Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear; what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah. The comp-aints I have heard of you I do not all believe; 'tis my slowness that I do not, for I know you lack not folly to commit them and have ability enough to make such knaveries yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow. Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam, 'tis not so well that I am poor, though many of the rich are damn'd; but if I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the world, Isbel the woman and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar? 20 Clo. I do beg your good will in this case.

Count. In what case?

Clo. In Isbel's case and mine own. Service is no heritage; and I think I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue o' my body: for they say barnes are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it. I am driven on by the flesh: and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason? Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them? Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are ; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent. Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out o' friends, madam, and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. Y'are shallow, madam-in great friends: for the knaves come to do that for me which I am aweary of. He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to in the crop. If I be his cuckold, he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend; ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan and old Poysam the papist, howsome'er their hearts are sever'd in religion. their heads are both one: they may jowl horns together like any deer i' th' herd. 52

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouth'd and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat. Which men full true shall find: Your marriage comes by destiny, Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir; I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you. Of her I am to speak. Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her; Helen I mean. 65 Clo. [Sings]

'Was this fair face the cause' quoth she Why the Grecians sacked Troy? Fond done, done fond,

Was this King Priam's joy?'

With that she sighed as she stood, With that she sighed as she stood,

And gave this sentence then: Among nine bad if one be good, Among nine bad if one be good, There's yet one good in ten'.

Count. What, one good in ten? You corrupt the song, sirrah

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam. which is a puritying o' th' song Would God would serve the world so all the year! We'd find no fault with the tithe-woman, if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth 'a! An we might have a good woman born before every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out ere 'a pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you.

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart. I am going, forsooth. The business is for Helen to come hither. {Exit.

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do. Her father hequeath'd her to me; and she herself. without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds. There is more owing her than is paid; and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than I think she wish'd me. Alone she was, and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touch'd not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son. Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; Love no god, that would not extend his might only where qualities were level: Diana no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight surpris'd without rescue in the first assault, or ransom afterward. This she deliver'd in the most bitter touch of sorrow that e'er I heard virgin exclaim in; which I he'd my duty 60 speedily to acquaint you withal; sithence, in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharg'd this honestly; keep it to yourself. Many likelihoods inform'd me of this before, which hung so tott'ring in the balance that I could neither believe nor misdoubt. Pray you leave me. Stall this in your bosom; and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you further anon. [Exit Steward.

Enter HELENA.

70 Even so it was with me when I was young.

If ever we are nature's, these are ours; this

Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong; 75 Our blood to us, this to our blood is born, It is the show and seal of nature's truth, Where love's strong passion is impress'd in

By our remembrances of days foregone, Such were our faults, or then we thought them none.

Her eve is sick on't; I observe her now. Hel. What is your pleasure, madan. ? You know, Helen.

I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Nay, a mother. 130 Count. Why not a mother? When I said 'a mother', Methought you saw a serpent. What's in mother

That you start at it? I say I am your mother,

And put you in the catalogue of those That were enwombed mine. 'Tis often seen Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds

A native slip to us from foreign seeds. You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan.

Yet I express to you a mother's care. God's mercy, maiden! does it curd thy blood 140 To say I am thy mother? What's the matter,

That this distempered messenger of wet, The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye? Why, that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say I am your mother. Hel. Pardon, madam. The Count Rousillon cannot be my brother: I am from humble, he from hongured name; No note upon my parents, his all noble. My master, my dear lord he is; and I His servant live, and will his vassal die. 150 He must not be my brother.

Nor I your mother? Count. Hel. You are my mother, madam; would you were-

So that my lord your son were not my brother-

Indeed my mother! Or were you both our And lack not to lose still. Thus, Indianmothers,

I care no more for than I do for heaven, 155 So I were not his sister. Can't no other, But, I your daughter, he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law.

God shield you mean it not! 'daughter' and 'mother'

So strive upon your pulse. What! pale again ?

My fear hath catch'd your fondness. Now I see

The myst'ry of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears' head. Now to all sense 'tis Against the proclamation of thy passion. To say thou dost not. Therefore tell me true;

But tell me then, 'tis so; for, look, thy cheeks

Confess it, th' one to th' other: and thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours That in their kind they speak it; only sin And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue, 171 That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so ?

If it be so, you have wound a goodly clew; If it be not, torswear't; howe'er, I charge thee.

As heaven shall work in me for thine avail. To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me. Count. Do you love my son ?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress. Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam? Count. Go not about; my love hath in't a bond

Whereof the world takes note. Come, come, disclose The state of your affection; for your passions

Have to the full appeach'd.

Hel. Then I confess, Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven.

I love your son. Mr friends were poor, but honest; so's my love

Be not offended, for it hurts not him That he is lov'd of me; I follow him not By any token of presumptuous suit, Nor would I have him till I do deserve him; Yet never know how that desert should be I know I love in vain, strive against hope; Yet in this captious and intenible sieve I still pour in the waters of my love, Else Paris, and the medicine, and the King, Had from the conversation of my thoughts Haply been absent then.

But think you, Helen, Count. If you should tender your supposed aid, He would receive it? He and his physicians Are of a mind: he, that they cannot help him;

They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit

ACT TWO

Scene I. Paris. The King's palece.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King with divers young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; BERTRAM and PAROLLES: Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lords; these warlike principles

Do not throw from you. And you, my lords. farewell:

Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,

The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis receiv'd. And is enough for both.

1 Lord. 'Tis our hope, sir, After well-ent'red soldiers, to return And find your Grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart

Will not confess he owes the malady That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords:

Whether I live or die, be you the sons Of worthy Frenchmen; let higher Italy-Those bated that inherit but the fall Of the last monarchy—see that you come Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when 15

The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek, That fame may cry you loud. I say farewell. 2 Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your Majesty!

King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them: They say our French lack language to deny, If they demand; beware of being capt yes

Before you serve. Both. Our hearts receive your warnings. King. Farewell. [To Attendants] Come hither to me. [The King retires attended. 1 Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us! Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.

2 Lord. O, 'tis brave wars! Par. Most admirable! I have seen those wars.

Ber. I am commanded here and kept a coil with 'Too young' and 'The next year' and 'Tis too early'.

Par. An thy mind stand to 't, boy, stral away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock.

Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry, worn

But one to dance with. By heaven, I'll With spritely fire and motion: steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Comm t it. Count. Par. 2 Lord. I am your accessary; and so farewell.

Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortur'd body.

1 Lord. Farewell, Captain.

2 Lord. Sweet Monsieur Parolles! Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin. Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals: you shall find in the regiment of the Spinii one Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek; it was this very sword Say to him I live; and entrench'd it. observe his reports for me.

1 Lord. We shall, noble Captain. Par. Mars dote on you for his novices: [Exeunt Lords] What will ye do?

Re-enter the KING.

Ber. Stay; the King!

Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble fords; you have restrain'd yourself within the list of too cold an adieu. Be more expressive to them; for they wear themselves in the cap of the time; there do muster true gait; eat, speak, and move, under the influence of the most receiv'd star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated farewell. 55

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.

Enter LAFEU.

Laf. [Kneeling] Pardon, my lord, for me That dare leave two together. and for my tidings.

[Exeunt Bertram and Parolles

King. I'll fee thee to stand up. Laf. Then here's a man stands that has brought his pardon.

I would you had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy; And that at my bidding you could so stand

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate,

And ask'd thee mercy for't.

Good faith, across Laf. But, my good lord, 'tis thus: will you be cur'd

Of your infirmity?

King. O. will you eat Laf. No grapes, my royal fox? Yes, but yo will whose simple touch

Is powerful to araise King Pepin, nay, 75 To give great Charlemain a pen in's hand And write to her a love-line.

King. What her is this? Laf. Why, Doctor She! My lord, there's one arriv'd, If you will see her. Now, by my faith and honour,

If seriously I may convey my thoughts 80 In this my light deliverance, I have spoke With one that in her sex, her years, profession.

Wisdom, and constancy, hath amaz'd me more

Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her,

For that is her demand, and know her business?

That done, laugh well at me.

, Now, good Lafeu, Bring in the admiration, that we with thee May spend our wonder too, or take off thine

By wond'ring how thou took'st it.

Nay, I'll fit vou, And not be all day neither. Exit Lafeu. King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter LAFEU with HELENA.

Laf. Nay, come your ways. King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways; This is his Majesty; sav your mind to him. A traitor you do look like; but such traitors His Majesty seldom fears. I am Cressid's uncle, Fare you well. [Exit.

King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us?

Ay, my good lord. Hel. Gerard de Narbon was my father,

In what he did profess, well found. I knew him. King.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him;

Knowing him is enough. On's bed of death Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one, Which, as the dearest issue of his practice, And of his old experience th' only darling, He bade me store up as a triple eye, Safer than mine own two, more dear. I have so And, hearing your high Majesty is touch'd With that malignant cause wherein the honour Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,

I come to tender it, and my appliance, With all bound humbleness.

I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Scene II. Rousillon. The Count's palace. Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught. I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! Why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court! 7

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court. He that cannot make a leg, put off's cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court: but for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks—the pin buttock, the quatch buttock, the brawn buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffety punk, as Tib's rush for Tom's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove Tuesday, a morris for Mayday, as the nail to his hole, the cuckold to his horn, as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke to beneath your constable, it will fit any question. 30 Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size that must fit all demands. Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to't. Ask me if I am a courtier: it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could, I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir!-There's a simple putting off. More, more, a hundred of them. Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you. Clo. O Lord, sir !- Thick thick; spare

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Clo. O Lord, sir !- Nay, put me to't, I warrant you.

Count. You were lately whipp'd, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir !- Spare not me.

Count. Do you cry 'O Lord, sir!' at your whipping, and 'spare not me'? Indeed your 'O Lord, sir!' is very sequent to your whipping. You would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to't.

Clo. I ne'er had worse luck in my life in my 'O Lord, sir!' I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time.

To entertain it so merrily with a fool, Clo. O Lord, sir !-Why, there't serves well again.

Count. An end, sir! To your business: give Helen this.

And urge her to a present answer back; Commend me to my kinsmen and my son. This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them? Count. Not much employment for you. You understand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully; I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again.

Scene III. Paris. The King's palace.

Enter Bertram. Lafeu. and Parolles.

Laf. They say miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things, supernatural and causeless. Hence is it that we make trifles of terrors, ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.

Par. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquish'd of the artists— Par. So I say-both of Galen and Para-

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows-

Par. Right; so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incurable-

Par. Why, there 'tis; so say I too.

Laf. Not to be help'd— Par. Right; as 'twere a man assur'd of aLaf. Uncertain life and sure death.

Par. Just; you say well; so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is indeed. If you will have it in showing, you shall read it in what-do-yecall't here.

Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the King.

Laf. Lustig, as the Dutchman says. I'll in my head. Why, he's able to lead her a coranto.

Par. Mort du vinaigre! Is not this Helen?

Laf. Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court. [Exit an Attendant. Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side; 45 And with this healthful hand, whose

The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me: 'We blush that thou shouldst choose; but, be refused.

Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever,

We'll ne'er come there again '.

King. Make choice and see: Who shuns thy love shuns all his love in me. Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly, And to imperial Love, that god most high. Do my sighs stream. Sir, will you hear my suit?

1 Lord. And grant it.

Hel. Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute. Laf. I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-ace for my life.

Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eves.

Laf. These boys are boys of ice; they'll This none have her. Sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne'er got 'em.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,

To make yourself a son out of my blood. 95 4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.

Laf. There's one grape yet; I am sure thy father drunk wine—but if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.

Hel. [To Bertram] I dare not say I take you: but I give Laf. I'd give bay Curtal and his furniture Me and my service, ever whilst I live, King. Why, then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Ev'n as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' th' contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. Re-enter LAFEU.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's Laf. Are you companion to the Count married; there's news for you; you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs. He is my good lord; whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is that's thy master. Why dost thou garter up thy arms o' this fashion? Dost make hose of thy sleeves? Do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat thee. Methink'st thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee. 250

This is hard and undeserved

me sure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond, and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords and honourable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you.

Enter BERTRAM.

Par. Good, very good, it is so then. Good, very good; let it be conceal'd awhile.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What's the matter, sweetheart? Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn,

I will not bed her.

Par. What, what, sweetheart?

Ber. O my Parolles, they have married me!

I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits

Scene IV. Paris. The King's palace. Enter HELENA and Clown.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly; is she well?

Clo. She is not well, but yet she has her health; she's very merry, but yet she is not well. But thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing i' th' world; but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what does she ail that she's not very well?

Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed. but for two things.

Hel. What two things?

Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! The other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady! Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still. O, my knave, how does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles and I her money, I would she did as you say. 20 Par. Why, I say nothing.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have us friends; I will pursue the amity.

Par. Away! th'ait a knave.

Clo. You should have said, sir, 'Before Ber. It shall be so; I'll send her to my a knave th'art a knave'; that's 'Before 79 me th'art a knave'. This had been truth.

Par. A good knave, i' faith, and well fed. Madam, my lord will go away to-night: A very serious business calls on him. The great prerogative and rite of love.

Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge:

But puts it off to a compell'd restraint: 41 Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets.

Which they distil now in the curbed time, To make the coming hour o'erflow with JOY

And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. What's his will else? Par. That you will take your instant leave o' th' King,

And make this haste as your own good proceeding,

Enter LAFEU and BERTRAM.

Laf. But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approof.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony. Laf. Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinn'd against his experience and transgress'd against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes; I pray you make

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

Ber. I think so.

Ber. Let that go. Farewell: his home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe. Nor dare I say 'tis mine, and yet it is: But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal

Ber. What would you have? Hel. Something; and scarce so much: nothing, indeed.

I would not tell you what I would, my lord. Faith, yes:

SCENE II. Rousillon. The Count's palace. Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happen'd all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you . Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot and sing; mend the ruff and sing; ask questions and sing; pick his teeth and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel since I was at court. Our old ling and our Isbels o' th country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o' th' court. The brains of m Cupid's knock'd out; and I begin to love, a an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort: your son will not be kill'd so soon as I thought he would. Count. Why should he be kill'd?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as hear he does: the danger is in standing o't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come will tell you more. For my part, I only hear your son v run Exit. 7ay.

Enter HELENA and the two French Gentlemen.

2 Gent. Save you, good madam. Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone. 1 Gent. Do not say so. Count. Think upon patience. Pray you, gentlemen— I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief That the first face of neither, on the start, Can woman me unto 't. Where is my son.

I pray you. 1 Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the Duke of Florence.

We met him thitherward; for thence we came.

And, after some dispatch in hand at court, Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on this letter, madam; here's my passport.

[Reads] 'When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body that I am father to, then call me husband; but in such a "then" I write a "never".' 58 This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

Av. madam: 1 Gent. And for the contents' sake are sorry for our pains.

Count. I prithee, lady, have a better cheer:

If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine, Thou robb'st me of a moiety. He was my son:

But I do wash his name out of my blood, 65 And thou art all my child. Florence is he?

 Gent. Ay, madam. And to be a soldier? Count.

1 Gent. Such is his noble purpose; and, Ply with false aim; move the still-piecing believe 't.

The Duke will lay upon him all the honour That sings with piercing; do not touch my That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither? >> 2 Gent. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. [Reads] 'Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.

'Tis bitter. Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

2 Gent. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand haply, which his heart was not consenting

Count. Nothing in France until he have no wife!

There's nothing here that is too good for him

But only she; and she deserves a lord That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,

And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him?

Which I have sometime known.

Count. Parolles, was it not? 2 Gent. Av. my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature 86 With his inducement.

Indeed, good lady, 2 Gent. The fellow has a deal of that too much Which holds him much to have.

Y'are welcome, gentlemen. 90 I will entreat you, when you see my son, To tell him that his sword can never win The honour that he loses. More I'll entreat you

Duke. The General of our Horse thou art: and we,

Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence

Upon thy promising fortune.

Sir, it is Ber. A charge too heavy for my strength: but yet

We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake To th' extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth: And Fortune play upon thy prosperous helm.

As thy auspicious mistress!

This very day, Ber. Great Mars, I put myself into thy file; Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words? Rinaldo, you did never tack advice so much

As letting her pass so; had I spoke with her,

I could have well diverted her intents, Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam; If I had given you this at over-night, She might have been o'erta'en; and yet

she writes

Scene V. Without the walls of Florence.

A tucket afar off. Enter an old Widow of Florence, her daughter DIANA, VIOLENTA, and MARIANA, with other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city we shall lose all the sight. Dia. They say the French count has done most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their great'st commander; and that with his own hand he clew the Duke's brother. [Tucket] We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way. Hark! you may know by their tumpets.

Mar. Cowe, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take head of this French earl; the honour of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave, hang him! one Parolles; a filthy officer he is in those suggestion; for the young eail. Beware of them. Dana: their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under; many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threatens them. I hope I need not to advise you further; but I hope your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter HELENA in the dress of a pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so. Look, here comes a pilgrim. I know she will lie at my house: thither they send one another. I'll question her. God save you, pilgrim! Whither are bound?

Hel. To Saint Jaques le Grand. Where do the palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way? [A march afar. Wid. Ay, marry, is't. Hark you! They come this way. 35

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, But till the troops come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd;

The rather for I think I know your hostess As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself? 40 Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of

That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you. 45
Dia. The Count Rousillon. Know you such a one?

Hel. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him;

His face I know not.

Dia. Whatsome'er he is,
He's bravely taken here. He stole from France, As 'tis reported, for the King had married

Against his liking. Think you it is so?
Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth; I know his lady.

Dia. There is a gentleman that serves the Count

Reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name? Dia. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. O, I believe with him, 55 In argument of praise, or to the worth Of the great Count himself, she is too mean To have her name repeated; all her deserving

Is a reserved honesty, and that

I have not heard examin'd.

Dia.

Alas, poor lady! 60
'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife

Of a detesting loid.

Wid. I weet, good creature, wheresoe'er she is 'Her heart weighs sadly. This young maid might do her

A shrewd turn, if she pleas'd.

Hel. How do you mean? 65 May be the amorous Count solicits her In the unlawful purpose.

Wid. He does, indeed; And brokes with all that can in such a suit Corrupt the tender honour of a maid; But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard In honestest defence.

Enter, with drum and colours, BERTRAM, PAROLLES, and the whole Army.

Mar. The gods forbid else! Wid. So, now they come.

That is Antonio, the Duke's eldest son; That, Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?
Dia. He-

That with the plume; 'tis a most gallant fellow. 75

I would he lov'd his wife; if he were honester

He were much goodlier. Is't not a handsome gentleman?

Hel. I like him well.

Dia. 'Tis pity he is not honest. Yond's that same knave

That leads him to these places; were I his lady 80

I would poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he? Dia. That jack-an-apes with scarfs. Why is he melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt i' th' bottle. Par. Lose our drum! well. 85 Mar. He's shrewdly vex'd at something. Look, he has spled us.

Wid. Marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ringcarrier!

[Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, and army. Wid. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim,

I will bring you

Where you shall host. Of enjoin'd penitents

There's four or five, to great Saint Jacques bound,

Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you. Please it this matron and this gentle maid To eat with us to-night; the charge and thanking 95

Shall be for me, and, to requite you further,

I will bestow some precepts of this virgin, Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly.
[Exeunt.

Scene VI. Camp before Florence.

Enter BERTRAM, and the two French Lords.

2 Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to't; let him have his way.

1 Lord. If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect, 2 Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble. 5

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived n him?

2 Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship's entertainment.

1 Lord. It were fit you knew him; lest, reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might at some great and trusty business in a main danger fail you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

1 Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

2 Lord. I with a troop of Florentines will suddenly surprise him; such I will have whom I am sure he knows not from the enemy. We will bind and hoodwink him so that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination; if he do not, for the promise of his life and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forseit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in anything.

i Lord. O. for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says he has a stratagem for't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

2 Lord. O. for the love of laughter, hinder not the honour of his design; let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

Ber. How now, monsieur! This drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

1 Lord. A pox on'i; let it go; 'tis but a drum.

Par. But a drum! Is't but a drum? A drum so lost! There was excellent command: to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers!

1 Lord. That was not to be blam'd in the command of the service; it was a disaster of war that Cæsar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success. Some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered. But that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or 'hic jacet'.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach, to't, monsieur. If you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit. If you speed well in it, the Duke shall both speak of it and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation; and by midnight look to hear further from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his Grace you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord, but the attempt I vow.

possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I love not many words. 2 Lord. No more than a fish loves water. Is not thus a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done: damns himself to do, and dares better be damn'd than to do't.

1 Lord. You do not know him, my lord. as we do. Certain it is that he will steal himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this that so seriously he does address himself unto?

2 Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies. But we have almost emboss'd him. You shall see his fall tonight; for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.

1 Lord. We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him. He was first smok'd by the old Lord Lafeu. When his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

2 Lord. I must go look my twigs; he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with

2 Lord. As't please your lordship. leave you. Exit. Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you The lass I spoke of.

1 Lord. But you say she's honest. Ber. That's all the fault. I spoke with her but once, And found her wondrous cold: but I sent to her,

By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind.

Tokens and letters which she did re-send: And this is all I have done. She's a fair 106 creature :

Will you go see her?

1 Lord With all my heart, my lord. Exeunt.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have show'd me that which well

ACT FOUR

Scene I. Without the Florentine camp. Fnter Second French Lord with five or six other Soldiers in ambush.

2 Lord. He can come no other way but by this hedge-corner. When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be th' interpreter. 2 Lora. Art not acquainted with him?

Knows he not thy voice? 1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

2 Lord. But what linsey-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?

1 Sold. E'en such as you speak to

2 Lord. He must think us some band of strangers i' th' adversary's entertainment. Now he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages, therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy; not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: choughs' language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! here he comes: to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Ten o'clock. Within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausive invention that carries it. They begin to smoke me; and disgraces have of late knock'd too often at my door. I find my tongue is too foolhardy: but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

2 Lord. This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of. Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say I got them in exploit. Yet slight ones will not carry it. They will say 'Came you off with so little?' And great ones I dare not give. Wherefore, what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mule, if you prattle me into these perils. 40 2 Lord. Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn, or the breaking of my We have caught the woodcock, and will Spanish sword.

2 Lord. We cannot afford you so.

2 Lord. 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stupp'd.

2 Loid. Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leap'd from the window of the citadel-

2 Lord. How deep? Par. Thirty fathom.

2 Lord. Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.

Par. I would I had any drum of the enemy's; I would swear I recover'd it.
2 Lord. You shall hear one anon.

[Alarum within.

Par. A drum now of the enemy's! 2 Lord. Throca movousus, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villianda par sorbo, cargo.

Par, I know you are the Muskos' regiment.

And I shall lose my life for want of language.

Italian, or French, let him speak to me: I'll discover that which shall undo the Florentine.

SCENE II. Florence. The Widow's house. Enter BERTRAM and DIANA.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess; And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind.

You are no maiden, but a monument; When you are dead, you should be such a one

As you are now, for you are cold and stern; And now you should be as your mother was When your sweet self was got.

Dia. She then was honest. So should you be.

No Dia. My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

No more o' that! I prithee do not strive against my vows. I was compell'd to her; but I love thee 15 By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever

Do thee all rights of service.

Ay, so you serve us Dia. Till we serve you; but when you have our roses

You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,

And mock us with our bareness.

How have I sworn! 20 Ber. Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that makes the truth,

But the plain single vow that is vow'd true. What is not holy, that we swear not by, But take the High'st to witness. Then, pray you, tell me: If I should swear by Jove's great attributes I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my

2 Lord. He has much worthy blame laid upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.

1 Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the King, who had even tun'd his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

2 Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

1 Lord. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; and this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour. He hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks My house, mine honour, yea, my life, be himself made in the unchaste composition.

2 Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion! As we are ourselves, what things are we!

1 Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons we still see them reveal themselves till they attain to their abhorr'd ends; so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream, o'erflows himself.

2 Lord. Is it not meant damnable in us to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We When back again this ring shall be shall not then have his company to-night? 1 Lord. Not till after midnight; for he is dieted to his hour.

1 Lord. Let it be forbid, sir! So should I be a great deal of his act.

2 Lord. Sir, his wife, some two months since, fled from his house. Her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking with most austere sanctumony she accomplish'd; and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

1 Lord. How is this justified?

2 Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters, which makes her story true even to the point of her death. Her death itself, which could not be her office to sav is come, was faithfully confirm'd by the rector of the place.

1 Lord. Hath the Count all this intelligence?

2 Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

1 Lord. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this. 2 Lord. How mightily sometimes we make us comforts of our losses!

1 Lord. And how mightily some other times we drown out gain in tears! great dignity that his valour hath here acquir'd for him shall at home be encount'red with a shame as ample.

2 Lord. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, go, 1 and ill together. Our virtues would be proud if our faults whipt them not: and our crimes would despair if they were not cherish'd by our virtues.

Enter a Messenger.

How now? Where's your master?

Serv. He met the Duke in the street, sir; of whom he hath taken a sclemn leave. His lordship will next morning for France. The Duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the King.

2 Lord. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can commend.

1 Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the King's tartness. Here's his lordship now.

Enter BERTRAM.

How now, my lord, is't not after midnight?

Ber, I have to-night dispatch'd sixteen businesses, a month's length apiece; by an abstract of success: I have congied with the Duke, done my adieu with his nearest: buried a wife, mourn'd for her; writ to my lady mother I am returning; entertain'd my convoy; and between these main parcels of dispatch effected many Monsieur Parolles, the gallant militarist-

2 Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you nicer needs. The last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

2 Lord. If the business be of any difficulty and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it bereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the Fool and the Soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit module has deceiv'd me like a doublemeaning prophesier.

2 Lord. Bung him foith. [Exeunt Soldiers] Has sat i' th' stock all night, Exeunt poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserv'd it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?

62

2 Lord. I have told your lordship already the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood: he weeps like a wench that had shed her milk; he hath confess'd himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting i' th' stocks. And what think you he hath confess'd?

Ber. Nothing of me, has 'a?

2 Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his tace; if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Enter Parolles guarded, and First Soldier as interpreter.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled! He can say nothing of me.

2 Lord. Hush, hush! Hoodman comes. Portotartarossa.

1 Sold. He calls for the tortines. What will you say without 'em ? Par. I will confess what I know without constraint; if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.

1 Sold. Bosko chimurcho.

2 Lord. Boblibindo chicumurco.

1 Sold. You are a merciful general. Our General bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

1 Sold. 'First demand of him how many horse the Duke is strong.' What say you to that?

Par. Five or six thousand; but very weak and unserviceable. The troops are all scattered, and the communders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so? Par. Do: I'll take the sacrament on't, how and which way you will.

Ber. All's one to him. What a pastsaving slave is this!

2 Lord. Y'are deceiv'd, my lord; this is that was his own phrase—that had the whole theoric of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. 136

1 Lord. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have everything in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

I Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. 'Five or six thousand horse' I said -I will say true—'or thereabouts' set down, for I'll speak truth.

2 Lord. He's very near the truth in this. Ber. But I con him no thanks for't in the nature he delivers it.

Par. 'Poor rogues' I pray you say.

1 Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. I humbly thank you, sir. A truth's truth—the rogues are marvellous poor.

1 Sold. ' Demand of him of what strength they are a-foot.' What say you to that?
Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio, a hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many; Corambus, so many; Jaques. so many; Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratu, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chitopher, Vaumond, Bentzi, two hundred fifty each; so that the musterfile, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him? 2 Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks. Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the Duke.

'You 1 Sold. Well, that's set down. shall demand of him whether one Captain Dumain be i' th' camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the Duke, what his valour, honesty, expertness in wais; or whether he thinks it were not possible, with well-weighing sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt.' What say you to this? What do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the intergatories. Demand them singly.

Sold. Do you know this Captain

Dumain? Par. I know him: 'a was a botcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the shrieve's fool with child—a dumb innocent that could not say hini nay.

Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though I know his brains are foricit to the next tile that falls.

1 Sold. Well, is this captain in the Duke of Florence's camp?

Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.

2 Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.

1 Sold. What is his reputation with the Duke?

Par. The Duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine; and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' th' band. I think I have his letter in my pocket.

1 Sold. Marry, we'll search. Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there or it is upon a file with the Duke's other letters in my tent.

1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper. I read it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our interpreter does it well. 2 Lord, Excellently.

104 1 Sold. [Reads] 'Dian. the Count's a fool. and full of gold.

Par. That is not the Duke's letter, sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one Count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but for all that very ruttish. I pray you, sir, put it up again.

1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first by your favour.

Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young Count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds. 204

Ber. Damnable both-sides rogue!

Sold. [Reads].

'When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;

After he scores, he never pays the score. Half won is match well made; match, and well make it;

He ne'er pays after-debts, take it before. And say a soldier, Dian, told thee this: Men are to mell with, boys are not to kiss:

For count of this, the Count's a fool, I know it.

Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.

Thine, as he vow'd to thee in thine car, PAROLLES.'

Ber. He shall be whipt through the army with this rhyme in's forchead.

1 Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir, the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.

Ber. I could endure anything before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me. 1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by our General's looks we shall be fain to hang you.

Par. My life, sir, in any case! Not that I am afraid to die, but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, i' th' stocks, or anywhere, so may live.

1 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this Captain Dumain: you have answer'd to his reputation with the Duke, and to his valour: what is his honesty?

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking 'em he is stronger than Hercules. He will he, sir, with such volubility that you would think truth were Drunkenness is his best virtue, for he will be swine-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bedclothes about him; but they know his conditions and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty. He has everything that an honest man should not have: what an honest man should have he has nothing.

2 Lord. I begin to love him for this. Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him! For me, he's more and more a cat.

1 Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?

Par. Faith, sir, has led the drum before the English tragedians-to belie him I will not-and more of his soldiership I know not, except in that country he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end to instruct for the doubling of files-I would do the man what honour I can-but of this I am not certain.

2 Lord. He hath out-villain'd villainy so far that the rarity redeems him. Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.

1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not to ask you if gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a cardecue he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut th' entail from all remainders and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.

1 Sold. What's his brother, the other

Captain Dumain?

I Lord. Why does he ask him of me? 1 Sold. What's he?

Par. E'en a crow o' th' same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward; yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat he outruns any lackey: marry, in coming on he has the cramp.

1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the Captain of his Horse, Count Rousillon.

1 Sold. I'll whisper with the General, and know his pleasure.

Par. [Aside] I'll no more drumming. plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the Count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?

1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die. The General says you that have so traitorously discover'd the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, headsman, off with his

1 Lord. God bless you, Captain Parolles. 2 Lord. God save you, noble Captain.

SCENE V. Rousillon. The Count's palace. Enter Countess, Lafeu, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no, your son was misled with a snipt-taffeta fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbak'd and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here at home, more advanc'd by the King than by that red-tail'd humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would I had not known him. It was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever nature had praise for creating. If she had partaken of my flesh. and cost me the dearest groans of a mother. I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. 'Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady. We may pick a thousand sallets ere we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweetmarjoram of the sallet, or, rather, the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not sail knave; they are nose-herbs. They are not sallet-herbs, you

Clo. I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir: I have not much skill in grass. Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself-a knave or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction? Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service. indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee: thou art both knave and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you. I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who's that? A Frenchman? Clo. Faith, sir, 'a has an English name; but his fishomy is more hotter in France than there. Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The Black Prince, sir; alias, the Prince of Darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse. I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talk'st of; serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of ever keeps a good fire. But, sure. he is the prince of the world; let his nobility remain in's court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter. Some that humble themselves may; but the many will be too chill and tender: and they'll be for the flow'ry way that leads to the broad gate and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be aweary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. ways; let my horses be well look'd to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be jades' tricks, which are their own right by the law of nature. [Exit. Laf. A shrewd knave, and an unhappy.

Count. So 'a is. My lord that's gone made But since you have made the days and himself much sport out of him. By his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and indeed he has no pace, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; 'tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady's death, and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I moved the King my master to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his Majesty out of a selfgracious remembrance did first propose. His Highness hath promis'd me to do it; and, to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord:

and I wish it happily effected.

Laf. His Highness comes post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he number'd thirty; 'a will be here to-morrow, or I am deceiv'd by him that in such intelligence hath seldom fail'd.

Count. It rejoices me that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my son will be here to-night. I shall beseech your lordship to remain with me till they meet together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.

Count. You need but plead your honourable privilege.

Laf. Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but, I thank my God, it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on's face; whether there be a scar under 't or no, the velvet knows; but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet. His left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Laf. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good liv'ry of honour; so belike is that

Clo. But it is your carbonado'd face. 92 Laf. Let us go see your son, I pray you; I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Enter a Gentleman,

In happy time! This man may help me to his Majesty's ear, If he would spend his power. God save you, SIT.

Gent. And you

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there. Hel. ! do presume, sir, that you are not fall'n

And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions.

Which lay nice manners by, I put you to 15 The use of your own virtues, for the which I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the King; And aid me with that store of power you have

To come into his presence.

Gent. The King's not here.

Hel. Not here, sir? Gent. Not indeed.

He hence remov'd last night, and with more haste

Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains! Hel. All's Well That Ends Well yet, 25 Though time seem so adverse and means unfit.

I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Rousillon: Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir, Since you are like to see the King before me, Commend the paper to his gracious hand: Which I presume shall render you no blame,

But rather make you thank your pains for it.

I will come after you with what good speed

This I'll do for you. 35 Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thank'd, Enter Clown and PAROLLES.

Par. Good Monsieur Lavache, give my Lord Lateu this letter. I have ere now, sir been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir, muddied in Fortune's mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, Fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speak'st of. I will henceforth eat no fish of Fortune's butt'ring. Prithee, allow the

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose sir; I spake but by a metaphor. Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink

I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor. Prithee, get thee further.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper. Clo. Foh! prithee stand away. A paper from Fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look here he comes himself.

Enter LAFEU.

Here is a pur of Fortune's, sir, or of Fortune's cat, but not a musk-cat, that has fall'n into the unclean fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied withal. Pray you, sir, use the carp as you may; for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenious, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my similes of comfort, and leave him to your lordship.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom Fortune hath cruelly scratch'd.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you played the knave with Fortune. that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady and would not have knaves thrive long under her? There's a cardecue Let the justices make you and Fortune friends; I am for other business.

Par. I beseech your honour to hear me one single word.

Laf. You beg a single penny more; come, you shall ha't; save your word.

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles. Laf. You beg more than word then. Cox my passion! give me your hand. How does your drum?

Par. O my good lord, you were the first that found me.

Laf. Was I, in sooth? And I was the first that lost thee.

Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out. 45

Laf. Out upon thee, knave! Dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? One brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sound] The King's coming; I know by his trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me; I had talk of you last night. Though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat. Go to: follow.

Par. I praise God for you.

King. My honour'd lady. I have forgiven and forgotten all: Though my revenges were high bent upon him

And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say-But first, I beg my pardon: the young lord Did to his Majesty, his mother, and his ladv.

Offence of mighty note; but to himself The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife 15 Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit Gentleman.

King. What says he to your daughter? Have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your Highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me That sets him high in fame.

Enter BERTRAM.

He looks well on't. King. I am not a day of season, For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail In me at once. But to the brightest beams Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth:

The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repented blames, [Exeunt. Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege. At first I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart Durst make too bold a heiald of my tongue:

Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cesse! Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my house's name

Must be digested; give a favour from you, To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter, 75 That she may quickly come.

[Bertram gives a ring. By my old beard.

And ev'ry hair that's on't, Helen, that's

Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,

The last that e'er I took her leave at court. I saw upon her finger. Ber.

Hers it was not. King. Now, pray you, let me see it; to, mine eve.

While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to'r. This ring was mine; and when I gave it Helen

I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood Necessitied to help, that by this token

I would relieve her. Had you that craft to reave her

Of what should stead her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign. Howe'er it pleases you to take it so.

The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life, I have seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it. Ber. You are deceiv'd, my lord; she never saw it.

In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,

Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name

Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought

I stood engag'd; but when I had subscrib'd To mine own fortune, and inform'd her fully

I could not answer in that course of honour As she had made the overture, she ceas'd, In heavy satisfaction, and would never 100 Receive the ring again.

King. Plutus himself.

That knows the tinct and multiplying med'cine.

Hath not in nature's mystery more science Than I have in this ring. 'Twas mine, 'twas Helen's.

Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know That you are well acquainted with yourself. Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement

You got it from her. She call'd the saints to surety

That she would never put it from her finger Unless she gave it to yourself in bed- 110 Where you have never come—or sent it us Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it. King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour;

And mak'st conjectural fears to come into

Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove

That thou art so inhuman-'twill not prove so.

And yet I know not-thou didst nate her deadly,

And she is dead; which nothing, but to close 118

Her eyes myself, could win me to believe More than to see this ring. Take him away. [Guards seize Bertram.

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thinkings.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Gracious sovereign, Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not:

Here's a petition from a Florentine, Who hath, for four or five 1emoves, come short

To tender it herself. I undertook it. Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech Of the poor suppliant, who by this, I know Is here attending; her business looks in her With an importing visage; and she told me In a sweet verbal brief it did concern

Your Highness with herself. King, [Reads the letter] 'Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the Count Rousillon a widower; his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant it me, O King! in you it best hes; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

DIANA CAPILIET.'

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for this. I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafeu,

To bring forth this discov'ry. Seek these suitors.

Go speedily, and bring again the Count. x50 [Exeunt Attendants I am afeard the life of Helen, lady,

King. I wonder, sir, sith wives are If I be one. monsters to you, And that you fly them as you swear them lordship, Yet you desire to marry.

Enter Widow and DIANA.

What woman's that?

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine.

Derived from the ancient Capilet. My suit, as I do understand, you know. And therefore know how far I may be pitied. Wid. Î am her mother, sır, whose age and honour

Both suffer under this complaint we bring, If you shall prove And both shall cease, without your remedy. King. Come hither, Count; do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can nor will denv Where she yet never was. [Exit, guarded. But that I know them. Do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife.

Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry, You give away this hand, and that is mine: You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine:

You give away myself, which is known mine:

For I by vow am so embodied yours That she which mairies you must marry me, Eithei both or none.

Laf. [To Bertram] Your reputation comes too short for my daughter; you are no husnand for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desp'rate creature

Whom sometime I have laugh'd with. Let your Highness

Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour

Than for to think that I would sink it here. King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend

Till your deeds gain them. Fairer prove your honour

Than in my thought it lies! Die. Good my lord,

Ask him upon his oath if he does think He had not my virginity. King. What say'st thou to her?

She's impudent, my lord, And was a common gamester to the carap. Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so He might have bought me at a common price.

Do not believe him. O, behold this ring. Whose high respect and rich validity Did lack a parallel; yet, for all that, He gave it to a commoner o' th' camp,

Count. He blushes, and 'tis it. Of six preceding ancestors, that gem Conferr'd by testament to th' sequent issue, Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife:

That ring's a thousand proofs. King. Methought you said You saw one here in court could witness it. hath been an honourable gentleman: tricks produce

So bad an instrument; his name's Parolles. Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be. King. Find him, and bring him hither.

[Exit an Attendant. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave, With all the spots o' th' world tax'd and debauch'd, Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth. Am I or that or this for what he'll utter That will speak anything?

She hath that ring of yours. Ber. I think she has. Certain it is I lik'd

And boarded her i' th' wanton way of youth. She knew her distance, and did angle for Madding my eagerness with her restraint,

As all impediments in fancy's course Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine,

Her infinite cunning with her modern grace Subdu'd me to her rate. She got the ring: And I had that which any inferior might 216 At market-price have bought.

I must be patient. Dia. You that have turn'd off a first so noble wife

May justly diet me. I pray you yet-Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband-

Send for your ring, I will return it home. And give me mine again.

I have it not. 222 King. What ring was yours, I pray you? Sir, much like The same upon your finger.

King. Know you this ring? This ring was his of late.

Dia. And this was it I gave him, being ahed.

King. The story, then, goes false you threw it him

Out of a casement.

I have spoke the truth. Dia.

Enter PAROLLES.

Ber. My lord, I do confess the ring was How could you give it him? hers.

You boggle shrewdly; every King. feather starts you.

Is this the man you speak of?

Ay, my lord. 23 King. Tell me, sirrah-but tell me true charge you,

Not fearing the displeasure of your master, Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off-

By him and by this woman here what know you?

Par. So please your Majesty, my master

Dia. I did, my lord, but loath am to he hath had in him, which gentlemen have. King. Come, come, to th' purpose. Did he love this woman?

Par. Faith, sir, he did love her: but how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Par. He lov'd her, sir, and lov'd her

King. As thou art a knave and no knave. What an equivocal companion is this! Par. I am a poor man, and at your Majesty's command.

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.

Dia. Do you know he promis'd me marriage?

Par. Faith, I know more than I'll speak. King. But wilt thou not speak all thou know'st?

Par. Yes, so please your Majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her-for indeed he was mad for her, and talk'd of Satan, and of Limbo, and of Furies, and I know not what. Yet I was in that credit with them at that time that I knew of their going to bed; and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would derive me ill will to speak of; therefore I will not speak what I know. 250

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married; but thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.

This ring, you say, was yours?

Dia. Av, my good lord. King. Where did you buy it? Or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

King. Who lent it you?

It was not lent me neither. Dia. King. Where did you find it then?

Dıa. I found it not. King. If it were yours by none of all these ways,

I never gave it him. Dia. Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord: she goes off and on at pleasure. 272 King. This ring was mine, I gave it his first wife. Dia. It might be yours or hers, for aught

I know. King. Take her away, I do not like her now;

To prison with her. And away with him. Unless thou tell'st me where thou hadst this ring,

Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you. King. Take her away.

Dia. I'll put in bail, my liege. King. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty.

He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to't:

284
I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.
Great King, I am no strumpet, by my life;

I am either maid, or else this old man's wife. [Pointing to Lafeu. King. She does abuse our ears; to prison

with her. 283

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail. Stay, royal sir; [Exit Widow.

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for.

And he shall surety me. But for this lord Who hath abus'd me as he knows himself, Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him.

He knows himself my bed he hath defil'd; And at that time he got his wife with child. Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick;

So there's my riddle: one that's dead is quick—297

And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow with HELENA.

King. Is there no exorcist Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes? Is't real that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord; 300 Tis but the shadow of a wife you see, The name and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both; O, pardon! Hel. O, my good lord, when I was like this maid,

I'll never tell you. I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring,

And, look you, here's your letter. This it says:
'When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child,' &c. This is done.

And are by me with child, &c. This is done, Will you be mine now you are doubly won? Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,

I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly. 310 Hel. If it appear not plain, and prove untrue.

Deadly divorce step between me and you! O my dear mother, do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions; I shall weep anon. [To Parolles] Good Tom Drum, lend me a handkercher. So, I thank thee. Wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee; let thy curtsies alone, they are scurvy ones. King. Let us from point the point this story know,

To make the even truth in pleasure flow.
[To Diana] If thou beest yet a fresh uncropped flower, 320 Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower;

For I can guess that by thy honest aid
Thou kept'st a wife herself, thyself a maid.—

Of that and all the progress, more and less, Resolvedly more leisure shall express. 325 All yet seems well; and if it end so meet, The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourisk.]

Scene I. The Duke's palace.

Enter Orsino, Duke of Illyria, Curio, and other Loids: Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play

Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting, The appetite may sicken and so die. That strain again! It had a dving fall: O. it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odour! Enough, no more:

'Tis not so sweet now as it was before. O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou!

That, notwithstanding thy capacity Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there, Of what validity and pitch soe'er, But falls into abatement and low price Even in a minute. So full of shapes is tancy. That it alone is high fantastical.

Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord? What, Curio? Duke.

Cur. The hart. Duke. Why, so 1 do, the noblest that Perchance he is not drown'd—what think I have.

O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first, 10 Methought she purg'd the air of pestilence! That instant was I turn'd into a hart, And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds, E'er since pursue me.

Enter VALENTINE.

How now! what news from her? Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted.

But from her handmaid do return this answer:

The element itself, till seven years' heat, Shall not behold her face at ample view: But like a cloistress she will veiled walk. And water once a day her chamber round

With eye-offending brine; all this season A brother's dead love, which she would you, sailors? Cap. It is perchance that you yourself were saved.

Vio. O my poor brother! and so perchance may he be.

Cap True, madam, and, to comfort you with chance,

Assure vourselt, after our ship did split, When you, and those poor number saved with you,

Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother.

Most provident in peril, bind himself— Courage and hope both teaching him the practice-

To a strong mast that liv'd upon the sea; Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back, 15 I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves

So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so, there's gold. Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope, Whereto thy speech serves for authority, 20 The like of him. Know'st thou this country?

Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born

Not three hours' travel from this very place.

Vio. Who governs here?

Cap. A noble duke, in nature as in name.

Vio. What is his name?

Cap. Orsino.

Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him.

He was a bachelor then.

Cap. And so is now, or was so very late;
For but a month ago I went from hence,
And then 'twas fresh in murmur—as, you
know,

What great ones do the less will prattle of— That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.

Vio. What's she?

Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count

That died some twelvemonth since, then leaving her

In the protection of his son, her brother, Who shortly also died; for whose dear

They say, she hath abjur'd the company 40 And sight of men.

Vio. O that I serv'd that lady, And might not be delivered to the world, Till I had made mine own occasion mellow, What my estate is!

Cap. That were hard to compass, Because she will admit no kind of suit—45 No, not the Duke's.

Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee,

Captain;

And though that nature with a beauteous

Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee I will believe thou hast a mind that suits 50 With this thy fair and outward character. I prithee, and I'll pay thee bounteously, Conceal me what I am, and be my aid 53 For such disguise as haply shall become The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke: Thou shalt present me as an cunuch to him; It may be worth thy pains, for I can sing And speak to him in many sorts of music, That will allow me very worth his service. What else may hap to fime I will commit; Only shape thou thy silence to my wit. 65

Cap. Be you his eunuch and your mute I'll be:

When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes Sir Toby Belch! not see. Sir To. Sweet

SCENE III. Olivia's house.

Enter SIR TOBY BELCH and MARIA.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth, Sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights; your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.
Sir To. Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than I am. These clothes are good finer than I am. These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you; I heard my lady talk of it yesterday, and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here to be her woor.

brought in one night here to be her wooer.

Str To. Who? Sir Andrew Aguecheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to th' purpose? Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats; he's a very fool and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fie that you'll say so! He plays o' th' viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath al! the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath indeed, almost natural; for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

are they?

Mar. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

34

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece; I'll drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat and drink in Illyria. He's a coward and a coystrill that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' th' toe like a parish-top. What, wench! Castiliano vulgo! for here comes Sir Andrew Agurtace.

Enter SIR ANDREW AGUECHEEK.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! How now, Sir Toby Belch!

Sir To. Sweet Sir Andrew! Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew. Mar. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Accost, Sir Andrew, accost. Sir And. What's that ?

Sir To. My mece's chambermaid.

Sir And. Good Mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good Mistiess Mary Accost— Sir To. You mistake, knight. 'Accost' is front her, board her, woo her, assail

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of 'accost'?

Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir To, An thou let part so, Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again!

Sir And. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in

Mar. Sir, I have not you by th' hand. Sir And. Marry, but you shall have; and here's my hand.

Mar. Now, sir, thought is free. I prav you, bring your hand to th' butt'ry-bar and let it drink.

Sir And. Wherefore, sweetheart? What's your metaphor?

Mar. It's dry, sir.

Sir And. Why, I think so; I am not such an ass but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Mar. A dry jest, sir.

Sir And. Are you full of them?

Mar. Ay, sir, I have them at my fingers' ends: marry, now I let go your hand, I am [Exit Maria. barren.

Sir To. O knight, thou lack'st a cup of canary! When did I see thee so put down?

Sir And. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down. Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian or an ordinary man has; but I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.

Sir To. No question.

Sir And. An I thought that, I'd forswear I'll ride home to-morrow, Sir Toby.

Sir To. Pourquoi, my dear knight? 85 Sir And. What is 'pourquoi'—do or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting. O. had I but followed the arts!

head of hair.

my hair?

will not curl by nature.

Sir And. But it becomes me well enough does't not?

Sir To. Excellent; it hangs like flay on a distaff, and I hope to see a huswife take thee between her legs and spin it off.

Sir And Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby. Your niece will not be seen, or if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me: the Count hunself here hard by woos her.

Sir To Sne'll none o' th' Count; she'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, not wit; I have heard her swear't. Tut, there's life in't, man.

Su And. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' th' strangest mind i' th' world; I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.

Sir To. Art thou good at these kickshawses, knight?

Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters: and yet I will not compare with an old an.

Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliaid, knight?

Sir And. Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir To. And I can cut the mutton to't. Sir And. And I think I have the backtrick simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

Sir To. Wherefore are these things hid? Wherefore have these gifts a curtain before 'em? Are they like to take dust, like Mistress Mall's picture? Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a sig: I would not so much as make water but in a sink-a-pace. What dost thou mean? Is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliaid.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-colour'd stock.

Shall we set about some revels?

Sir To. What shall we do else? Were we not born under Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus? That's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper. Ha, higher! Ha, ha, excellent! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The Duke's palace.

Enter VALENTINE, and VIOLA in man's attire.

Val. If the Duke continue these favours Sir To. Then hadst thou had an excellent towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanc'd; he hath known you but Sir And. Why, would that have mended three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour or my Sir To. Past question; for thou seest it negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. Is he inconstant, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me.

Enter DUKE, CURIO, and Attendants.

Vio. I thank you. Here comes the Count

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho? Vio. On your attendance, my lord, here. Duke. Stand you awhile aloof. Cesario,

Thou know'st no less but all; I have unclasp'd

Sure, my noble lord, Vω. If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow

As it is spoke, she never will admit me. Duke. Be clamorous and leap all civil bounds.

Rather than make unprofited return.

Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love.

Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith!

It shall become thee well to act my woes: She will attend it better in thy youth Than in a nuncio's of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Dear lad, believe it, Duke. For they shall yet belie thy happy years That say thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth and rubious; thy small Vio. I'll do my best To woo your lady. [Aside] Yet, barful strife!

Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife.

Scene V. Olivia's house.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse; my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me. He that is well hang'd in this world needs to fear no leave to prove you a fool. colours.

Mar. Make that good. Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good lenten answer. I can tell thee where that saying was born, of ' I fear no colours'.

Clo. Where, good Mistress Mary? Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hang'd for being so long absent : or to be turn'd away-is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad and for turning away, let marriage; summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute, then? Clo. Not so, neither; but I am resolv'd on two points.

Mar. That if one break, the other will hold; or if both break, your gaskins fall. Clo. Apt, in good faith, very apt! Well. go thy way; if Sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o' that. Here comes my lady. Make your excuse wisely, you were best. Exu.

Enter Olivia and Malvolio.

Clo. Wit, an't be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits that think they have thee do very oft prove fools; and I that am sure I lack thee may pass for a wise man. For what says Quinapalus? 'Better a witty fool than a foolish wit.' God bless thee, lady !

Oli. Take the fool away. Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, y'are a dry fool; I'll no more of you. Besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend; for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry. Bid the dishonest man mend himself: if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the botcher mend him. Anything that's mended is but patch'd; virtue that transgresses is but patch'd with sin, and sin that amends is but patch'd with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity, so beauty's a flower. The lady bade take away the fool: therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you. 49 Clo. Misprision in the highest degree! Lady, 'Cucullus non facit monachum'; that's as much to say as I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexteriously, good madonna. Oli. Make your proof.

55

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna. here he comes—one of thy kin has a most Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness. I'll bide your proof.

Clo.

Good madonna, why mourn'st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think his soul is in hell, madonna. Oli. I know his soul is in Frayen, fool, 64

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven. Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio?

Doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him. Infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly ! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for twopence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?
Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal; I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. I protest I take these wise men that crow so at these set kind of fools no better than the fools' zanies.

Oli. O, you are sick of selt-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distemper'd appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts that you deem cannon bullets. There is no slander in an allow'd fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury endue thee with leasing, for thou speak'st well of fools!

Re-enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman much desires to speak with you.

Oli. From the Count Orsino, is it? Mar. I know not, madam; 'tis a fair!

young man, and well attended.

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman. Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman. Fie on him! [Exit Maria] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the Count, I am sick, or not at home-what you will to dismiss it. [Exit Malvolio] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it. 104

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if the eldest son should be a fool; whose skull Jove cram with brains! Forweak pia mater.

Enter SIR TOBY.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk! What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman! What gentleman? Sir To. 'Tis a gentleman here. [Hiccups] A plague o' these pickle-herring! How now, sot!

Clo. Good Sir Toby !

Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy?

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery. There's one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry; what is he? Sir To. Let him be the devil an he will, I care not; give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one.

Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool? Clo. Like a drown'd man, a fool, and a madman: one draught above heat makes him a fool; the second mads him; and a third drowns him.

Oli. Go thou and seek the crowner, and let him sit o' my coz; for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drown'd; go look after him

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna, and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit.

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Madam, yound young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too. and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? He's fortified against any denial.

Oli. Tell him he shall not speak with me. Mal. Has been told so; and he says he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, and be the supporter to a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Oli. What kind o' man is he? Mal. Why, of mankind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Oli. Who of my people hold him in with you, will you or no. delay? Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll speak Oli. Of what personage and years is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple; 'tis with him in standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favour'd, and he speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

Oli. Let him approach. Call in my gentlewoman. 154 Mal. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit. Re-enter MARIA.

Oli. Give me my veil; come, throw it o'er my face; We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house. which is she?

Oli. Speak to me: I shall answer for her.

Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and un-matchable beauty—I pray you tell me if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her. I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage. 166

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart; and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am. 175 Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to beslow is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission. I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in't. I forgive you the praise. Vio. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned; I pray you keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates, and allow'd your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief; 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? Here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady.

Oli. Tell me your mind.

Vio. I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage: I hold the olive in my hand; my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. you? What would you? What are

Vio. The rudeness that hath appear'd in me have I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am and what I would are as secret as maidenhead-to your ears, divinity: to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone; we will hear this divinity. [Exeunt Maria and Attendants] Now, sir, what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet lady-

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where hes your text? Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oli. In his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method: in the first of his heart.

Oli. O, I have read it; it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face. Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your text; but we will draw the curtain and show you the picture. [Unveiling] Look you, sir, such a one I was this present. Is't not well done?

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all. Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white

Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid

Lady, you are the cruell'st she alive. 225 If you will lead these graces to the grave. And leave the world no copy.

Oli. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted: I will give out divers schedules of my beauty. It shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd to my will: as-item, two lips indifferent red; item, two grey eyes with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see you what you are: you are too proud;

But, if you were the devil, you are fair. 235 My lord and master loves you-O, such love Could be but recompens'd though you were crown'd

The nonparell of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertile tears, With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord does know my mind: I cannot love him.

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,

Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and

And in dimension and the shape of nature

Halloo your name to the reverberate hills, And make the babbling gossip of the air Cry out 'Olivia!' O, you should not rest you not that I go with you? Between the elements of air and earth But you should pity me!

Oli. You might do much. What is your parentage?

I am a gentleman.

Get you to your lord. I cannot love him; let him send no more— Unless perchance you come to me again 265 To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well. I thank you for your pains; spend this for me.

Oli. 'What is your parentage?' 'Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman.' I'll be sworn thou art:

Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit.

Do give thee five-fold blazon. Not too fast! Soft. soft!

Unless the master were the man. How now! Even so quickly may one catch the plague? Methinks I feel this youth's perfections 280 With an invisible and subtle stealth To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be. What ho, Malvolio!

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service. Run after that same peevish messenger.

The County's man. He left this ring behind him.

Would I or not. Tell him I'll none of it. Desire him not to flatter with his lord, Nor hold him up with hopes; I am not for him.

I'll give him reasons for't. Malvolio. 290 Mal. Madam, I will. Exit. Oli. I do I know not what, and fear to find Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind. Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe:

What is decreed must be; and be this so!

ACT TWO

Scene I. The sea-coast.

Enter ANTONIO and SEBASTIAN.

Ant. Will you stay no longer; nor will

Seb. By your patience, no. Mv stars shine darkly over me; the malignancy of my fate might perhaps distemper yours; therefore I shall crave of you your leave that I may bear my evils alone. It were a bad recompense for your leve to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you whither you are bound.

Seb. No, sooth, sir; my determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then. Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I call'd Roderigo: my father was that Sebastian of Messaline whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him myself and a sister, both born in an hour; if the heavens had been pleas'd, would we had so ended! But you, sir, alter'd that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drown'd. 20

Ant. Alas the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful; but though I could not with such estimable wonder overfar believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish her: she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair. She is drown'd already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done—that is, kill him whom you have recover'd—desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness, and I am yet so near the manners of my mother | What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia that, upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the Count Orsno's court. Farewell. [Exit. Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee!

I have many enemies in Orsino's court, 40 Else would I very shortly see thee there. But come what may, I do adore thee so That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. [Exit.

Scene II. A street.

Enter VIOLA and MALVOLIO at several doors.

Mal. Were you not ev'n now with the Countess Olivia?

Vio. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arriv'd but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir; you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him. And one thing more: that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

Vio. She took the ring of me; I'll none of it.

Mal. Come, sir, you peevishly threw it to her; and her will is it should be so return'd. If it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it. Exit.

Vio. I left no ring with her; what means this lady?

Fortune forbid my outside have not charm'd her!

She made good view of me; indeed, so much

That methought her eyes had lost her tongue,

SCENE III. Olivia's house.

Enter SIR TOBY and SIR ANDREW.

Sir To. Approach, Sir Andrew. Not to be abed after midnight is to be up becimes: and 'diluculo surgere' thou know'st-

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know to be up late is to be up late. 5 Sir To. A false conclusion! I hate it as an unfill'd can. To be up after midnight and to go to bed then is early; so that to go to bed after midnight is to go to bed betimes. Does not our lives consist of the four elements?

Sir And. Faith, so they say: but I think it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Th'art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink. Marian, I say! a stoup of wine.

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, i' faith. Clo. How now, my hearts! Did you never see the picture of 'we three'? 16 Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth. thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spok'st of Pigrogromitus, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Queubus; 'twas very good, i' faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman; hadst it? 24

Clo. I did impeticos thy gratillity; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock. My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sur And. Excellent! Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song. Sir To. Come on, there is sixpence for you. Let's have a song. Sir And. There's a testril of me too: if one knight give a-Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song. Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

Clown sings.

O mistress mine, where are you roaming? O, stay and hear; your true love's coming, That can sing both high and low. Trip no further, pretty sweeting; Journeys end in lovers meeting, Every wise man's son doth know. Sir And. Excellent good, i' faith ! Sir To. Good, good !

Clown sings.

What is love? 'Tis not hereafter: Present mirth hath present laughter: What's to come is still unsure.

In delay there lies no plenty,

Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty; 50 Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, i faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is duicet But shall we make the in contagion. welkin dance indeed? Shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver? Shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't. I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be 'Thou knave'.

'Hold thy peace, thou knave' knight? I shall be constrain'd in't to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins 'Hold thy peace'.

Clo. I shall never begin if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, i' faith! Come, begin. 69 [Catch sung.

Enter MARIA.

Mar. What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not call'd up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn vou out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a Cataian, we are politicians, Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey, and [Sings]

Three merry men be we.

Am not I consanguineous? Am I not of her blood? Tilly-vally, lady. [Sings]

There dwelt a man in Babylon,

Lady, lady.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough if he be dispos'd, and so do I too; he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. [Sings] O' the twelfth day of December-

Mar. For the love o' God, peace!

Enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? Or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, no honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an ale-hous.

of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your coziers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneck up!

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you My lady bade me tell you that, though she ha. bours you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanours, you are welcome to the house: if not, and it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. [Sings] Farewell, dear heart, since

I must needs be gone. Mar. Nay, good Sir Toby.

Clo. [Sings] His eyes do show his days are almost done.

Mal. Is't even so? Sir To. [Sings] But I will never die.

[Falls down. Clo. [Sings] Sir Toby, there you lie. Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. [Sings] Shall I bid him go? Clo. [Sings] What an if you do? Sur To. [S rgs] Shall I bid him go, and spare not? Clo. [Sings] O, no, no, no, no, you dare

Sir To. [Rising] Out o' tune, sir! Ye lie. Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Clo. Yes, by Saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot i' th' mouth too.

Sir To. Th'art i' th' right. Go, sir, rub your chain with crumbs. A stoup of wine, Maria!

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you priz'd my lady's favour at anything more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule; she shall know of it, by this

Mar. Go shake your ears.

Sir And, 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's ahungry, to challenge him the field, and then to break promise with him and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do't, knight. I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for tonight; since the youth of the Count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him; if I do not gull him into a nayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know I can do it. 129

Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

him like a dog.

Sir To. What, for being a Puritan? Thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for t, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or anything constantly but a time-pleaser; an affection'd ass that cons state without book and utters it by great swarths; the best persuaded of himself, so cramm'd, as he thinks, with excellencies that it is his grounds of faith that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eve, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.

Sir And. I have't in my nose too. Sir To. He shall think, by the letters that thou wilt drop, that they come from my niece, and that she's in love with him. Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of

Sir And. And your horse now would make him an ass.

that colour.

Mar. Ass, I doubt not.

Sir And. O. 'twill be admirable!

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you. I know my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter; observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed. and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit.

Sir To. Good night, Penthesilea. Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench. Sir To. She's a beagle true-bred, and one that adores me. What o' that ?

Sir And. I was ador'd once too.

Sir To. Let's to bed, knight. Thou hadst need send for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.

Sir To. Send for money, knight: if thou hast her not i' th' end, call me Cut.

Sir And. If I do not, never trust me; take it how you will.

Sir To. Come, come, I'll go burn some sack; 'tis too late to go to bed now. Come, knight; come, knight. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. The Duke's balace.

Enter DUKE, VIOLA, CURIO, and Others.

Duke. Give me some music. Now, good morrow, friends.

Sir And. O. if I thought that, I'd beat Now, good Cesario, but that piece of some That old and antique song we heard last night:

> Methought it did relieve my passion much. More than light airs and recollected terms 5 Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Come, but one verse.

> Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it. Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord; a fool that the Lady Olivia's father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the [Exit Curio. Music plays. Come hither, boy. If ever thou shalt love. In the sweet pangs of it remember me: 15 For such as I am all true lovers are.

Unstaid and skittish in all motions else Save in the constant image of the creature That is belov'd. How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat 23 Where Love is thron'd.

Thou dost speak masterly. Duke. My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye

Hath stay'd upon some favour that it loves: Hath it not, boy?

A little, by your favour. 24 Vio. Duke. What kind of woman is't?

Vio. Of your complexion. Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years, i' faith?

Vio. About your years, my loru.

Duke. Too old, by heaven! Let still the woman take

An elder than herself; so wears she to him, So sways she level in her husband's heart. For, boy, however we do praise ourselves, Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm, 32 More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won.

Than women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord. Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself,

Or thy affection cannot hold the bent; For women are as roses, whose fair flow'r Being once display'd doth fall that very hour.

Vio. And so they are: alas, that they are so !

To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter CURIO and Clown.

Duke. O, fellow, come, the song we had last night.

Mark it, Cesario; it is old and plain; The spinsters and the knitters in the sun. And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,

Do use to chant it; it is silly sooth. And dallies with the innocence of love, Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready, sir? Duke. Ay; prithee, sing.

[Music.

Feste's Song.

Come away, come away, death; And in sad cypress let me be laid; Fly away, fly away, breath, I am slain by a fair cruel maid.

My shroud of white, stuck all with yew, O, prepare it!

My part of death no one so true Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet, On my black coffin let there be strown; Not a friend, not a friend greet 60 My poor corpse where my bones shall be thrown;

A thousand thousand sighs to save, La, me, O, where Sad true lover never find my grave, To weep there!

Duke. There's for thy pains.

Clo. No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing, sir.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure, then.

Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee. Clo. Now the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opal. I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be everything, and their intent everywhere; for that's it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. [Exit Clown. Duke. Let all the rest give place.

[Exeunt Curio and Attendants.

Once more, Cesario,

Get thee to yond same sovereign cruelty. Tell her my love, more noble than the world.

Prizes not quantity of dirty lands; The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon

her,
Tell her I hold as giddily as Fortune;
But 'tis that miracle and queen of gems

But tis that miracle and queen of gems
That Nature pranks her in attracts my soul.

85

Vio. But if she cannot love you, sir?

Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. Sooth, but you must.

Say that some lady, as perhaps there is, Hath for your love as great a pang of heart As you have for Olivia. You cannot love

You tell her so. Must she not then be answer'd?

Duke. There is no woman's sides
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart; no woman's obig to hold so much; they lack retention. Alas, their love may be call'd appelite—

No motion of the liver, but the palate—
Ihat suffer surfert, cloyment, and revolt;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea, 99
And can digest as much. Make no compare Between that love a woman can bear me
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know-

Duke. What dost thou know? Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe.

In faith, they are as true of heart as we, 105
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be perhaps, were I a woman,

I should your lordship.

Duke. And wh

Duke. And what's her history?

Vio. A blank, my loid. She never told her love.

But let concealment, like a worm i' th' bud, Feed on her damask cheek. She pin'd in thought;

And with a green and vellow melancho'y
She sat like Patience on a monument,
Smiling at griet. Was not this love indeed?
We men may say more, swear more, but indeed 115

Our shows are more than will; for still we prove

Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?

Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house,

And all the brothers too—and yet I know not.

Sir, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme. To her in haste. Give her this jewel; say My love can give no place, bide no denay.
[Exeunt.

Scene V. Olivia's garden

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come thy ways, Signior Fabian. Fab. Nay, I'll come; if I lose a scruple of this sport let me be boil'd to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?

Fab. I would exult, man; you know he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-buting here.

Str To. To anger him we'll have the bear again; and we will fool him black and blue—shall we not, Sir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain. How now, my metal of India!

Mar. Get ve all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk. He has been yonder i' the sun practising behaviour to his own shadow this half hour. Observe him, for the love of mockery, for I know this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! [As the men hide she drops a letter] Lie thou there; for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit. 20

Enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me she did attect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't? 26

Sir To. Here's an overweening rogue! Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him; how he jets under his advanc'd plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue-

Sir To. Peace, I say.

Mal. To be Count Malvolio!

Sir To. Ah, rogue!

Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir To. Peace, peace!

Mal. There is example for't: the Lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. Fie on him, Jezebel:

Fab. O, peace! Now he's deeply in; look how imagination blows him.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state—

Sir To. O, for a stone-bow to hit him in the eve!

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branch'd velvet gown, having come from a day-bed-where I have left Olivia sleeping-

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!

Fab. O, peace, peace!

Mal. And then to have the humour of state; and after a demure travel of regard, telling them I know my place as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinsman Toby-

Sir To. Bolts and shackles!

Fab. O, peace, peace! Now, now. Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him. I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel. Toby approaches; curtsies there to me— Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace. 60 Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control-

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips then?

Mal. Saying 'Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your niece give me this prerogative of speech '-

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. 'You must amend your drunkenness '

Sir To. Out, scab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. 'Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight '-

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. 'One Sir Andrew.'

Sir And. I knew 'twas I; for many do call me fool.

Mal. What employment have we here? [Taking up the letter.

Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin. Sir To. O, peace! And the spirit of humours intimate reading aloud to him!

Mal. Ev my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir And. Her C's, her U's, and her T's.

Why that?

Mal. [Reads] 'To the unknown belov'd. this, and my good wishes.' Her very phrases! By your leave, wax. Soft! And the impressure her Lucrece with which she uses to seal; 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all. Mal. [Reads] ' Jove knows I love, But who?

> Lips, do not move; No man must know.'

90

100

'Ne man must know.' What follows? The numbers alter'd! 'No man must know.' If this should be thee, Malvolio?
Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!

Mal. [Reads] I may command where I adore; But silence, like a Lucrece knife, With bloodless stroke my heart doth

M. O. A. I. doth sway my life.'

Fab. A fustian riddle!

Sir To. Excellent wench, say I. Mal. 'M. O. A. I. doth sway my life.' Nay, but first let me see, let me see, let me

Fab. What dish o' poison has she dress'd him!

Sir To. And with what wing the staniel checks at it!

Mal. 'I may command where I adore.' Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity; there is no obstruction in this. And the end—what should that alphabetical position portend? If I could of putting on. make that resemble something in me. praised! Here is yet a postscript. Softly! M. O. A. I .-

Sir To. O, ay, make up that! He is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Sowter will cry upon't for all this. though it be as rank as a fox.

Mal. M-Malvolio; M-why, that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I say he would work it out? The cur is excellent at faults.

Mal. M--But then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fab. And O shall end, I hope. Sn To. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry 'O!'

Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fab. Av, an you had any eye behind you. you might see more detraction at your heels than fortunes before you.

Mal. M. O. A. I. This simulation is not as the former; and yet, to crush this a little. it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft ! here follows prose.

[Reads] 'If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness. Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em. Thy Fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and, to mure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough and appear tresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. She thus advises thee that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wish'd to see thee ever cross-garter'd. I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desir'st to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to She touch Forlune's fingers. Daylight and champain discovers not more. This is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-devise the very man. I do not now fool myself to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this, that my lady She did commend my yellow loves me. stockings of late, she did praise my leg being cross-garter'd; and in this she manifests herself to my lowe, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-garter'd, even with the swiftness a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or [Reads] 'Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertain'st my love, let it appear in thy smiling; thy smiles become thee well. Therefore in Therefore in my piesence still smile, dear my sweet. I prithee.'

Jove, I thank thee. I will smile; I will do everything that thou wilt have me. [Exit.

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from tue Sophy.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And ask no other dowry with her but such another jest.

Enter MARIA.

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher. Sir To. Wilt thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either?

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at travtrip, and become thy bond-slave? Sir And. I' faith, or I either?

Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream that when the image of it leaves him he must run mad.

Mar. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vitæ with a midwife. Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady. He will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors, and cross-garter'd, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt. If you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit! 185 Sir And. I'll make one too. [Exeunt.

ACT THREE

Scene I. Olivia's garden.

Enter VIOLA, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music! Dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. No, sir, I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman? Clo. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou mayst say the king lies by the church stands by thy tabor, if thy welkin-I might say 'element' but the tabor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir. To see this age! A sentence is but a chev'ril glove to a good wit. How quickly the wrong side may be turn'd outward!

Vio. Nay, that's certain; they that dally nicely with words may quickly make them

Clo. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name's a word; and to dally with that word might make my sister wanton. But indeed words are very rascals since bonds disgrac'd them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clo. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words, and words are grown so false I am loath to prove reason with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow and car'st for nothing.

Clo. Not so, sir; I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you. If that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

io. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool? Clo. No, indeed, sir; the Lady Olivia has no folly; she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands as pilchers are to herrings—the husband's the bigger. I am indeed not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the Count

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee, I am almost sick for one; [Aside] though I would not have it grow on my chin .- Is thy lady within?

Clo. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together and put to Enter SIR TOBY and SIR ANDREW.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman! Vio. And you, sir.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur. Vio. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

Sir And. I hope, sir, you are; and I am vours.

Sir To. Will you encounter the house? My niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyage, Sir To. Taste your legs, sir; put them to motion.

Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir. than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter. Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance. But we are prevented.

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

Most excellent accomplish'd lady, heavens rain odours on you! Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier-

Rain odours ' well!

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed

Sir And. 'Odours', 'pregnant', and 'vouchsafed'-I'll get 'em all three all ready.

Oli. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exeunt all but Olivia and Viola] Give me your hand, sir.

This was look'd for at your hand, and this was baulk'd. double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sail'd into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt either of valour or policy.

Sir And. An't be any way, it must be with valour, for policy I hate; I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.

Sir To. Why, then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the Count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places. My niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself there is no lovebroker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, Sir

Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curst and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent and full of invention. Taunt him with the license of ink; if thou thou'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down; go about it. Let there be gaal enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it. 47 Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the cubiculo. [Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakın to you, Sır Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad-some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him; but you'll not deliver't? Sir To. Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. think oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were open'd and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of th' anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty. 61

Enter MARIA.

Sir To. Look where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Mar. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado; for there is no Christian that means to be saved by believing rightly can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-garter'd?

Mar. Most viliainously; like a pedant that keeps a school i' th' church. I have dogg'd him like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I dropp'd to betray him. He does smile his face into more lines than is in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies. You have not seen such a thing as 'tis: I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him; if she do. he'll smile and take't for a great favour. 77

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is.

SCENE III. A street.

Enter SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO.

I would not by my will have troubled you: But since you make your pleasure of your pains,

I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire, More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth; And not all love to see you-though so

As might have drawn one to a longer voyage-

But jealousy what might befall your travel. Being skilless in these parts; which to a stranger, Unguided and unfriended, often prove 10 Rough and unhospitable. My willing love, The rather by these arguments of fear. Set forth in your pursuit.

My kind Antonio, I can no other answer make but thanks. And thanks, and ever thanks; and oft good turns

Are shuffl'd off with such uncurrent pay; But were my worth as is my conscience firm,

You should find better dealing. What's to do?

Shall we go see the reliques of this town?

Ant. To-morrow, sir; best first go see your lodging.

Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night;

I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes With the memorials and the things of fame Tnat do renown this city.

Would you'd pardon me. I do not without danger walk these streets: Once in a sea-fight 'gainst the Count his galleys

I did some service; of such note, indeed, That, were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answer'd.

Seb. Belike you slew great number of his neonle.

Ant. Th' offence is not of such a bloody I sent for thee upon a sad occasion. natule:

Albeit the quality of the time and quarrel Might well have given us bloody argument. It might have since been answer'd in repaying

What we took from them; which, for traffic's sake,

Most of our city did. Only myself stood out: For which, if I be lapsed in this place, I shall pay dear.

Do not then walk too open. Seb. Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse;

In the south suburbs, at the Elephant. Is best to lodge. I will bespeak our diet, 40 Whiles you beguile the time and feed your knowledge

With viewing of the town; there shall you have me.

Seb. Why I your purse?

Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy

Scene IV. Olivia's garden. Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

Oli. I have sent after him; he says he'll

How shall I feast him? What bestow of him?

For youth is bought more oft than begg'd or borrow'd.

I speak too loud.

Where's Malvolio? He is sad and civil, And suits well for a servant with my fortunes.

Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is sure possess'd, madam.

Oli. Why, what's the matter? Does he rave?

Mar. No, madam, he does nothing but Your ladyship were best to have some guard about you if he come; for sure the man is tainted in's wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria. I am as mad as he, If sad and merry madness equal be.

Re-enter MARIA with MALVOLIO.

How now, Malvolio! Mal. Sweet lady, ho, ho. Oli. Smil'st thou?

Mal. Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? If it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is: 'Please one and please all'.

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? What is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed. I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? Mal. To bed? Ay, sweetheart, and I'll come to thee.

Oli. God comfort thee! Why gost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?

Mar. How do you, Malvolio?

Mal. At your request? Yes, nightingales answer daws!

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mal. 'Be not afraid of greatness.' 'Twas well writ.

Oli. What mean'st thou by that,

Mal. 'Some are born great,'-

Oli. Ha?

Mal. 'Some achieve greatness,'-Oli. What say'st thou?

Mal. 'And some have greatness thrust upon them.

Oli. Heaven restore thee!

Mal. 'Remember who commended thy vellow stockings,'-

Oli. 'Thy yellow stockings'? 'And wish'd to see thee cross-Mal.

garter'd.'

Oli. 'Cross-garter'd'?
Mal, 'Go to, thou art made, if thou desir'st to be so: '-Oli. Am I made?

Mal. ' If not, let me see thee a servant

Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness. Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the Count Orsino's is return'd: I could hardly entreat him back; he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant] Good Maria, let this fellow be look'd to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him; I would not have him miscarry for the half of my [Exeunt Olivia and Maria. dowry.

Mal. O, ho! do you come near me now? No worse man than Sir Toby to look to me! This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. 'Cast thy humble slough' says she. 'Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants; let thy tongue tang with arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity' consequently sets down the manner how, as: a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have lim'd her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful! And when she went away now-' Let this fellow be look'd to'.
'Malvolio' nor after 'Fellow' nor after my degree, but Why, everything adheres to-' fellow ' gether, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance-What can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me and the full prospect of my hopes. Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter Maria, with Sir Toby and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils of hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possess'd him, vet I'll speak to him.

Fab. Here he is, here he is. How is't But see, but see.

with you, sir?

Sir To. How is't with you, man? Mal. Go off; I discard you. Let me enjoy my private; go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! Did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so? Sir To. Go to, go to; peace, peace; we must deal gently with him. Let me alone. How do you, Malvolio? How is't with you? What, man, defy the devil; consider, he's an enemy to mankind. Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. La you, an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart! Pray God he be not bewitch'd.

Fab. Carry his water to th' wise woman. Mar. Marry, and it shall be done tomorrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

Mal. How now, mistress!

Mar. O Lord!

Sir To. Prithee hold thy peace; this is not the way. Do you not see you move him? Let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleness—gently, gently. The fiend is rough, and will not be roughly us'd.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bawcock! How dost thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir!

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man, 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan. Hang him, foul collier!

Mar. Get him to say his prayers, good

Sir Toby, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx! Mar. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of godliness.

Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! You are idle shallow things; I am not of your element; you shall know more hereafter.

Sir To. Is't possible? Fab. If this were play'd upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction. Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air and taint,

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad indeed.

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad. We may carry it thus, for our pleasure and his penance. till our very pastime, tired out of breath. prompt us to have mercy on him; at which time we will bring the device to the bar and crown thee for a finder of madmen.

Enter SIR ANDREW.

Fab. More matter for a May morning. Sir And. Here's the challenge; read it. I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't. Fab. Is't so saucy?

Sir And. Ay, 1s't, I warrant him; do but Sir To. Give me. [Reads] 'Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow.

Fab. Good and valiant.

Sir To. [Reads] ' Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for't.' Fab. A good note; that keeps you from the blow of the law.

Sir To. [Reads] 'Thou com'st to the Lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly; but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for.' 150

Fab. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense-less.

Sir To. [Reads] '1 will waylay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me '~

Fab. Good.

Sir To. ' Thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain.

Fab. Still you keep o' th' windy side of the law. Good!

Sir To. [Reads] 'Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn ANDREW AGUECHEEK.

If this letter move him not, his legs cannot. A fiend like thee might bear my soul to I'll give't him. 163

Mar. You may have very fit occasion for't: he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart. 166

Sir To. Go, Sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-baily; so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and as thou draw'st, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twang'd off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earn'd him. Away.

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing.

Exit. Sir To. Now will not I deliver his letter: for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding: his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less. Therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir. I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth, set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman -as I know his youth will aptly receive it-into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices. 186

Re-enter OLIVIA, with VIOLA.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece; give them way till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria. Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone,

And laid mine honour too unchary out; There's something in me that reproves my fault:

But such a headstrong potent fault it is That it but mocks reproof. Vio. With the same haviour that your passion bears Goes on my master's griefs;

Oli. Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture.

Refuse it not; it hath no tongue to vex you. And I beseech you come again to-morrow. What shall you ask of me that I'll deny, 201 That honour sav'd may upon asking give?

Vio. Nothing but this—your true love for my master.

Oli. How with mine honour may I give him that

Which I have given to you?

I will acquit you. 205 Oli. Well, come again to-morrow. Fare thee well; hell. Exit.

Re-enter SIR TOBY and FABIAN.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee. Vio. And you, sir.

Sir To. That defeace thou hast, betake thee to't. Of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy intercepter, full of despite, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Dismount thy tuck, be vare in thy preparation, for thy assaulant is quick, skilful, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake, sii; I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me; my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwise. I assure you; therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard: for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength. skill, and wrath, can furnish man withal. 222

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he? Sir To. He is knight, dubb'd with unhatch'd rapier and on carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl. Souls and bodies hath he divorc'd three: and his incensement at this moment is so implacable that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre. Hobnob is his word-give't or take't.

Vio. I will return again into the house and desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely on others to taste their valour; belike this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury; therefore, get you on and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me which with as much safety you might answer him; therefore on, or strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about

Vio. This is as uncivil as strange. beseech you do me this courteous office as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return.

[Exit Sir Toby.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter? Fab. I know the knight is incens'd against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more. 250 Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he? Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him if I can.

367

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't. I am one that would rather go with sir priest than sir knight. I care not who knows so much of my mettle.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter SIR TOBY with SIR ANDREW.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a firago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Pox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified; Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't; an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damn'd ere I'd have challeng'd him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capilet.

Str To. I'll make the motion. Stand here, make a good show on't; this shall end without the perdition of souls. [Aside] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola.

[To Fabian] I have his horse to take up the quarrel; I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fab. [To Sir Toby] He is as horribly conceited of him; and pants and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. [To Viola] There's no remedy, sir: he will fight with you for's oath sake. Marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of. Therefore draw for the supportance of his yow; he protests he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fab. Give ground if you see him furious. Sir To. Come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you; he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promis'd me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to't.

Sir And. Pray God he keep his oath! [They draw.

Enter ANTONIO.

Vio. I do assure you 'tis against my will.

Ant. Put up your sword. If this young gentleman

296

Have done offence, I take the fault on me: If you offend him, I for him defy you. Sir To. You, sir! Why, what are you?

Sir To. You, sir! Why, what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more

Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay. if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [They draw.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O good Sir Toby, hold! Here come the officers.

Sir To. [To Antonio] I'll be with you anon.

Vio. Pray, sir, put your sword up, if you please.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and for that Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and for that I promis'd you, I'll be as good as my word. He will bear you easily and reins well.

1 Off. This is the man; do thy office.
2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit
Of Count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

1 Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour well.

Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.

Take him away; he knows I know him well, Ant. I must obey. [To Viola] This comes with seeking you;

But there's no remedy; I shall answer it. What will you do, now my necessity Makes me to ask you for my purse? It grieves me

Much more for what I cannot do for you 320
Than what befalls myself. You stand amaz'd:

But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What money, sir? 3% For the fair kindness you have show'd me here, And part being prompted by your present trouble,

Out of my lean and low ability

I'll lend you something. My having is not much;

I'll make division of my present with you; Hold, there's half my coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now? Is't possible that my deserts to you

Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,

Lest that it make me so unsound a man As to upbraid you with those kindnesses That I have done for you.

V10. I know of none. Nor know I you by voice or any feature. I hate ingratitude more in a man 338 Than lying, vainness, babbling drunkenness.

Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption

Inhabits our frail blood.

O heavens themselves! Ant. 2 Off. Come, sir, I pray you go.

Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here

I snatch'd one half out of the jaws of death,

Reliev'd him with such sanctity of love, 345 And to his image, which methought did promise

Most venerable worth, did I devotion,

1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by; away.

Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. In nature there's no blemish but the mind:

None can be call'd deform'd but the un-

1 Off. The man grows mad. Away with him. Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. IExit with Officers. Vio. Methinks his words do from such passion fly

That he believes himself; so do not I. 358 Prove true, imagination, O, prove true, That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you! Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian; we'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage saws.

Vio. He nam'd Sebastian. I my brother

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again and beat him.

Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword. 376 (Exit.

Sir And. An I do not-Fab. Come, let's see the event.

ACT FOUR

Scene I. Before Olivia's house.

Enter SEBASTIAN and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow; let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not Master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither. Nothing that

Clo. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. I prithee now, ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady. Shall I vent to her that thou art coming?

Seb. I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from

I shall give worse payment. Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good reportafter fourteen years' purchase.

Enter SIR ANDREW, SIR TOBY, and FABIAN.

Sir And. Now, sır, have I met you again ? [Striking Sebastian] There's for you.

Seb. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there.

Are all the people mad?

Sir To. Hold, sir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the house. [Holding Sebastian.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight. I would not be in some of your coats for two-pence. Exit. 30

Sir And. Nay, let him alone. another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria; though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that. Seb. Let go thy hand.

Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron; you are well flesh'd. Come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?

Oli. Hold, Toby; on thy life, I charge thee hold.

Sir To. Madam!

Oli, Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch.

Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves.

Where manners ne'er were preach'd! Out of my sight!

Be not offended, dear Cesario-

Rudesby, be gone!

Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian. I puthee, gentle friend,

O, say so, and so be! IExeunt.

Scene II. Olivia's house.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I prithee, put on this gown and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas the curate; do it quickly. I'll [Exit.

call Sir Toby the whilst. [Exit. Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in't; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not tall enough to become the function well nor lean enough to be thought a good student; but to be said an honest man and a good housekeeper goes as fairly as to say a careful man and a great scholar. The competitors enter. 10

Enter SIR TOBY and MARIA.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, Master Parson. Clo. Bonos dies, Sir Toby; for as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of King Gorboduc 'That that is is'; so I, being Master Parson, am Master Parson; for what is 'that' but that, and 'is' but is?

Sir To. To him, Sir Topas.

Clo. What ho, I say! Peace in this prison!

Sir To. The knave counterfeits well: a good knave.

Mal. [Within] Who calls there? Clo. Sir Topas the cutate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

Mal. Sir Topas, Sir Topas, good Sir Topas, go to my lady.

Clo. Our, hyperbolical fiend! vexest thou this man! Talkest thou nothing but of ladies?

Sir To. Well said, Master Parson.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged. Good Sir Topas, do not think I am mad; they have laid me here in hideous darkness.

Clo. Fie, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms, for I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy. Say'st thou

Mal. As hell, Sir Topas.

Clo. Why, it hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes, and the clerestories toward the south north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

Mal. I am not mad, Sir Topas. I say to you this house is dark.

Clo Madman, thou errest. I say there is no darkness but ignorance; in which thou Would art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their tog.

Mal. I say this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell, and I say there was never man thus abus'd. I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wild towl?

Mal. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.

Clo. What think'st thou of his opinion? Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness: thou shalt hold th' opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.

Mal. Sir Topas, Sir Topas!

Sir To. My most exquisite Sir Topas! 60 Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou mightst have done this without thy beard and gown: he sees thee not.

Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou find'st him. I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently deliver'd, I would he were; for I am now so far in oflence with my niece that I cannot purtue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber.

[Éxeunt Sir Toby and Maria. Clo. [Sings] Hey, Robin, jolly Robin, Tell me how thy lady does.

Mal. Fool!

Clo [Sings] My lady is unkind, perdy.

Mal. Fool!

Clo. [Sings] Alas, why is she so?

Mal. Fool I say!

Clo. [Sings] She loves another—Who calls, ha?

Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper; as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for t. 80

Clo. Master Malvolio?

Mal. Ay, good fool. Clo. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?

Mal. Fool. there was never man so notoriously abus'd; I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

Clo. But as well? Then you are mad indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mal. They have here propertied me:

Mal. They have here propertied me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, asses, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Advise you what you say: the minister is here. [Speaking as Sir Topas] Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! Endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble-babble.

Mal. Śir Topas!

Clo. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—Who, I, sir? Not I, sir. God buy you, good Sir Topas.—Marry, amen.—I will, sir, I will.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say!

Clo. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.

Mal. Good fool, help me to some light and some paper. I tell thee I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well-a-day that you were, sir! 104 Mal. By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light; and convey what I will set down to my lady. It shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Clo. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed, or do you but counterfeit?

Mal. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman till I see his brains. I will fetch you light and paper and ink.

Mal. Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree; I prithee be gone.

Clo. [Singing]

I am gone, sir,
And anon, sir,
I'll be with you again,
In a trice,
Like to the old Vice,

Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath,
In his rage and his wrath.
Cires, Ah, ha! to the devil;
Like a mad lad,
Pare thy nails, dad.

Adieu, goodman devil.

Scene III. Olivia's garden.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun;

This pearl she gave me, I do feel't and see't; And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,

Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio, then?

I could not find him at the Elephant; 5
Yet there he was; and there I found this credit,

That he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service; For though my soul disputes well with my sense

That this may be some error, but no madness,

Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes

And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me

To any other trust but that I am mad, 15 Or else the lady's mad; yet if 'twere so, She could not sway her house, command her followers,

Take and give back affairs and their dispatch

With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing,
As I perceive she does. There's something in't 20

That is deceivable. But here the lady

That is deceivable. But here the ladcomes.

Enter OLIVIA and Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well,

Now go with me and with this holy man Into the chantry by; there, before him and underneath that consecrated roof, 25 Plight me the full assurance of your faith, That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace. He shall conceal it Whi es you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep 30 According to my birth. What do you say?

Seb. I'll follow this good man, and go lady know I am here to speak with her. with you:

And, having sworn truth, ever will be true. Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine

That they may fairly note this act of minc! Exeunt.

ACT FIVE.

Scene I. Before Olivia's house.

Enter Clown and FABIAN.

Fab. Now, as thou lov'st me, let me see his letter.

Clo. Good Master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Anything.

Clo. Do not desire to see this letter. Fab. This is to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter DUKE, VIOLA, CURIO and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

Clo. Ay, sir, we are some of her trappings. Duke. I know thee well. How dost thou, my good fellow?

Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary: the better for thy friends.

Clo. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

Clo. Marry, sir, they praise me and make an ass of me. Now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass; so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused; so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why then, the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

me. There's gold.

Clo. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another. 26 Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Clo. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obev it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double-dealer. There's another.

Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is 'The third pays for all'. The triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of Saint Bennet, sir, may put you in mind-one,

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw; if you will let your Drew to defend him when he was beset; and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, sir, lullany to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness. But, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap; I will awake it anon. Exit.

Enter ANTONIO and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescure me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well:

Yet when I saw it last it was besmear'd As black as Vulcan in the smoke of war. A baubling vessel was he captain of,

For shallow draught and bulk unprizable. With which such scathful grapple did he make

With the most noble bottom of our fleet That very envy and the tongue of loss Cried fame and honour on him. What's the matter?

1 Off. Orsing, this is that Antonio That took the Phoenix and her fraught from Candy:

And this is he that did the Tiger board When your young nephew litus lost his leg.

Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state,

In private brabble did we apprehend him. Vio. He did me kindness, sir; drew on my side:

But in conclusion put strange speech upon me.

I know not what 'twas but distraction. Duke. Notable pirate, thou salt-water thief! What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies

Whom thou, in terms so bloody and so dear. Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir, 66 Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:

Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Though I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither:

That most ingrateful boy there by your side

From the rude sea's enrag'd and foamy mouth

Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was. His life I gave him, and did thereto add My love without retention or restraint, 75 All his in dedication; for his sake, Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town:

Where cunning.

Not meaning to partake with me in danger. Taught him to face me out of his acquaint-

And grew a twenty years removed thing While one would wink; denied me mine I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love own purse,

Which I had recommended to his use Nor half an hour before.

How can this be? Vio.Duke. When came he to this town?
Ant. To-day, my lord; and for three months before, No int'rim, not a minute's vacancy,

Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter OLIVIA and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the Countess: now heaven walks on earth.

But for thee, fellow-fellow, thy words are madness.

Three months this youth hath tended upon

But more of that anon. Take him aside. Oli. What would my lord, but that he Call forth the holy father. may not have,

Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable? 96 Cesario, you do not keep promise with me. Vio. Madam?

Duke, Gracious Olivia-

Oli. What do you say, Cesario? Good my lord~

Vio. My lord would speak; my duty hushes me.

Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my

It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear

As howling after music. Still so cruel? Oli. Still so constant, lord. 105

Duke. What, to perverseness? You uncivil lady,

To whose ingrate and unauspicious altars My soul the faithfull'st off'rings hath breath'd out

That e'er devotion tender'd! What shall I do?

Him will I tear out of that cruel eve Where he sits crowned in his master's spite. Come, boy, with me; my thoughts are rine in mischief:

To spite a raven's heart within a dove. 125 Vio. And I, most jocund, apt, and willingly.

To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die. Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love More than I love these eyes, more than my life.

More, by all mores, than e'er I shall love wife.

If I do feign, you witnesses above

Punish my life for tainting of my love! Oli. Ay me, detested! How am I beguil'd!

Vio. Who does beguile you? Who does do you wrong?

Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?

Exit an Attendant.

Duke. Come, away! Oli. Whither, my lord? Cesario, husband, stay.

Duke, Husband?

Ay, husband; can he that deny? Oli. Duke. Her husband, sirrah?

Vio. No, my lord, not I. Oli. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear 140 That makes thee strangle thy propriety. Fear not, Cesario, take thy fortunes up: Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art

As great as that thou fear'st.

Enter Priest.

O, welcome, father! Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence, 145 Here to unfold—though lately we intended To keep in darkness what occasion now Reveals before 'tis ripe-what thou dost know

Enter SIR ANDREW.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon! Send one presently to Sir Toby.

Oli. What's the matter?

Sir And. Has broke my head across, and has given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too. For the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home. 171

Oli. Who has done this, Sir Andrew? Sir And. The Count's gentleman, one Cesario. We took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incardinate.

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario? Sir And. Od's lifelings, here he is! You broke my head for nothing; and that that

But I bespake you fair and hurt you not.

Enter SIR TOBY and Clown.

Sir And. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me; I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb. Here comes Sir Toby halting; you shall hear more; but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickl'd you othergates than he did. 18° Duke. How now, gentleman? How is'

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons!

A natural perspective, that is and is not. Seb. Antonio, O my dear Antonio! 210 How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me Since I have lost thee!

Ant. Sebastian are you?

Fear'st thou that, Antonio? Ant. How have you made division of vourself?

An apple cleft in two is not more twin 215 Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian? Oli. Most wonderful!

Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother;

Nor can there be that deity in my nature Of here and everywhere. I had a sister 220 Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd.

What countryman, what name, what parentage?

Vio. Of Messaline; Sebastian was my father.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too; 225 So went he suited to his watery tomb; If spirits can assume both form and suit. You come to fright us.

A spirit I am indeed. Seb. But am in that dimension grossly clad Which from the womb I did participate. 230 Were you a woman, as the rest goes even. I should my tears let fall upon your cheek, And say 'Thrice welcome, drowned Viola!'

Vio. My father had a mole upon his brow. Seb. And so had mine.

Vio. And died that day when Viola from her birth

Had numb'red thirteen years.

Seb. O, that record is lively in my soul! He finished indeed his mortal act

That day that made my sister thirteen years.

Vio. If nothing lets to make us happy both

But this my masculine usurp'd attire, Do not embrace me till each circumstance Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump

That I am Viola; which to confirm, 245 I'll bring you to a captain in this town, Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help

All the occurrence of my fortune since

Hath been between this lady and this lord Seb. [To Olivia] So comes it, lady, you have been mistook:

But nature to her bias drew in that. You would have been contracted to a maid: Not are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd: You are betroth'd both to a maid and man Duke. Be not amaz'd; right noble is his blood.

If this be so, as yet the glass seems true. I shall have share in this most happy wreck.

[To Viola] Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times

Thou never shouldst love woman like to me Vio. And all those sayings will I overswear:

And all those swearings keep as true in soul As doth that orbed continent the fire That severs day from night.

Duke. Give me thy hand: And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds Vio. The captain that did bring me first on shore

Hath my maid's garments. He, upon some action, Is now in durance, at Malvolio's suit, A gentleman and follower of my lady's. Fetch He shall enlarge him. Malvoho hither:

And yet, alas, now I remember me. They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.

Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at the stave's end as well as a man in his case may do. Has here writ a letter to you; I should have given 't you to-day morning, but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much when they are deliver'd.

Oli. Open't, and read it.

Clo. Look then to be well edified when the fool delivers the malman. [Reads madly] 'By the Lord, madam-

Oli. How new! Art thou mad? Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness. An your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow vox.

Oli. Prithee read i' thy right wits.

Clo. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits is to read thus; therefore perpend, my Princess, and give ear.

Oli. [To Fabian] Read it you, sirrah. 290 Fab. [Reads] 'By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it. Though you have put me into darkness and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well But out of question 'tis Maria's hand.

Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, Madam. 300 Duke. This savours not much of distraction.

Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian; bring hım hither. Exit Fabian. My lord, so please you, these things further thought on. To think me as well a sister as a wife,

One day shall crown th' alliance on't, so please you, Here at my house, and at my proper cost. Duke. Madam, I am most apt t' embrace your offer.

[To Viola] Your master quits you; and, for your service done him.

So much against the mettle of your sex, So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,

And since you call'd me master for so long, Here is my hand; you shall from this time be

Your master's mistress.

Olı. A sister! You are she.

Re-enter FABIAN, with MALVOLIO.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Olı. Av. my lord, this same. How now, Malvolio!

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong, Notorious wrong.

Oli. Have I, Malvolio? No. Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you peruse that letter.

You must not now deny it is your hand; Write from it if you can, in hand or phrase: Or say 'tis not your seal, not your invention;

You can say none of this. Well, grant it then.

And tell me, in the modesty of honour, Why you have given me such clear lights of favour.

Bade me come smiling and cross-garter'd to you,

To put on yellow stockings, and to frown Upon Sir Toby and the lighter people; And, acting this in an obedient hope, Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,

Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest, And made the most notorious geck and gull That e'er invention play'd on? Tell me

Oli. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing, Though, I confess, much like the character; And now I do bethink me, it was she 335 First told me thou wast mad: then cam'st in smiling.

ACT ONE

Scene I. Sicilia. The valace of Leontes. Enter CAMILLO and ARCHIDAMUS.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sıcılıa.

Cam. I think this coming summer the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us we will be justified in our loves; for indeed-

Cam. Beseech you-Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence, in so rare—I know not what to say. We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficience, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great dear too dear for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself overkind to Bohemia. They were train'd together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities and royal necessities made separation of the'r society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attorneyed with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seem'd to be together, though absent; shook hands, as over a vast; and embrac'd as it were from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

Arch. I think there is not in the world e'ther malice or matter to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young Prince Mamillius; it is a gentleman of the greatest promise that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him. It is a gallant child; one that indeed physics the subject, makes old hearts fresh; they that went on crutches ere he was born desire yet their life to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die? Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the King had no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one.

Exeunt.

Pol. Your guest, then, madam: To be your prisoner should import offending:

Which is for me less easy to commit Than you to punish.

Not your gaoler then, But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question

Of my lord's tricks and yours when you were boys.

You were pretty lordings then!

We were, fair Queen. Pol. Two lads that thought there was no more behind

But such a day to-morrow as to-day,

And to be boy eternal.

Was not my lord 65 The verier wag o' th' two?

Pol. We were as twinn'd lambs that did frisk i' th' sun

Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my And bleat the one at th' other. What we chang'd

> Was innocence for innocence: we knew not The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd 70 That any did. Had we pursu'd that life, And our weak spirits ne'er been higher > rear'd With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven

> Boldly 'Not guilty', the imposition clear'd Hereditary ours.

By this we gather Her.You have tripp'd since.

O my most sacred ladv. Pol. Temptations have since then been born to 's, for

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl; Your precious self had then not cross'd the eves

Of my young playfellow.

Her. Grace to boot! 80 Of this make no conclusion, lest you say Your queen and I are devils. Yet, go on: Th' offences we have made you do we'll answer.

If you first sinn'd with us, and that with us You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd

With any but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet? Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request he would not. Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st And yet the steer, the herfer, and the calt. To better purpose.

Her.

Never but once. Leon. Her. What! Have I twice said well? When was't before?

I prithee tell me; crain's with praise, and make's

As fat as tame things. One good deed dying To be full like me; yet they say we are tongueless Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. Our praises are our wages; you may ride's With one soft kiss a thousand furlongs ere With spui we heat an acre. But to th' goal: My last good deed was to entreat his stay; What was my first? It has an elder sister, Or I mistake you. O, would her name were Grace!

But once before I spoke to th' purpose-When?

Nay, let me have 't; I long.

Why, that was when Leon. Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand And clap thyself my love; then didst thou utter

I am yours for ever'.

'Tis Grace indeed. 105 Her. Why, lo you now, I have spoke to th' purpose twice:

The one for ever earn'd a toyal husband; Th' other for some while a triend.

[Giving her hand to Polixenes. Too hot, too hot! Lcon. [Aside] To mingle friendship far is mingling bloods. I have tremor cordis on me; my heart dances.

, But not for joy, not joy. This entertainment

May a free face put on; derive a liberty From heartiness, from bounty, fertile bosom.

And well become the agent. 'T may, I grant;

But to be paddling palms and pinching fingers, As now they are, and making practis'd smiles As in a looking-glass; and then to sigh, as

'twere The mort o' th' deer. O, that is entertainment My bosom likes not, nor my brows!

Mamillius, Art thou my boy?

Mam. Ay, my good lord.

I' fecks! Leon. Why, that's my bawcock. What! hast smutch'd thy nose? 121

They say it is a copy out of mine. Come, Captain. We must be neat—not neat, but cleanly. Are you so fond of your young prince as we

Captain.

Are all call'd neat.—Still virginalling 125 Upon his palm ?-How now, you wanton calf.

Ait thou my calf?

Mam Yes, if you will, my lord. Leon. Thou want'st a rough pash and the shoots that I have,

With what's unreal thou coactive art. And fellow'st nothing. Then 'tis very credent

Thou mayst co-join with something; and thou dost-

And that beyond commission: and I find it.

And that to the infection of my brains 145 And hard'ning of my brows.

Pol. What means Sicilia? Her. He something seems unsettled. Pol.

How, my lord! What cheer? How is't with you, best brother?

Her. You look As if you held a brow of much distraction. Are you mov'd, my lord?

No, in good earnest. 150 Leon. How sometimes nature will betray its folly, Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines Of my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil Twenty-three years; and saw myself unbreech'd,

In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzl'd,

Lest it should bite its master and so prove. As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. How like, methought, I then was to this kernel, This squash, this gentleman. Mine honest friend.

Will you take eggs for money? Mam. No, my lord, I'll fight.

Leon. You will? Why, happy man be's dole! My brother,

Do seem to be of ours?

If at home, sir, 165 He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter; Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy: My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all.

He makes a July's day short as December, And with his varying childness cures in Thoughts that would thick my blood. So stands this squire

Offic'd with me. We two will walk, my lord, And leave you to your graver steps. Hermione,

How thou lov'st us show in our brother's welcome;

Let what is dear in Sicily be cheap; Next to thyself and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

If you would seek us. Her. We are yours i' th' garden. Shall's afte you there?

Leon. To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found,

Be you beneath the sky. [Aside] I am angling now, Though you perceive me not how I give line

Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold:

When you cast out, it still came home. Didst note it? Leon.

His business more material. Didst perceive it? [Aside] They're here with me already;

Leon. Stavs here longer. Cam.

Leon. Ay, but why? Cam. To satisfy your Highness, and the entreaties

Of our most gracious mistress.

Satisfy Satisfy! Th' entreaties of your mistress! I have trusted thee, Let that suffice. Camillo, Should all With all the nearest things to my heart, as

Cam. Be it forbid, my lord Leon. To bide upon't: thou art not honest; or,

If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward,

Which hoxes honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd; or else thou must be counted
215

A servant grafted in my serious trust, And therein negligent; or else a fool That seest a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,

And tak'st it all for jest.

Cam.

I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful: 250
In every one of these no man is free
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Among the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth. In your affairs, my lord,

If ever I were wilful-negligent, 255
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever featful
To do a thing where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out 260
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear Which oft infects the wisest. These, my lord,

Are such allow'd infirmities that honesty Is never free of. But, beseech your Grace, Be plainer with me; let me know my trespass 265

By its own visage; if I then deny it, 'Tis none of mine.

Leon. Ha' not you seen, Camillo— But that's past doubt; you have, or your eye-glass

Is thicker than a cuckold's horn—or heard—

For to a vision so apparent rumour 270 Cannot be mute—or thought—for cogntation

Resides not in that man that does not think—

My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess— Or else be impudently negative,

To have nor eyes nor ears nor thought—then say 27:

My wife's a hobby-horse, deserves a name As rank as any flax-wench that puts to Before her troth-plight. Say't and justify't.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by to hear My sovereign mistress clouded so, without My, present vengeance taken. Shrew my heart! 281

You never spoke what did become you less
Than this; which to reiterate were sin
As deep as that, though true.

Leon. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning cheek to cheek? Is meeting noses?

Kissing with inside lip? Stopping the career

Of laughter with a sigh?—a note infallible Of breaking honesty. Horsing foot on foot? Skulking in corners? Wishing clocks more swift:

Hours, minutes; noon, midnight? And all eyes

Blind with the pin and web but theirs, theirs only,

That would unseen be wicked—is this nothing?

Why, then the world and all that's in't is nothing;

The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;

My wife is nothing; not nothing have these nothings,

If this be nothing.

Cam. Good my lord, be cur'd

Of this diseas'd opinion, and betimes;

For 'tis most dangerous.

Leon. Say if he 'tis true

Leon. Say it be, 'tis true. Cam. No, no, my lord

Leon. It is; you lie, you lie. I say thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee; Pronounce thee a gross lout, a mindless slave.

Or else a hovering temporizer that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil.

Inclining to them both. Were my wife's Infected as her life, she would not live 305 The running of one glass.

Cam. Who does infect her?

Leon. Why, he that wears her like her medal, hanging

About his neck, Bohemia; who—if I Had servants true about me that bare eyes To see alike mine honour as their profits, 310 Their own particular thrifts, they would do that

Which should undo more doing. Ay, and thou.

His cupbearer—whom I from meaner form Have bench'd and rear'd to worship: who mayst see,

Plainly as heaven sees earth and earth sees heaven, 315

How I am gall'd—mightst bespice a cup To give mine enemy a lasting wink;

Which draught to me were cordial.

Cam. Sir, my lord,
I could do this; and that with no rash potion, But with a ling ring dram that should not work

Maliciously like poison. But I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress, So sovereignly being honourable.

I have lov'd thee-

Leon. Make that thy question, and go rot!

Dost think I am so muddy, so unsettled. 325

Could man so blench?

I must believe you, Cam. I do: and will fetch off Bohemia for't, Provided that, when he's remov'd, your Highness

Will take again your queen as yours at f rst. Even for your son's sake; and thereby for sealing

The injury of tongues in courts and k agdoms

Known and allied to yours.

Thou dost advise me Even so as I mine own course have set

I'll give no blemish to her honour, none Cam. My lord.

Go then: and with a countenance as cl ar As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia

And with your queen. I am his cupbearer; If from me he have wholesome bevera e, Account me not your servant.

Leon. This is all: Do't, and thou hast the one half of 1 sy heart:

Do't not, thou split'st thine own.

I'll do't, my lord. 349 Cam. Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou ha t advis'd me. Exit.

Cam. O miserable lady! But, for me, What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner

Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do t Is the obedience to a master; one Who, in rebellion with himself, will have All that are his so too. To do this deed, Promotion follows. If I could find exampl: Of thousands that had struck anointed I must be answer'd. kings

Enter POLIXENES.

Pol. This is strange. Methinks My favour here begins to warp. Not speak Good day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir Pol. What is the news i' th' court?

None rare, my lord. Cam. Pol. The King hath on him such a countenance

As he had lost some province, and a region Lov'd as he loves himself; even now I met him

With customary compliment, when he, Wafting his eyes to th' contrary and falling A lip of much contempt, speeds from me: and

So leaves me to consider what is breeding That changes thus his manners.

Cam. I dare not know, my lord. Pol. How, dare not! Do not. Do you know, and dare not Be intelligent to me? 'Tis thereabouts:

For, to yourself, what you do know, you must, And cannot say you dare not. Good

Camillo. 380 Your chang'd complexions are to me a mirror

Which shows me mine chang'd too; for I must be

A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with't.

There is a sickness Which puts some of us in distemper: but I cannot name the disease; and it is caught Of you that yet are well.

Pol. How! caught of me? Make me not sighted like the basilisk:

I have look'd on thousands who have sped the better By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo-As you are certainly a gentleman; thereto

Clerk-like experienc'd, which no less adorns Our gentry than our parents' noble names. In whose success we are gentle—I beseech you. If you know aught which does behove my knowledge Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not In ignorant concealment.

I may not answer. Cam. Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well?

Dost thou hear, Camillo?

I conjure thee, by all the parts of man 400 Which honour does acknowledge, whereof the least

Is not this suit of mine, that thou declare What incidency thou dost guess of harm Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near:

Which way to be prevented, if to be; 405 If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you; Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him

That I think honourable. Therefore mark my counsel,

I mean to utter it, or both yourself and in Cry lost, and so goodnight.

Pol. On, good Camillo. Cam. I am appointed him to murder you. Pol. By whom, Camillo?

Cam. By the King.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he swears.

As he had seen 't or been an instrument 415
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen

Forbiddenly.

Pol. O, then my best blood turn To an infected jelly, and my name Be yok'd with his that did betray the Best! Turn then my freshest leputation to 420 A savour that may strike the dullest nostril Where I arrive, and my approach be shunn'd,

Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection

That e'er was heard or read!

Cam. Swear his thought over By each particular star in heaven and 425 By all their influences, you may as well Forbid the sea for to obey the moon As or by oath remove or ccunsel shake The fabric of his folly, whose foundation Is pil'd upon his faith and will continue 430 The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow? Cam. I know not; but I am sure 'tis Avoid what's grown than question how 'tis born.

If therefore you dare trust my honesty, That lies enclosed in this trunk which you Shall bear along impawn'd, away to-night. Your followers I will whisper to the business:

And will, by twos and threes, at several posterns, 438 Clear them o' th' city. For myself, I'll put My fortunes to your service, which are here By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain, For, by the honour of my parents, I

Have utt'red truth; which if you seek to prove,

I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer
Than one condemn'd by the King's own mouth, thereon

445

His execution sworn.

Pol.
I do believe thee:
I saw his heart in's face. Give me thy hand;

Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My ships are ready,

and
My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago. This jealousy

Is for a precious creature; as she's rare, Must it be great; and, as his person's mighty,

Must it be violent; and as he does conceive He is dishonour'd by a man which ever 455 Profess'd to him, why, his revenges must In that be made more bitter. Fear o'ershades me.

Good expedition be my friend, and comfort The gracious Queen. part of his theme, but nothing

Of his ill-ta'en suspicion! Come, Camillo; I will respect thee as a father, if Thou bear'st my life off hence. Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authority to command The keys of all the posterns. Please your Highness 464

To take the urgent hour. Come, sir, away. [Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. Sicilia. The palace of Leontes. Enter Hermione, Mamillius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you; he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord, Shall I be your playtellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you. 1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Man. You'll kiss me hard, and speak to me as if me as if

I were a baby still. I love you better.
2 Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mam. Not for because Your brows are blacker; yet black brows.

they say,
Become some women best; so that there be not

Too much hair there, but in a semicircle so Or a half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught't this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of women's faces.

Pray now,

What colour are your eyebrows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord. Mam. Nay, that's a mock. I have seen a lady's nose

That has been blue, but not her eyebrows.

1 Lady. Hark ye: 15
The Queen your mother rounds apace. We Present our services to a fine new prince

One of these days; and then you'd wanton with us, If we would have you.

2 Lady. She is spread of late Into a goodly bulk. Good time encounter
her! 20

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you?
Come, sir, now

I am for you again. Pray you sit by us, And tell's a tale.

Mam. Merry or sad shall't be? Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter. I have Away with him; and let her sport herself one

Of sprites and goblins.

Let's have that, good sir. Her. Come on, sit down; come on, and do your best

To fright me with your sprites; you're pow'rful at it.

Mam. There was a man-

Nay, come, sit down; then on. Her. Mam. Dwelt by a churchyard-I will tell it softly:

Yond crickets shall not hear it. Come on then,

Her. And give't me in mine ear.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords and Others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillo with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them: never Saw I men scour so on their way. I ey'd them

Even to their ships.

With violent hefts. I have drunk, and seen the spider.

Camillo was his help in this, his pander. There is a plot against my life, my crown; All's true that is mistrusted. That false vıllain

Whom I employ'd was pre-employ'd by him;

He has discover'd my design, and I Remain a pinch'd thing; yea, a very trick For them to play at will. How came the posterns

So easily open?

1 Lord. By By his great authority; Which often hath no less prevail'd than so On your command.

Leon. I know't too well. 55 Give me the boy. I am glad you did not nurse him:

Though he does bear some signs of me, yet

Have too much blood in him.

What is this? Sport? Her. Leon. Bear the boy hence; he shall not come about her:

But I'd say he had not, Her. And I'll be sworn you would believe my saving.

SCENE II. Sicilia. A prison.

Enter PAULINA, a Gentleman, and Attendants.

Puul. The keeper of the prison-call to Let him have knowledge who I am.

[Exit Gentleman. Good lady!

No court in Europe is too good for thee; What dost thou then in prison?

Re-enter Gentleman with the Gaoler.

Now, good sir,

You know me, do you not? Gaol. For a worthy lady, 5

And one who much I honour. Paul.

Pray you, then, Conduct me to the Queen.

I may not, madam; Gaol. To the contrary I have express command-

Paul. Here's ado, to lock up honesty and honour from

Th' access of gentle visitors! Is't lawful, pray you,

To see her women—any of them? Emilia? Gaol. So please you, madam,

To put apart these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her. 15 Withdraw yourselves. [Exeunt Attendants.

Gaol. And, madam, I must be present at your conference. Paul. Well, be't so, prithee. [Exit Gaoler.

Here's such ado to make no stain a stain As passes colouring.

Re-enter Gaoler, with EMILIA.

Dear gentlewoman. How fares our gracious lady? 386

Emil. As well as one so great and so forlorn

May hold together. On her frights and griefs,

Which never tender lady hath borne greater. She is, something before her time, deliver'd. Paul. A boy?

A daughter, and a goodly babe. Emil. Lusty, and like to live. The Queen receives says 'My poor Much coinfort in't; prisoner,

I am as innocent as you'.

I dare be sworn. Paul. These dangerous unsafe lunes i' th' King, beshrew them !

He must be told on't, and he shall. The office Becomes a woman best; I'll take't upon me:

If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister,

And never to my red-look'd anger be 34 The trumpet any more. Pray you, Emilia, Commend my best obedience to the Queen: If she dares trust me with her little babe, I'll show't the King, and undertake to be Her advocate to th' loud'st. We do not

How he may soften at the sight o' th' child: The silence often of pure innocence Persuades when speaking fails.

Most worthy madam. Your honour and your goodness is so evident

That your free undertaking cannot miss A thriving issue: there is no lady living 45 So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship

To visit the next room, I'll presently Acquaint the Queen of your most noble offer;

Who but to-day hammer'd of this design. But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Lest she should be denied.

Tell her, Emilia, Paul. I'll use that tongue I have; if wit flow from't As boldness from my bosom. let't not be doubted

I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it! I'll to the Queen. Please you come something nearer.

Gaol. Madam, if't please the Queen to send the babe.

I know not what I shall incur to pass it.

Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir. This child was prisoner to the womb, and is By law and process of great Nature thence Freed and enfranchis'd-not a party to 61 The anger of the King, nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the Queen.

Gaol. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear. Upon mine Nourish the cause of his awaking: I honour. I Will stand betwixt you and danger.

Scene III. Sicilia. The palace of Leontes. Enter LEONIES, ANTIGONUS, Lords, and Servants.

Leon. Nor night nor day no rest! It is but weakness

To bear the matter thus-mere weakness. If The cause were not in being-part o' th' cause.

She, th' adultress; for the harlot king Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she I can hook to me—say that she were gone. Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest Might come to me again. Who's there?

1 Serv. Leon How does the boy?

1 Serv. He took good rest to-night; "Tis hop'd his sickness is discharg'd.

Leon. To see his nobleness! Conceiving the dishonour of his mother. He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply, Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on't in himself.

Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep. And downright languish'd. Leave me solely Ga.

See how he fares. [Exit Servant] Fie, fie! no thought of him!

The very thought of my revenges that wav Recoil upon me-in himself too mighty, 20 And in his parties, his alliance. Let him be, Until a time may serve; for present vengeance,

Take it on her. Camillo and Polivenes Laugh at me, make their pastime at my sorrow.

They should not laugh if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my pow'r.

Enter PAULINA, with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter. Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me.

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, Than the Queen's life? A gracious innocent

More free than he is jealous.

That's enough. Ant. 2 Serv. Madam, he hath not slept tonight; commanded

None should come at him.

Not so hot, good sir; I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you, That creep like shadows by him, and do

At each his needless heavings—such as you

65 Do come with words as medicinal as true. Honest as either, to purge him of that humour

That presses him from sleep.

Leon. What noise there, ho? Paul. No noise, my lord; but needful conference

About some gossips for your Highness. Leon. How!

Away with that audacious lady! Antigonus. I charg'd thee that she should not come about me:

I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord. On your displeasure's peril, and on mine, 45 She should not visit you.

Leon. What, canst not rule her? Paul. From all dishonesty he can: in thus,

My lord? Unless he take the course that you have done-

Commit me for committing honour-trust

He shall not rule me.

La you now, you hear! 50 When she will take the rein, I let her run; But she'll not stumble.

Paul. Good my hege, I come-And I beseech you hear me, who professes Myself your loyal servant, your physician, Your most obedient counsellor; yet that Less appear so, in comforting your evils. Than such as most seem yours-I say I come

From your good Queen.

Lean. Good Queen!

Paul. Good Queen, my lord, good Queen I say good Queen;

And would by combat make her good, so were I

A man, the worst about you.

Leon. Force her hence. Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eves

First-hand me. On mine own accord I'll oft; But first I'll do my errand. The good Queen,

For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter :

Here 'tis: commends it to your blessing. [Laying down the child.

Leon. Ont! A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o' door!

A most intelligencing bawd!

Not so. Paul. I am as ignorant in that as you

In so entitling me; and no less honest 70 Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant.

As this world goes, to pass for honest. Traitors! Leon.

Hasting to th' court.

So please you. sir, their speed 1 Lord. Hath been beyond account.

Twenty-three days They have been absent; 'tis good speed; foretells

The great Apollo suddenly will have The truth of this appear. Prepare you. lords;

Summon a session, that we may arraign Our most disloyal lady; for, as she hath Been publicly accus'd, so shall she have A just and open trial. While she lives, My heart will be a burden to me. Leave 205

ACT THREE

Scene I. Sicilia. On he road to the Capital. Enter CLEOMENES and DION.

Cleo. The climate's delicate, the air most sweet.

Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing The common praise it bears.

I shall report. Dio. For most it caught me, the celestial habits-Methinks I so should term them—and the reverence

Of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice! How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly, It was i' th' off'ring!

Cleo. But of all, the burst And the ear-deaf'ning voice o' th' oracle, Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense

That I was nothing. Dion. If th' event o' th' journey Prove as successful to the Queen-O, be't so!--As it hath been to us rare, pleasant, speedy. The time is worth the use on't.

Cleo. Great Apollo Turn all to th' best! These proclamations. So forcing faults upon Hermione. I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it Will clear or end the business. When the oracle-

Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up-Shall the contents discover, something rare

Go: Even then will rush to knowledge. OT fresh horses. [Exeunt. And gracious be the issue!

Scene II. Sicilia. A court of justice.

Enter LEONIES, Lords, and Officers. Leon. This sessions, to our great grief we pronounce, Even pushes 'gainst our heart-the party tried.

The daughter of a king, our wife, and one Of us too much belov'd. Let us be clear'd Of being tyrannous, since we so openly Proceed in justice, which shall have due course, Even to the guilt or the purgation. Produce the prisoner.

Offi. It is his Highness' pleasure that the Oneen

Appear in person here in court.

Enter HERMIONE, as to her trial, PAULINA, and Ladies.

Silence! 10

Leon. Read the indictment. Offi. [Reads] 'Hermione, Queen to the worthy Leontes, King of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, King of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the King, thy royal husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partiy laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night.'

Her. Since what I am to say must be but that Which contradicts my accusation, and The testimony on my part no other But what comes from myself, it shall scarce boot me To say 'Not guilty'. Mine integrity Being counted falsehood shall, as I expres it, Be so receiv'd. But thus—if pow'rs divine Behold our human actions, as they do, I doubt not then but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny Tremble at patience. You, my lord, bes know-Who least will seem to do so-my past life Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true As I am now unhappy; which is more Than history can pattern, though devis'. And play'd to take spectators; for behold me-

A fellow of the royal bed, which owe A moiety of the throne, a great king' daughter,

The mother to a hopeful prince—her standing

To plate and talk for life and honour fore Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it

As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honour.

Tis a derivative from me to mine, And only that I stand for. I appeal To your own conscience, sir, before

Polixenes Came to your court, how I was in your grace,

How merited to be so; since he came, With what encounter so uncurrent I Have strain'd t' appear thus; if one jot beyond The bound of honour, or in act or will

That way inclining, haid'ned be the hearts Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin Cry fie upon my grave! I ne'er heard yet Leon.

That any of these bolder vices wanted Less impudence to gainsay what they did Than to perform it first.

That's true enough; 55 Though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.

Leon. You will not own it.

More than mistress of Her. Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not

At all acknowledge. For Polixenes, With whom I am accus'd, I do confess I lov'd him as in honour he requir'd; With such a kind of love as might become A lady like me; with a love even such, So and no other, as yourself commanded; Which not to have done, I think had been in me

Both disobedience and ingratitude To you and toward your friend; whose love had spoke.

Even since it could speak, from an infant, freely.

That it was yours. Now for conspiracy: I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd

For me to try how; all I know of it Is that Camillo was an honest man; And why he left your court, the gods themselves,

Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know What you have underta'en to do in's absence.

Her. Sir, You speak a language that I understand

My life stands in the level of your dreams, Which I'll lay down.

Your actions are my dreams. You had a bastard by Polixenes, And I but dream'd it. As you were past all shame-

Those of your fact are so-so past all truth;

Which to deny concerns more than avails; Of great Apollo's priest, and that the for as

Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself, No father owning it-which is indeed More cump, lin they toan it-so thou Shalt feel our justice; in whose easiest passage

Look for no less than death.

Sir, spare your threats. The bug which you would fright me with I seek.

To me can life be no commodity. The crown and comfort of my life, your favour.

I do give lost, for I do feel it gone, But know not how it went; my second iov

And first fruits of my body, from his presence

I am barr'd, like one infectious; my third comfort.

Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast-The innocent milk in it most innocent mouth-

Hal'd out to murder; myself on every post Proclaim'd a strumpet; with immodest hatred

The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs To women of all fashion; lastly, hurried Here to this place, i' th' open air, before I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege, Tell me what blessings I have here alive 105 That I should fear to die. Therefore proceed.

But yet hear this-mistake me not: no

I prize it not a straw, but for mine honour Which I would free-if I shall be condemn'd

Upon surmises, all proofs sleeping else 110 But what your jealousies awake, I tell you 'Tis rigour, and not law. Your honours all, I do refer me to the oracle: Apollo be my judge!

This your request 1 Lord. Is altogether just. Therefore, bring forth And in Apollo's name, his oracle.

[Exeunt certain Officers. Her. The Emperor of Russia was my father;

O that he were alive, and here beholding His daughter's trial! that he did but see The flatness of my misery; yet with eyes Of pity, not revenge!

Re-enter Officers, with CLEOMENES and DION.

Leon. Hast thou read truth?

Offi. Ay, my lord; even so As it is here set down. 136, Leon. There is no truth at all i' th' oracle. The sessions shall proceed. This is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord the King, the King! What is the business? Leon. Serv. O sir, I shall be hated to report it:

The Prince your son, with mere conceit and Of the Queen's speed, is gone.

Leon. How! Gone? Serv. Is dead. Leon. Apollo's angry; and the heavens themselves Do strike at my injustice.

Some remedies for life. Exeunt Paulina and Ladies with Hermunz.

Apol o, pardon 150

My great profaneness 'gainst thine oracle. I'll reconcile me to Polixenes, woo my queen, recall the good New Camillo-

Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy. For, being transported by my jealousies 155 To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose Camillo for the minister to poison

My friend Polixenes; which had been done But that the good mind of Camillo tardied Offi. You here shall swear upon this My swift command, though I with death and with Reward did threaten and encourage him, humane This seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd And fill'd with honour, to my kingly guest here.

Which you knew great, and to the certain

Of all incertainties himself commended, No richer than his honour. How he glisters Thorough my rust! And now his piety Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter PAULINA.

Woe the while Paul. O. co. my lace, lest my heart, cracking it. Break too!

1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady? Paul. What studied torments, tyrant hast for me? What wheels, racks, fires? what flaving, hoiling

In leads or oils? What old or newer torture Must I receive, whose every word deserves To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyrann Together working with thy jealousies, 17 Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle

For girls of nine-O, think what they have done.

And then run mad indeed, stark mad for all

Thy by-gone fool, " were but spices of it That thou betray'dst Polixenes, nothing:

That did but show thee, of a fool, inconstant,

And damnable ingrateful. Nor was't much Thou wouldst have poison'd good Camillo's honour,

To have him kill a king—poor trespasses More monstrous standing by; whereof I reckon

The casting forth to crows thy baby daughter

To be or none or little, though a devil Would have shed water out of fire ere done't:

Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death Of the young Prince, whose honourable thoughts-

Thoughts high for one so tender-cleft the

All tongues to talk their bitt'rest.

1 Lord. Say no more: Howe'er the business goes, you have made tault

I' th' boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for't. 213 All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,

I do repent. Alas, I have show'd too much The rashness of a woman! He is touch'd To th' noble heart. What's gone and what's past help

Should be past grief. Do not receive affliction

At my petition: I beseech you, rather Let me be punish'd that have minded you Of what you should forget. Now, good my hege.

Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman. 224 The love I bore your queen-lo, fool again! I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children:

I'll not remember you of my own lord. Who is lost too. Take your patience to you, And I'll say nothing.

Thou didst speak but well Leon. When most the truth; which I receive much better Than to be pitied of thee. Prithee, bring me To the dead bodies of my queen and son.

One grave shall be for both. Upon them shall

The causes of their death appear, unto Our shame perpetual. Once a day I'll visit The chapel where they lie; and tears shed there Shall be my recreation. So long as nature Will bear up with this exercise, so long I dail vow to use it. Come, and lead me To wase sorrows. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Bohemia. The sea-coast. Enter Antigonus with the Child, and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then our ship hath touch'd upon

So like a waking. To me comes a creature. Sometimes her head on one side some another-

I never saw a vessel of like sorrow, So fill'd and so becoming: in pure white robes,

Like very sanctity, she did approach My cabin where I lay; thrice bow'd before me:

And, gasping to begin some speech, her eves Became two spouts; the fury spent, anon Did this break from her: 'Good Antigonus, Since fate, against thy better disposition, Hath made thy person for the throwerout

Of my poor babe, according to thine oath, Places remote enough are in Bohemia, There weep, and leave it crying; and, for ho-hoa! the babe

Is counted lost for ever. Perdita I prithee call't. For this ungentle business. Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see shrieks.

She melted into air. Affrighted much, I did in time collect myself, and thought toys;

Yet, for this once, yea, superstitiously, 40 I will be squar'd by this. I do believe Hermione hath suffer'd death, and that Apollo would, this being indeed the issue

Would any but these boil'd brains of nineteen and two and twenty hunt this weather? They have scar'd away two of my best sheep, which I fear the wolf will sooner find than the master. If any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing of ivv. luck, an't be thy will! What have we here? [Taking up the child] Mercy on's, a barne! A very pretty barne. A boy or a child, I wonder? A pietty one; a very pretty one-sure, some scape. Though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentle-woman in the scape. This has been some stair-work, some trunk-work, some behinddoor-work; they were warmer that got this than the poor thing is here. I'll take it up for pity; yet I'll tarry till my son come; he halloo'd but even now. Whoa-

Enter Clown.

Clo. Hilloa, loa!

Shep. What, art so near? If thou'lt see Thy wife Paulina more'. And so, with a thing to talk on when thou art dead and 36 rotten, come hither. What ail'st thou, man?

Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea This was so and no slumber. Dreams are and by land! But I am not to say it is a sea, for it is now the sky; betwixt the firmament and it you cannot thrust a bodkin's point.

Shep. Why, boy, how is it? Clo. I would you did but see how it Of King Polixenes, it should here be laid, chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the Either for life or death, upon the earth 45 shore! But that's not to the point. O, the times to see 'em, and not to see 'em; now the ship boring the moon with her mainmast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogshead. And then for the land service-to see how the bear tore out his shoulder-bone; how he cried to me for help, and said his name was Antigonus, a nobleman! But to make an end of the ship-to see how the sea flap-dragon'd it; but first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mock'd them; and how the poor gentleman roared, and the bear mock'd him, both roaring louder than the sea or weather.

Shep. Name of mercy, when was this,

boy?

Clo. Now, now: I have not wink'd since I saw these sights; the men are not yet cold under water, nor the bear half din'd on the gentleman; he's at it now.

Shep. Would I had been by to have help'd the old man!

Clo. I would you had been by the shipside, to have help'd her; there your charity would have lack'd footing.

Shep. Heavy matters, heavy maiters! But look thee here, boy. Now bless thyself; thon met'st with things dying, I with things new-born. Here's a sight for thee; look thee, a bearing-cloth for a squire's child! Look thee here; take up, take up, boy; open't. So, let's see-it was told me I should be rich by the fairies. This is some changeling. Open't. What's within, boy? 114

Clo. You're a made old man; if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold! all gold!

Shep. This is fairy gold, boy, and 'twill prove so. Up with't, keep it close. Home, home, the next way! We are lucky, boy; and to be so still requires nothing but secrecy. Let my sheep go. Come, good boy, the next way home.

Clo. Go you the next way with your findings. I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten. They are never curst but when they are hungry. If there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed. If thou mayest discern by that which is left of him what he is, fetch me to th' sight of him.

Clo. Marry, will I; and you shall help to put him i' th' ground.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy; and we'll do good deeds on't. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Bohemia. The palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness denying thee anything; a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years since I saw my country; though I have for the most part been aired abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent King, my master, hath sent for me; to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so, which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now. The need I have of thee thine own goodness hath made. Better not to have had thee than thus to want thee; thou, having made me businesses which none without thee can sufficiently manage, mus: either stay to execute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done; which if I have not enough con sidered—as too much I cannot—to be more thankful to thee shall be my study; and my profit therein the heaping friendsnips. Of that fatal country Sicilia, pitthee, speak no moie; whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou call'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen and children are even now to be afresh lamented. Sav to me, when saw'st thou the Prince Florizel. my son? Kings are no less unhappy, then issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the Prince. What his happier affairs may be are to me unknown; but I have missingly noted he is of late much retired from court, and is less frequent to his princely exercises than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo, and with some care, so far that I have eyes under my service which look upon his removedness; from whom I have this intelligence, that he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd—a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours. is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note. The report of her is extended more than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence; but, I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place; where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's Prithee be my present resort thither. partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command. 50 Pol. My best Camillo! We must disguise ourselves. Exeunt.

SCENE III. A road near the Bohemia. shepherd's cottage.

Enter AUTOLYCUS, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer.

With heigh! the doxy over the dale, Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year,

For the red blood reigns in the winter's ever I was born! pale.

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge, With heigh! the sweet birds, C, hew they sing!

Doth set my pugging tooth on edge, For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lack, that thea-brea chants,

With heigh! with heigh! the thrush and the jay.

Are summer songs for me and my aunts. While we lie tumbling in the hav.

I have serv'd Prince Florizel, and in my time wore three-pile: but now I am cut of service.

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear? 15 The pale moon shines by night:

And when I wander here and there, I then do most go night.

If tinkers may have leave to live, And bear the sow-skin budget, Then my account I well may give And in the stocks arouch it.

My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father nam'd me Autolycus; who, being, as I am, litter'd under Mercur,, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles. With die and drab I purchas'd this caparison; and my revenue is the silly-cheat. Gallows and knock are too powerful on the highway; beating and hanging are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it. A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see: every 'leven wether tods; every tod yields pound and odd fifteen hundred shorn, what comes the wool to?

Aut. [Aside] If the springe hold, the cock's mine.

Clo. I cannot do 't without counters. Let me see: what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? Three pound of sugar, five pound of currants, rice-what will this sister of mine do with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four and twenty nosegays for the shearers-three-man song-men all, and very good ones; but they are most of them means and bases; but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes. I must have saffron to colour the warden pies; mace; dates-none, that's out of my note; nutmegs, seven; a race or two of ginger, but that I may beg; four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' th' sun.

Aut. [Grovelling on the ground] O that

Clo. I' th' name of me!

20

Ant. O, help me, help me! Pluck out off these rags; and then, death, death! 50!

Co. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need spit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to have those on.

Aut. I must confess of fighter; I am false of heart

Aut. O sir. the loathsomeness of them offend me more than the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am robb'd, sir, and besten; my money and apparel ta'en from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horseman or a footman? Aut. A footman, sweet sir, a footman.

Clo. Indeed, he should be a footman, by the garments he has left with thee; if the be a horseman's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee. Come, lend me thy hand.

[Helping him up.

Aut. (), good sir, tenderly, O!

Clo. Alas, poer soul!

Ant. O, good sir, softly, good sit fear, sir, my shoulder blade is out.

Clo. How new! Canst stand?

Aut. Sortly, dear sir [Picks his pocket]; good sir, softly. You ha' done me a charitable office.

Clo. Dost lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Aut. No. good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir I have a Kansman not past three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going; I shall there have money or anything I want. Offer me no money, I pray you; that kills my heart.

Clo. What manner of fellow was he that robb'd you?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with troll-my-dames; I knew him once a servant of the Prince. I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipt out of the court.

Clo. His vices, you would say; there's no virtue whipt out of the court. They cherish it to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Aut. Vices, I would say, sir. I know this man well; he hath been since an apebearer; then a process-server, a bailif; then he compass'd a motion of the Prodigal Son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and, having flown over many knavish professions, he settled only in rogue. Some call him Autolycus.

Clo. Out upon him! prig, for my life, prig! He baunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.

Aut. Very true, sir; he, sir, he; that's the rogue that put me into this apparel. 99 od Clo. Not a more cowardly rogue in all so Boherara; if you had but look'd big and ed suit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to you, sir, I am no fighter; I am false of heart that way; and that he knew, I warrant him.

Clo. How do you now?

Aul. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand and walk. I will even take my leave of you and pace softly towards my linsman's.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way? 109 Aut. No, good-fac'd sir; no, sweet sir. Clo. Then fare thee well. I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

Aut. Prosper you, sweet sir! [Exit Cloun. Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. I'll be with you at your sheep, shearing too. If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unroll'd, and my name put in the book of virtue!

Jog on, jog on, the footpath way, And merrily hent the stile-a; A merry heart goes all the day, Your sad tires in a mile-a. [Exit.

Scene IV. Bohemia. The shepherd's cottage.

Enter FLORIZEL and PERDITA.

Flo. These your unusual weeds to each part of you

Do give a life—no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. This your sheepshearing

Is as a meeting of the petty gods,

And you the Queen on't.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord, 5
To chide at your extremes it not becomes me—

O, pardon that I name them! Your high self,

The gracious mark o' th' land, you have obscur'd

With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,

Most goddess-like prank'd up. But that our teasts

In every mess have folly, and the feeders Digest it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attird; swoon, I think, To show myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time 14
When my good falcon made her flight across Thy to there's ground

Thy father's ground.

Per. Now Jove afford you cause!
To me the difference forges dread; your greatness

Hath not been us'd to fear. Even now I tremble

To think your father, by some accident, Should pass this way, as you did. O, the Fates!

How would he look to see his work, so With labout, and the thing she took to noble.

Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrowed flaunts, -behold

The sternness of his presence?

Apprehend Flo. Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves, Humbling their deities to love, have taken The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter Became a bull and bellow'd; the green Neptune

A ram and bleated; and the fire-rob'd

god.

Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain, As I seem now. Their transformations Were never for a piece of beauty rarer, Nor in a way so chaste, since my desires Run not before mine honour, nor my lusts Burn hotter than my faith.

O, but, sir, Your resolution cannot hold when 'tis Oppos'd, as it must be, by th' pow'r of the King.

One of these two must be necessities, Which then will speak, that you must change this purpose,

Or I my life.

Thou dearest Perdita, Flo. With these forc'd thoughts, I prithee, darken not

The mirth o' th' feast. Or I'll be thine, my fair.

Or not my father's; for I cannot be Mine own, nor anything to any, if I be not thine. To this I am most constant, Though destiny say no. Be merry, gentle; Strangle such thoughts as these with any thing

That you behold the while. Your guests are coming.

Lift up your countenance, as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptial which We two have sworn shall come.

O Lady Fortune. Per.

Stand you auspicious!

See, your guests approach. Flo. yourself to entertain them Address sprightly,

And let's be red with mirth.

Enter Shepherd, with POLIXENES and CAM-ILLO, disguised: Clown, Mopsa, Dorcas, with Others.

Shep. Fie, daughter! When my old wife liv'd, upon

This day she was both pantler, butler, cook; Both dame and servant; welcom'd all; serv'd all:

· Would sing her song and dance her turn: now here

At upper end o' th' table, now i' th' middle; On his shoulder, and his; her face o' fire 60

quench it

She would to each one sip. You are retired, As if you were a feasted one, and not The hostess of the meeting. Pray you bid These unknown friends to's welcome, for it is A way to make us better friends, more known.

Come, quench your blushes, and present yourself

That which you are, Mistress o' th' Feast. Come on, bid us welcome to your sheep-And shearing,

As your good flock shall prosper.

Per. [To Polixenes] Sir, welcome. It is my father's will I should take on me The hostess-ship o' th' day. [To Camillo] You're welcome, sir.

Give me those flow'rs there, Dorcas, Reverend sirs.

For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep

Seeming and savour all the winter long. 75 Grace and remembrance be to you both! And welcome to our shearing.

Shepherdess-A fair one are you—well you fit our ages

With flow'rs of winter.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient, Not yet on summer's death nor on the birth Of trembling winter, the fairest flow'rs o' th' season

Are our carnations and streak'd gillyyors. Which some call nature's bastards. Of that kind

Our rustic garden's barren: and I care not To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden, 85 Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said There is an art which in their piedness shares

With great creating nature.

Say there be: Pol. Yet nature is made better by no mean

But nature makes that mean; so over that art,

Which you say adds to nature, is an art That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry

A gentler scion to the wildest stock,

And make conceive a bark of baser kind By bud of nobler race. This is an art Which does mend nature-change it rather; but

The art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Then make your garden rich in Pol. gillyvors.

And do not call them bastards.

I'll not put The dibble in earth to set one slip of them;

No more than were I painted I would wish This youth should say 'twere well, and only therefore 102

Desire to breed by me. Here's flow'rs for you:

Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram; The marigold, that goes to bed wi'th' sun, And with him rises weeping; these are flow'rs

Of middle summer, and I think they are given

To men of middle age. Y'are very welcome.

Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your flock,

And only live by gazing.

Per. Out, alas! Yu'd be so lean that blasts of January Would blow you through and through. Now, my fair'st friend,

I would I had some flow'rs o' th' sprin that might Become your time of day—and yours, and yours,

That wear upon your virgin branches yet Your maidenheads growing. O Proscipina For the flowers now that, frighted, thou let'st fall

From Dis's waggon !- daffodils,

That come before the swallow dares, and take

The winds of March with beauty; violets dim 12

But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes
Or Cytherea's breath; pale primroses,
That die unmarried ere they can behold
Bright Phœbus in his strength—a malad
Most incident to maids; bold oxlips, and
The crown-imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flow'r-de-luce being one. O, these lack

To make you garlands of, and my swee friend

To strew him o'er and o'er!

Flo. What, like a corse Per. No; like a bank for love to lie and play on;

Not like a corse; or if—not to be buried, But quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your flow'rs.

Methinks I play as I have seen them do In Whitsun pastorals. Sure, this robe o mine Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you d
Still betters what is done. When you speak sweet,

I'd have you do it ever. When you sing, I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms Pray so; and, for the ord'ring your affair. To sing them too. When you do dance, wish you wish you

A wave o' th' sea, that you might ever d
Nothing but that; move still, still so,

And own no other function. Each your doing,

So singular in each particular.

rowns what you are doing in the present deeds,

That all your acts are queens.

Per. O Doricles, Your praises are too large. But that your youth,

And the true blood which peeps fairly through't,

Do plainly give you out an unstain'd shepherd,

With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles, 150 You woo'd me the false way.

Flo. I think you have As little skill to fear as I have purpose To put you to't. But, come; our dance,

I pray. Your hand, my Perdita; so turtles pair

That never mean to part.

Per.

I'll swear for 'em. 155

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever

Ran on the green-sward; nothing she does or seems

But smacks of something greater than herself,

Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something That makes her blood look out. Good sooth, she is

The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike up.

Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress; marry, garlic, To mend her kissing with!

Mop. Now, in good time!
Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our manners.

Come, strike up. [Music. Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what fair swain is this

Which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles, and boasts himself

To have a worthy feeding; but I have it Upon his own report, and I believe it: 170 He looks like sooth. He says he loves my daughter;

I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water as he'll stand and read,
As 'twere, my daughter's eyes; and, to be plain, I think there is not half a kiss to choose 175 Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances featly.

Shep. So she does any thing; though I report it

That should be silent. If young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O master, if you did but hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe; no, the bagpipe could not move you. He sings several tunes faster than you'll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all men's ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better; he shall come in. I love a ballad but even too well, if it be doleful matter merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed and sung lamentably.

Serv. He hath songs for man or woman of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves. He has the prettiest love-songs for maids; so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burdens of dildos and fadings, 'jump her and thump her': and where some stretch-mouth'd rascal would, as it were, mean mischief, and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer 'Whoop, do me no harm, good man '-puts him off, slights him, with 'Whoop, do me no harm, good man

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable conceited fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?

Serv. He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; points, more than all the lawyers in Bohemia can learnedly handle. though they come to him by th' gross: inkles, caddisses, cambrics, lawns. Why he sings 'em over as they were gods or goddesses; you would think a smock were a she-angel, he so chants to the sleevehand and the work about the square on't. Clo. Prithee bring him in; and it him approach singing.

Come, buy.

Per. Forewarn him that he use no scurri'ous words in's tunes. [Exit Servant. Clo. You have of these pedlars that have more in them than you'd think, sister. 213

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter AUTOLYCUS, singing:

Lawn as white as driven snow; 215 Cypress black as e'er was crow; Gloves as sweet as damask roses; Masks for faces and for noses; Bugle bracelet, necklace amber, Perfume for a lady's chamber; Golden quoifs and stomachers, For my lads to give their dears & Pins and poking-sticks of steel-What maids lack from head to heel. Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buv: Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me; but being enthrall'd as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribbons and gloves. 230

Mop. I was promis'd them against the feast; but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promis'd you more than that, or there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promis'd you. May be he has paid you more, which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among Will they wear their plackets maids? where they should bear their faces? there not milking-time, when you are going to bed, or kiln-hole, to whistle off these secrets, but you must be tittle-tattling before all our guests? 'Tis well they are whisp'ring. Clammer your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promis'd me a tawdry-lace, and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee how I was cozen'd by the way, and lost all my money a Aut. And indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad; therefore it behoves men to be

Clo. Fear not thou, man; thou shalt lose nothing here.

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? Bailads?

Mop. Pray now, buy some. I love a ballad in print a-life, for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here's one to a very doleful tune: how a usurer's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a burden, and how she long'd to eat adders' heads and toads carbonado'd.

Mop. Is it true, think you? Aut. Very true, and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer! Aut. Here's the midwife's name to't, one Mistress Taleporter, and five or six honest wives that were present. Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mop. Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by; and let's first see moe ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad, of a fish that appeared upon the coast on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids. It was thought she was a woman, and was turn'd into a cold fish for she would not exchange flesh with one that lov'd her. The ballad is very pitiful, and as true. 275

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

witnesses more than my pack will hold. Clo. Lav it by too. Another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let's have some merry ones. 28 Aut. Why, this is a passing merry one and goes to the tune of 'Two maids wooing a man'. There's scarce a maid westward but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it. If thou'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't a month ago. Aut. I can bear my part; you must know 'tis my occupation. Have at it with you.

Song.

Aut. Get you hence, for I must go Where it fits not you to know. Dor. Whither?

Mob. O, whither?

Dor. Whither?

Mop. It becomes thy oath full well Thou to me thy secrets tell.

Dor. Me too! Let me go thither. Mop. Or thou goest to th' grange or mill. Dor. If to either, thou dost ill.

Aut. Neither.

Dor. What, neither?

Aut. Neither.

Dor. Thou hast sworn my love to be. Mop. Thou hast sworn it more to me. Then whither goest? Say, whither?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves; my father and the gentlemen are in sad talk, and we'll not trouble them. Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenches, I'll buy for you both. Pedlar, let's have the first choice. Follow me, girls. [Exit with Dorcas and Mopsa.

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Exit Autolycus, singing:

Will you buy any tape, Or lace for your cape,

My dainty duck, my dear-a? Any silk, any thread, Any toys for your head,

Of the new'st and fin'st, fin'st wear-a? Come to the pedlar;

Money's a meddler

That doth utter all men's ware-a.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swineherds, that have made themselves all men of hair; they call themselves Saltiers, and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't; but they themselves are o'

Aut. Five justices' hands at it; and th' mind, if it be not too rough for some that know little but bowling, it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away! We'll none on't; here has been too much homely foolery already. I know, sır, we weary you. Pol. You weary those that refresh us. Pray, let's see these four threes of herds-

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danc'd before the King: and not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by th' squier.

Shep. Leave your prating; since these good men are pleas'd, let them come in:

but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.

Here a Dance of twelve Satyrs.

Pol. [To Shepherd] O, father, you'll know more of that hereafter.

[To Camillo] Is it not too far gone? 'Tis time to part them.

He's simple and tells much. [To Florizel] How now, fair shepherd!

Your heart is full of something that does

Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young

And handed love as you do, I was wont 340 To load my she with knacks; I would have ransack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury and have pour'd it

To her acceptance: you have let him go And nothing marted with him. If your lass Interpretation should abuse and call this 345 Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited

For a reply, at least if you make a care Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are.

The gifts she looks from me are pack'd and lock'd 35C Up in my heart, which I have given already,

But not deliver'd. O, hear me breathe my Before this ancient sir, whom, it should seem. Hath sometime lov'd. I take thy hand-this hand, As soft as dove's down and as white as it.

Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fann'd snow that's bolted

By th' northern blasts twice o'er. Pol. What follows this? How prettily the young swain seems to wash The hand was fair before! I have put you out.

But to your protestation; let me hear 36c What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to't. Pol. And this my neighbour too? And he, and more Than he, and men-the earth, the heavens, and all:

That, were I crown'd the most imperial monarch.

Thereof most worthy, were I the fairest youth

That ever made eye swerve, had force and knowledge

More than was ever man's, I would not prize them

Without her love; for her employ them-all, Commend them and condemn them to her Service

Or to their own perdition.

Fairly offer'd. 370 Pol. Cam. This shows a sound affection. But, my daughter.

Say you the like to him? Per. I cannot speak

So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better.

By th' pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out

The purity of his.

Take hands, a bargain! 375 Shep. And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to't:

I give my daughter to him, and will make Her portion equal his.

O, that must be Flo. I' th' virtue of your daughter. One being dead.

I shall have more than you can dream of vet:

Enough then for your wonder. But come

Contract us fore these witnesses.

Come, your hand, Shep. And, daughter, yours.

Pol. Have you a father?

Flo. Pol. Knows he of this?

He neither does nor shall. 38-Pol. Methinks a father

Is at the nuptial of his son a guest

That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more,

Is not your father grown incapable Of reasonable affairs? Is he not stupid 390 With age and alt'ring rheums? Can he speak, hear,

Know man from man, dispute his own estate?

Lies he not bed-rid, and again does nothing But what he did being childish?

No, good sir; Flo. He has his health, and ampler strength indeed

Than most have of his age. By my white beard, You offer him, if this be so, a wrong

Something unfilial. Reason my son Should choose himself a wife: but as good reason

The father-all whose joy is nothing else But fair posterity-should hold some counsel

In such a business.

I yield all this; Flo.

But, for some other reasons, my grave sir, Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint My father of this business.

Pol. Let him know't. 405 Flo. He shall not.

Pol. Prithee let him.

Flo. No, he must not.

Shep. Let him, my son; he shall not need to grieve

At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he must not. Mark our contract.

Pol. [Discovering himself] Mark your divorce, young sir,

Whom son I dare not call; thou art too

To be acknowledg'd—thou a sceptre's heir. That thus affects a sheep-hook! Thou, old traitor.

I am sorry that by hanging thee I can but Shorten thy life one week. And thou, fresh piece

Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know

The royal fool thou cop'st with-Shep O, my heart!

Pol. I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with briers and made

More homely than thy state. For thee, fond boy,

If I may ever know thou dost but sigh That thou no more shalt see this knackas never

Aut. Ha, ha! what a fool Honesty is! and Trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery; not a counterfeit stone, not a ribbon, glass, ballad, pomander, brooch, table-book, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tie, bracelet, hornring, to keep my pack from fasting. They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed and brought a benediction to the buyer; by which means I saw whose purse was best in picture; and what I saw, to my good use I rememb'red. My clown, who wants but something to be I am bound to you. a reasonable man, grew so in love with the wenches' song that he would not stir his! The truth of your own seeming, that you pettitoes till he had both tune and words. which so drew the rest of the herd to me that all their other senses stuck in ears. You might have pinch'd a placket, it was senseless; 'twas nothing to geld a codniece of a purse: I would have fil'd keys off that hung in chains. No hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that in this time of lethargy I pick'd and cut most of their festival purses; and had not the old man come in with a whoobub against his daughter and the King's son and scar'd my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army. [Camillo, Florizel, and Perdita, come forward.

Cam. Nay, but my letters, by this means being there

So soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt.

Flo. And those that you'll procure from King Leontes?

Cam. Shall satisfy your father.

Per. Happy be you! All that you speak shows fair.

Cam. [Seeing Autolycus] Who have we here?

We'll make an instrument of this; omit 625 Nothing may give us aid.

Aut. [Aside] If they have overheard me now-why, hanging.

Cam. How now, good fellow! Why shak'st thou so? Fear not, man; here's no harm intended to thee.

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.

Cam. Why, be so still; here's nobody will steal that from thee. Yet for the outside of thy poverty we must make an exchange; therefore discase thee instantly -thou must think there's a necessity in't -and change garments with this gentleman. Though the pennyworth on his side acquaint the King withal, I would not do't. be the worst, yet hold thee, there's some I hold it the more knavery to conceal it: boot. [Giving money. 627

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir. [Aside] I know ye well enough.

Cam. Nay, prithee dispatch. The gentleman is half flay'd already.

Aut. Are you in earnest, sir? [Aside] I smell the trick on't.

Flo. Dispatch, I prithee.

Aut. Indeed, I have had earnest; but I cannot with conscience take it.

tell the King Of this escape, and whither they are bound: Wherein my hope is I shall so prevail To force him after; in whose company 655 I shall re-view Sicilia, for whose sight I have a woman's longing.

Fortune speed us ! Thus we set on, Camillo, to th' sea-side.

Cam. The swifter speed the better. [Exeunt Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo. Aut. I understand the business, I hear it. To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse; a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for th' other senses. I see this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been without boot! What a boot is here with this exchange! Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do anything extempore. The Prince himself is about a piece of iniquity-stealing away from his father with his clog at his neels. If I thought it were a piece of honesty to and therein am I constant to my profession.

Re-enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside—here is more matter for a hot brain. Every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.

Clo. See, see; what a man you are now! There is no other way but to tell the King she's a changeling and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Clo. Nay-but hear me.

€80 Shep. Go to, then.

Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the King; and so your flesh and blood is not to be punish'd by him. Show those things you found about her, those Dismantle you, and, as you can, disliken secret things—all but what she has with her. This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the King all, every word—yea, and his son's pranks too; who, may say, is no honest man, neither to his father nor to me, to go about to make me the King's brother-in-law.

Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the farthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer by

I know how much an ounce.

Aut. [Aside] Very wisely, pupples! 695 Shep. Well, let us to the King. There is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard.

Aut. [Aside] I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

Clo. Pray heartly he be at palace. 700 Aut. [Aside] Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance. Let me pocket up my pedlar's excrement. [Takes off his false beard] How now, rustics! Whither are you bound?

Shep. To th' palace, an it like your worship.

Aut. Your aftairs there, what, with whom, the condition of that fardel, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding, and anything that is fitting to be known—discover.

Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir. 710 Aut. A lie: you are rough and hairy. Let me have no lying; it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie; but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel; therefore they do not give us the lie. 715

Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Shep. Are you a courtier, an't like you,

Aut. Whether it like me or no, I am a courtier. Seest thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings? Hath not my gait in it the measure of the court? Receives not thy nose court-odour from me? Reflect I not on thy baseness court-contempt? Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, that teaze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier cap-a-pe, and one that will either push on or pluck back thy business there; whereupon I command thee to open thy affair.

Shep. My business, sir, is to the King. Aut. What advocate hast thou to him? Shep. I know not, an't like you. 730 Clo. Advocate's the court-word for a pheasant; say you have none.

Shep. None, sir; I have no pheasant, cock nor hen.

Aut. How blessed are we that are not simple men!

Yet nature might have made me as these are, 735

Therefore I will not disdain.

Clo. This cannot be but a great courtier. Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical. A great man, I'll warrant;

I know by the picking on's teeth.

Aut. The fardel there? What's i' th' fardel? Wherefore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lies such secrets in this fardel and box which none must know but the King; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to th' speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why, sir?

Aut. The King is not at the palace; he is gone aboard a new ship to purge inelancholy and air himself; for, if thou be'st capable of things serious, thou must know the King is full of grief.

Shep. So 'tis said, sir—about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Aut. If that shepherd be not in handfast, let him fly; the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir? 760

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy and vengeance bitter; but those that are germane to him, though remov'd fifty times, shall all come under the hangman—which, though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say he shall be ston'd; but that death is too soft for him, say I. Draw our throne into a sheep-cote!—all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man e'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

Aut. He has a son-who shall be flav'd alive; then 'nointed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; then stand till he be three quarters and a dram dead; then recover'd again with aqua-vitæ or some other hot infusion; then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so Tell me, for you seem to be capital? honest plain men, what you have to the King. Being something gently consider'd, I'll bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and if it be in man besides the King to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to be of great authority. Close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold. Show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado. Remember-ston'd and flay'd alive.

Shep. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have I'll make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawn till I bring it you. 79-

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Shep. Av, sir.

Aut. Well, give me the mosety. Are you a party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir; but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flav'd out of it. Aut. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son! Hang him, he'll be made an example.

Clo. Comfort, good comfort! We must to the King and show our strange sights. He must know 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn till it be brought you. Aut. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right-hand; I will but look upon the hedge, and follow you. 814

Clo. We are blest in this man, as I may say, even blest.

Shep. Let's before, as he bids us. He was provided to do us good.

[Exeunt Shepherd and Clown. Aut. If I had a mind to be honest, I see Fortune would not suffer me: she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion-gold, and a means to do the Prince my master good; which who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him. If he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the King concerns him nothing, let him call me rogue for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to't. To him will I present them. There may be matter in it. Exit. 829

ACT FIVE

Scene I. Sicilia. The palace of Leontes. Enter LEONTES, CLEOMENES, DION. PAULINA, and Others.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd A saint-like soriow. No fault could you make

Which you have not redeem'd; indeed. paid down More penitence than done trespass. At the last,

Do as the heavens have done: forget your evil:

With them torgive yourself.

Whilst I remember Leon. Her and her virtues, I cannot forget

My blemishes in them, and so still think of The wrong I did myself; which was so much

That heirless it hath made my kingdom, and Destroy'd the sweet'st companion that e'er man

Bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, too true, my lord. If, one by one, you wedded all the world, Or from the all that are took something good

To make a perfect woman, she you kill'd 15

Would be unparallel'd.

I think so. Kill'd! She I kill'd! I did so; but thou strik'st me Sorely, to say I did. It is as bitter Upon thy tongue as in my thought. Now, good now.

Say so but seldom. Not at all, good ladv. 20 You might have spoken a thousand things that would Have done the time more benefit, and grac'd

Your kindness better.

You are one of those Paul. Would have him wed again.

Dion. If you would not so, You pity not the state, nor the remembrance

Of his most sovereign name; consider little What dangers, by his Highness' fail of issue, May drop upon his kingdom and devour Incertain lookers-on. What were more holy Than to rejoice the former queen is well? What holier than, for royalty's repair, For present comfort, and for future good, To bless the bed of majesty again With a sweet fellow to't?

There is none worthy, Paul. Respecting her that's gone. Besides, the gods Will have fulfill'd their secret purposes; For has not the divine Apollo said, Is't not the tenour of his oracle. That King Leontes shall not have an heir Till his lost child be found? Which that it shall,

Is all as monstrous to our human reason As my Antigonus to break his grave And come again to me; who, on my life, Did perish with the infant. 'Tis your counsel

My lord should to the heavens be contrary,

Oppose against their wills. [To Leontes] We shall not marry till thee bid st us. Care not for issue: The crown will find an heir. Great Alex- Shall be when your first queen a again in ander Left his to th' worthiest; so his successor! Never till then. Wishke to be the best.

Good Paulina, Who hast the memory of Hermione. I know, in honour, O that ever I Had squar'd me to thy counsel! Then, even now.

I might have look'd upon my queen's full eves.

Have taken treasure from her hos-And left them

More nch for what they vielded.

Thou speak st truth. 55 No more such wives: therefore, no wife, One worse,

And better us'd, would make her sainted spirit

Again possess her corpse, and on this stage. Where we offend her now, appear soulvex'd.

And begin 'Why to me'-

Had she such power, 60 She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me To murder her I married.

I should so.

Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you Is colder than that theme: 'She had not mark

Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in't

You chose her; then I'd shriek, that even your ears

Should rift to hear me; and the words that follow'd

Should be 'Remember mine'.

Leon. Stars, stars, And all eyes else dead coals! Fear thou no wife;

I'll have no wife. Paulina.

Will you swear Never to marry but by my free leave? 70 Leon. Never, Paulina; so be blest my spirit l

Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.

Cleo. You tempt him over-much. Unless another,

As like Hermione as is her picture, Affront his eye.

Good madam-Cleo.

Paul. I have done. 75 Yet, if my lord will marry—if you will, sir, No remedy but you will—give me the office To choose you a queen. She shall not be so woung

As was your former; but she shall be such As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy 80

To see her in your arms. My true Paulina. Leon.

Pari. That breath :

Enter a Genfleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself Prince Florizel. Son of Polixenes, with his princess-she

The fairest I have yet beheld-desires access

To your high presence.

Leon. What with him? He comes not Like to his father's greatness. His approach, So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us 'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd 91 By need and accident. What train?

Gent. But few. And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him? Gent. Ay; the most peerless piece of earth, I think,

That e'er the sun shone bright on. Paul. O Hermione, As every present time doth boast itself Above a better gone, so must thy grave Give way to what's seen now! Sir, you yourself Have said and writ so, but your writing now

Flow'd with her beauty once: 'tis shrewdly ebb'd.

To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam. The one I have almost forgot-your pardon: The other, when she has obtain'd your eye, Will have your tongue too. This is a creature. Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal

Of all professors else, make proselvtes Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How ! not women? Gent. Women will love her that she is a woman

More worth than any man; men, that she is The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes; Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends. Bring them to our embracement, [Exeunt] Still, 'tis strange

He thus should steal upon us.

Had our prince, w15 Jewel of children, seen this hour, he had pair'd

Well with this lord: there was not full a month

Between their births.

Leon. Prithee no more; cease. Thou know'st 119 He dies to me again when talk'd of. Sure, When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches

Will bring me to consider that which may Unfurnish me of reason.

Re-enter CLEOMENES, with FLORIZEL, PERDITA, and Attendants.

Your mother was most true to wedlock,
Prince:

For she did print your royal father off, 125 Conceiving you. Were I but twenty-one, Your father's image is so hit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him, and speak of something wildly

By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!

And your fair princess—goddess! O, alas!

I lost a couple that 'twixt heaven and earth

Might thus have stood begetting wonder as You, gracious couple, do. And then I lost—All mine own folly—the society, 755 Amity too, of your brave father, whom, Though bearing misery, I desire my life Once more to look on him.

Flo. By his command Have I here touch'd Sicilia, and from him Give you all greetings that a king, at friend, Can send his brother; and, but infirmity, Which waits upon worn times, hath some

Leon. O my brother—Good gentleman !—the wrongs I have done thee stir

Afresh within me; and these thy offices, So rarely kind, are as interpreters 150 Of my behind-hand slackness! Welcome hither,

As is the spring to th' earth. And hath he too

Expos'd this paragon to th' fearful usage, At least ungentle, of the dreadful Neptune, To greet a man not worth her pains, much less

Th' adventure of her person?

Flo. Good, my lord, She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smalus, 'That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd and lov'd?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him whose daughter

His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her;

A prosperous south-wind friendly, we have cross'd.

To execute the charge my father gave me For visiting your Highness. My best train I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd; Who for Bohemia bend, to signify 163 Not only my success in Libya, sir, But my arrival and my wife's in safety Here where we are.

Lon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air whilst you
Do climate here! You have a holy father,
A graceful gentleman, against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin,
For which the heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father's blest.

As he from heaven merits it, with you, 175 Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,

Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on,

Such goodly things as you!

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir, 280

Bohemia greets you from himself by me; Desires you to attach his son, who has— His dignity and duty both cast off—

142 Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with

A shepherd's daughter.

Leon. Where's Bohemia? Speak. 185 Lord. Here in your city; I now came from him.

I speak amazedly; and it becomes My marvel and my message. To your court Whiles he was hast'ning—in the chase, it

Of this fair couple—meets he on the way roo The father of this seeming lady and Her brother, having both their country quitted

With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me; Whose honour and whose honesty till now Endur'd all weathers.

Lord. Lay't so to his charge; He's with the King your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo?
Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him;
who now

Has these poor men in question. Never saw I

Wretches so quake. They kneel, they kiss the earth; Forswear themselves as often as they speak. Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them

With divers deaths in death.

Per.

O my poor father!

The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have 408

Our contract celebrated.

You are married? Leon. Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be; The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. My lord. Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is.

When once she is my wife.

Leon. That 'once', I see by your good father's speed.

Will come on very slowly. I am sorry Most sorry, you have broken from his liking Where you were tied in duty; and as sorry Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,

That you might well enjoy her.

Dear, look up. 215 Though Fortune, visible an enemy, Should chase us with my father, pow'r no

Hath she to change our loves. Beseech you,

Remember since you ow'd no more to time Than I do now. With thought of such affections, Step forth mine advocate: at your request My father will grant precious things as trifles.

Leon. Would he do so, I'd beg your precious mistress,

Which he counts but a trifle.

Sir, my liege, Your eve hath too much youth in't. Not a

I now go toward him; therefore, follow me, And mark what way I make. Come, good my lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Sicilia. Before the valace of Leontes.

Enter AUTOLYCUS and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought I heard the shepherd say he found the child.

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

1 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business; but the changes I perceived in the King and Camillo were very notes of admiration. They seem'd almost, with staring on one another, to tear the cases et their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they look'd as they had heard of a world ransom'd, or one destroyed. A notable passion of wonder appeared in them; but the wisest beholder that knew no more but seeing could not say if th' importance were joy or sorrow-but in the extremity of the one it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman that happily knows more. The news, Rogero?

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires. The oracle is fulfill'd: the King's daughter is found. Such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes the Lady Paulina's steward: he can deliver you more. How goes it now, sir? This news, which is call'd true, is so like an old tale that the verity of it is in strong suspicion. Has the King found his heir ?

3 Gent. Most true, if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance. That which you hear you'll swear you see, there is such 225 unity in the proofs. The mantle of Queen it; the letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his character; the majesty of the creature in resemblance of the mother; the affection of nobleness which nature shows above her breeding; and many other evidences-proclaim her with all certainty to be the King's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. No.
3 Gent. Then have you lost a sight which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another, so and in such manner that it seem'd sorrow wept to take leave of them; for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands, with countenance of such distraction that they were to be known by garment, not by favour. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter, as if that joy were now become a loss, cries 'O, thy mother, thy mother!' then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her. Now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encounted through a many report to f /30 v m and undo. s description to ilb ir.

3 Gent. Like an old tale still, "hich will have matter to reherrie, though credit be asleep and not an ear open: he was torn to pieces with a bear. This avouches the shopherd's son, who has not only his innocence, which seems much, to justify him, but a handlerchief and rings of lals that Paulina brows.

1 Gent. What recame of his bark and his followers?

3 Gent. Wreck'd the same instant of their master's death, and in the view of the shepherd; so that all the instruments which aided to expose the child were even then lost when it was found. But, O. the noble combat that 'twixt joy and sorrow was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declin'd for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfill'd. She litted the Princess from the earth, and so locks her in embracing as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angl'd for mine eyescaught the water, though not the fishwas, when at the relation of the Queen's death, with the manner how she came to't bravely confess'd and lamented by the King, how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, from one sign of dolour to another, she did with an 'Alas I'-I would fain say-bleed tears; for I am sure my heart wept blood. Who was most marble there changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed. If all the world could have seen't, the woe had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court? 3 Gent. No. The Princess hearing of her mother's statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina—a piece many years in doing and now newly perform'd by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano, who, had he himself eternity and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape. He so near to Hermione hath done Hermione that they say one would speak to her and stand in hope of answer—thither with all greediness of affection are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

2 Gent. I thought she had some great matter there in hand; for she hath privately twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither, and with our company piece the rejoicing?

1 Gent. Who would be thence that has 55 the benefit of access? Every wink of an 2 Gent. What, pray you, because of eye some new grace will be born. Our Anticonus, that curried hence the child? I absence makes us unthrifty to our knowledge. Let's along. [Exeunt Gentlemen. 105 Ann. Now, had I not the dash of my former life in me, would preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son aboard the Prince; told him I heard them talk of a fardel and I know not what; but he at that time over-fond of the shepherd's daughter-so he then took her to be-who began to be much sea-sick. and himself little better, extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscover'd. But 'tis all one to me: for had I been the finder-out of this secret, it would not have relish'd among my other discredits.

Enter Shepherd and Clown.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past moe children, but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born.

Clo. You are well met, sir. You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born. See you these clothes? Say you see them not and think me still no gentleman born. You were best say these robes are not gentlemen born. Give me the lie, do; and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Aut. I know you are now, sir, a gentle-

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have; but I was a gentleman born before my father; for the King's son took me by the hand and call'd me brother; and then the two kings call'd my father brother; and then the Prince, my brother, and the Princess, my sister, call'd my father father. And so we wept; and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the Prince my master.

Shep. Prithee, son, do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand. I will swear to the Prince thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it: I'll swear it. Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his fuend. And I'll swear to the Prince thou art a tall fellow of thy hands and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands and that thou wilt be drunk. But I'll swear it; and I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of the hands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power. 162 Clo. Ay, by any means, prove a tall fellow. If I do not wonder how thou dar'st venture to be drunk not being a tall fellow, trust me not. Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the Queen's picture. Come, follow us; we'll be thy good masters. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Sicilia. A chapel in Paulina's I am asham'd. Does not the stone rebuke house.

Enter LEONTES, POLIXENES, FLORIZEL. PERDITA, CAMILLO, PAULINA, LOIDS, and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort

That I have had of thee!

What, sovereign sir, I did not well. I meant well. All my services You have paid home; but that you have vouchsaf'd,

With your crown'd brother and these your contracted

Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit.

It is a surplus of your grace, which never My life may last to answer.

Lean. O Paulina. We honour you with trouble; but we came To see the statue of our queen. Your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content

In many singularities; but we saw not That which my daughter came to look Let him that was the cause of this have upon.

The statue of her mother.

As she liv'd peerless. Paul. So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Excels whatever yet you look'd upon Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it Lonely, apart. But here it is. Prepare To see the life as lively mock'd as ever 19 Still sleep mock'd death. Behold; and say 'tis well. [Paulme draws a curtain, and discovers Hermione standing like a statue.

I like your silence; it the more shows off Your wonder; but yet speak. First, you, my liege.

Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture ! Chide ine, dear stone, that I may say indeed Thou art Hermione; or rather, thou art she In thy not chiding; for she was as tence As infancy and grace. But vet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wankled, nothing

So aged as this seerus.

Pol. O, not by much!

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence, Which lets go by some sixteen years and makes her As she Lv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have dore, So much to my good comfort as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus sine stood, Even with such life of majesty-warm life,

As now it coldly stands—when first I woo'd her!

For being more stone than it? O royal

There's magic in thy majesty, which has My evils conjur'd to remembrance, and 40 From thy admiring daughter took the spirits,

Standing like stone with thee!

And give me leave. And do not say 'tis superstition that

I kneel, and then implore her blessing. Lady.

Dear queen, that ended when I but began, Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

Paul. O, patience! The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's Not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too scre laid on,

Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers dry. Scarce any joy 51 Did ever so long live; no sorrow But kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother, r'wog To take off so much grief from you as he 55

Will piece up in himself. Paul. Indeed, my lord.

If I had thought the sight of my poor image Would thus have wrought you-for the stone is mine-

I'd not have show'd it.

Leon. Do not draw the curtain. Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't, lest your fancy

May think anon it moves.

Leon. Let be. let be. 61 Would I were dead, but that methinks already-

What was he that did make it? See, my lord.

Would you not deem it breath'd, and that Dear life redeems you. You perceive she those veins

Did verily bear blood?

Masterly done! 65 The very life seems warm upon her lip. Leon. The fixure of her eye has motion

As we are mock'd with art.

I'll draw the curtain. Paul. My lord's almost so far transported that He'll think anon it lives.

O sweet Paulina, 70 Tean. Make me to think so twenty years together! No settled senses of the world can match The pleasure of that madness. Let't alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you; but I could afflict you farther.

Do, Paulina: 75 Leon. For this affliction has a taste as sweet As any cordial comfort. Still, methinks. There is an air comes from her. What fine

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me.

For I will kiss her.

Good my lord, forbear. 80 Paul. The ruddiness upon her lip is wet; You'll mar it if you kiss it; stain your oun

With oily painting. Shall I draw the curtain?

Leon. No, not these twenty years.

So long could I Per. Stand by, a looker-on.

Either forbear, Paul. Out presently the chapel, or resolve you For more amazement. If you can behold

I'll make the statue move indeed, descend, And take you by the hand, but then you'll think-

Which I protest against—I am assisted 90 By wicked powers.

Leon. What you can make her do I am content to look on; what to speak I am content to hear: for 'tis as easy To make her speak as move.

Paul. It is requir'd You do awake your faith. Then all stand still:

Or those that think it is unlawful business I am about, let them depart.

Leon. Proceed. No foot shall stir.

Paul. Music, awake her: strike. [Music. 'Tis time; descend; be stone no more; approach; Strike all that look upon with marvel. But how, is to be question'd; for I saw her, Come; 100

I'll fill your grave up. Stir; nay, come away.

Bequeath to death your numbness, for For him, I partly know his mind-to find from him stirs. [Hermione comes down from the bedestal.

Start not; her actions shall be holy as You hear my spell is lawful. Do not shun her Until you see her die again; for then You kill her double. Nay, present your hand.

When she was young you woo'd her: now in age

Is she become the suitor?

O, she's warm! Leon. If this be magic, let it be an art Lawful as eating.

She embraces him. Pol.

Cam. She hangs about his neck. If she pertain to life, let her speak too. Pol. Ay, and make it manifest where she has liv'd. Or how stol'n from the dead.

Paul. That she is living, 115 Were it but told you, should be hooted at Like an old tale; but it appears she lives Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while.

Please you to interpose, fair madam. Kneel. And pray your mother's blessing. Turn, good lady;

Our Perdita is found.

You gods, look down, And from your sacred vials pour your graces

Upon my daughter's head! Tell me, mine own.

Where hast thou been preserv'd? Where liv'd? How found

Thy father's court? For thou shalt hear that I,

Knowing by Paulina that the oracle Gave hope thou wast in being, have preserv'd

Myself to see the issue.

There's time enough for that. Paul. Lest they desire upon this push to trouble Your joys with like relation. Go together, You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. I, an old turtle, 132 Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there

My mate, that's never to be found again, Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O peace, Paulina! 135 Thou shouldst a husband take by my

THE SCENE: England and France.

ACT ONE

Scene I. King John's palace.

KING PHILIP OF FRANCE.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and Others, with Chatillon.

r. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of France

In my behaviour to the majesty,
The borrowed majesty, of England here.
Eli. A strange beginning—borrowed

Thy nephew and right royal sovereign. 15 K. John. What follows if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war,

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood.

Controlment for controlment—so answer
France. 20
Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth—

The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there, 25 The thunder of my cannon shall be heard. So hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath

And sullen presage of your own decay.

An honourable conduct let him have—
Pembroke, look to 't. Farewell, Chattllon, 30

K. John. Our strong possession and our right for us!

Eli. Your strong possession much more than your right,

Or else it must go wrong with you and me; So much my conscierce whispers in your ear, Which none but heaven and you and I shall hear.

Enter a Sheriff.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest The accent of his tongue affecteth him. controversy Come from the country to be judg'd by you

That e'er I heard. Shall I produce the men? K. John. Let them approach.

Our abbeys and our priories shall pay This expedition's charge.

Enter ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE and PHILIP, his bastard brother.

What men are you? Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentle-

Born in Northamptonshire, and eldest son. As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge-A soldier by the honour-giving hand Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. Wnat art thou? Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge. K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?

You came not of one mother then, it seems. Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty

That is well known-and, as I think, one father;

But for the certain knowledge of that truth I put you o'er to heaven and to my mother. Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! Thou dost shame thy mother.

And wound her honour with this diffidence. Bast, I, madam? No, I have no reason for it-

That is my brother's plea, and none of mine:

The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out At least from fair five hundred pound a vear.

Heaven guard my mother's honour and my land!

Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,

Your brother did employ my father much-

Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land:

Your tale must be how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once dispatch'd him in an embassy

To Germany, there with the Emperor 100 To treat of high affairs touching that time. Th' advantage of his absence took the King, And in the meantime sojourn'd at my father's;

Where how he did prevail I shame to speak-

But truth is truth: large lengths of seas and shores

Between my father and my mother lay, As I have heard my father speak himself, When this same lusty gentleman was got. Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd His lands to me, and took it on his death 110 That this my mother's son was none of his:

And if he were, he came into the world Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.

Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine.

My mother's son did get your father's heir; Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force 130

To dispossess that child which is not his? Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me,

Than was his will to get me, as I think. Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,

And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land, 135 Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,

Lord of thy presence and no land beside? Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape

And I had his, Sir Robert's his, like him; And if my legs were two such riding-rods, My arms such eel-skins stuff'd, my face so

That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose Lest men should say 'Look where threefarthings goes!

And, to his shape, were heir to all this land-

Would I might never stir from off this place.

I would give it every foot to have this face! I would not be Sir Nob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well. Wilt thou forsake thy fortune,

Bequeath thy land to him and follow me? I am a soldier and now bound to France. Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance.

Your face hath got five hundred pound a year,

dear.

Madam, I'll follow you unto the death. Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither. Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege, so is my name

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth; what though?

Something about, a little from the right, 170 In at the window, or else o'er the hatch: Who dares not stir by day must walk by night; And have is have, however men do catch. Near or far off, well won is still well shot: And I am I, howe'er I was begot.

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thy desire:

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.

Come, madam, and come, Richard, we must speed

For France, for France, for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu. Good fortune come to thee!

For thou wast got i' th' way of honesty. Exeunt all but the Bastard. A foot of honour better than I was;

But many a many foot of land the worse, Well, now can I make any Joan a lady. 'Good den, Sir Richard!'—'God-a-mercy, fellow!' 185

And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:

For new-made honour doth forget men's names:

'Tis too respective and too sociable For your conversion. Now your traveller, He and his toothpick at my worship's

That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter LADY FAULCONBRIDGE, and JAMES GURNEY.

O me, 'tis my mother! How now, good lady!

What brings you here to court so hastily? Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother? Where is he

That holds in chase mine honour up and Needs must you lay your heart at his down?

My brother Robert, old Sir Robert's son?

Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man? Is it Sir Robert's son that you seek so? Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend boy, Sir Robert's son! Why scorn'st thou at Sir Robert?

He is Sir Robert's son, and so art thou. Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile? Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Philip-Sparrow! James, Bast. There's toys abroad-anon I'll tell thee more. (Exit Gurney. Madam, I was not old Sir Robert's son :

Sir Robert might have eat his part in me Upon Good Friday, and ne'er broke his fast.

To whom am I beholding for these limbs? Sir Robert never holp to make this leg. 240 Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,

That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honour?

What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother, Basilisco-like.

What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.

But, mother, I am not Sir Robert's son: I have disclaim'd Sir Robert and my land; Embrace him, love him, give him welcome Legitimation, name, and all is gone.

Then, good my mother, let me know my father-

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil. Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-hon was thy father.

Thou art the issue of my dear offence.

ACT TWO

Scene I. France. Before Angiers.

Enter, on one side, AUSTRIA and Forces: on the other, King Philip of France, Lewis the Dauphin, Constance, Arthur, and Forces.

K. Phi. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.

Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood. Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart And fought the holy wars in Palestine, By this brave duke came early to his grave; And for amends to his posterity,

At our importance hither is he come To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf; And to rebuke the usurpation

Of thy unnatural uncle, English John. hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-delion's death

The rather that you give his offspring life. Shadowing their right under your wings of Hath put himself in arms. war.

I give you welcome with a powerless hand. But with a heart full of unstained love: Welcome before the gates of Angiers, Duke.

K. Phi. A noble boy! Who would not do thee right?

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss

As seal to this indenture of my love: That to my home I will no more return Till Angiers and the right thou hast in France,

Together with that pale, that white-fac'd shore,

Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides

And coops from other lands her islanders-Even till that England, hedg'd in with the

That water-walled bulwark, still secure And confident from foreign purposes-Even till that utmost corner of the west Salute thee for her king. Till then, fair boy, Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,

Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength

To make a more requital to your love! Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their swords

In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work! Our cannon shall be bent

Against the brows of this resisting town; Call for our chiefest men of discipline, To cull the plots of best advantages. We'll lay before this town our royal bones, Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood.

But we will make it subject to this boy. Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,

Lest unadvis'd you sta. your swords with blood;

My Lord Chatillon may from England bring

That right in peace which here we urge in war, And then we shall repent each drop of blood

That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter CHATILLON.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady! Lo, upon thy wish,

Our messenger Chatillon is arriv'd. What England says, say briefly, gentle lord; We coldly pause for thee. Chatillon, speak. Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege

And stir them up against a mightier task. 418

England, impatient of your just demands. The adverse winds.

Whose lessure I have stay'd, have given him time

To land his legions all as soon as I:

His marches are expedient to this town, 60 His forces strong, his soldiers confident. With him along is come the mother-queen, An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife;

With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain:

With them a bastard of the king's deceas'd: And all th' unsettled humours of the land-Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries, With ladies' faces and fierce dragons'

spleers-

Have sold their fortunes at their native homes.

Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs. To make a hazard of new fortunes here.

In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er Did never float upon the swelling tide To do offence and scathe in Christendom. Drum beats.

The interruption of their churlish drums Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand:

To parley or to fight, therefore prepare. K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!

Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much

We must awake endeavour for defence. For courage mounteth with occasion. Let them be welcome then; we are prepar'd.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the BASTARD, PEMBROKE, and Others.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace permit

Our just and lineal entrance to our own! 85 If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven.

Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct Their proud contempt that beats His peace to heaven!

K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return

From France to England, there to live in peace!

England we love, and for that England's sake

With burden of our armour here we sweat. This toil of ours should be a work of thine: But thou from loving England art so far That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king.

Cut off the sequence of posterity, Outfaced infant state, and done a rape Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Ceffrey's face:
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his;

This little abstract doth contain that large Which died in Geffrey, and the hand of time

Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume First Geffrey was thy elder brother born, And this his son; England was Geffrey's right,

And this is Geffrey's. In the name of God, How comes it then that thou art call'd a king.

When living blood doth in these temples beat

Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France, 110 To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal judge that stirs good thoughts

In any breast of strong authority To look into the blots and stains of right. That judge hath made me guardian to this boy, IIS

Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whose help I mean to chastise it.
K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp

K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.

K. Phi. Excuse it is to beat usurping down.

Eli. Who is it thou dost call usurper, France?

Const. Let me make answer: thy usurping son.

Eli. Out, insolent! Thy bastard shall be king,

That thou mayst be a queen and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as

As thine was to thy husband; and this boy Liker in feature to his father Geffrey 126 Than thou and John in manners—being as like

As rain to water, or devil to his dam.

My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think
His father never was so true begot; 130
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.

Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father. Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Bast. Hear the crier.

Aust. What the devil art thou?

Bast. One that will play the devil, sir,
with you,

135

An 'a may catch your hide and you alone. You are the hare of whom the proverb goes, Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard:

I'll smoke your skin-coat an I catch you right;

Sirrah, look to 't; i' faith I will, i' faith. 140
Blanch O, well did he become that lion's robe

That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him As great Alcides' shows upon an ass; But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back,

Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What cracker is this same that deafs our ears

With this abundance of superfluous breath? King Philip, determine what we shall do straight.

K. Pht. Women and fools, break off your conference. 150

King John, this is the very sum of all: England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,

In right of Arthur, do I claim of thee;
Wilt thou resign them and lay down thy arms?

K. John. My life as soon. I do defy thee,

Arthur of Britaine, yield thee to my herd, And out of my dear love I'll give thee more Than e'er the coward hand of France can win.

Submit thee, boy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child. Const. Do, child, go to it grandam, child; Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will 201

Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig. There's a good grandam!

Arth. Good my mother, peace! I would that I were low laid in my grave: I am not worth this coil that's made for me.

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, whe'er she does or no!
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,

Draws those heaven-moving pearls from his

Draws those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,

Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee; Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be brib'd

To do him justice and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth,

Call not me slanderer! Thou and thine usurp

The dominations, royalties, and rights, Of this oppressed boy; this is thy eldest son's son, Infortunate in nothing but in thee.

Thy sins are visited in this poor child;

The canon of the law is laid on him, Being but the second generation Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done. I have but this to sav-

Const. That he is not only plagued for her sin, But God hath made her sin and her the plague On this removed issue, plagued for her And with her plague; her sin his injury, Her injury the beadle to her sin; All punish'd in the person of this child,

And all for her-a plague upon her! Eli. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce

A will that bars the title of thy son. Const. Ay, who doubts that? A will, a wicked will;

A woman's will; a cank'red grandam's will! K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temperate.

It ill beseems this presence to cry aim To these ill-tuned repetitions.

Some trumpet summon hither to the walls These men of Angiers; let us hear them 100 speak

Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpet sounds. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls?

K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England. England for itself. K. John. You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects-You loving men of Angiers, K. Phi.

Arthur's subjects, Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle-

K. John. For our advantage; therefore hear us first.

These flags of France, that are advanced Before the eye and prospect of your town

Have hither march'd to your endamagement;

The cannons have their bowels full of wrath, And ready mounted are they to spit forth

Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls ' All preparation for a bloody siege And merciless proceeding by these French

Behold, the French amaz'd vouchsafe a parle:

And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire. To make a shaking fever in your walls. They shoot but calm words folded up in smoke,

To make a faithless error in your ears; 230 Which trust accordingly, kind citizens, And let us in-your King, whose labour'd spirits, Forwearied in this action of swift speed, Craves harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Lo, in this right hand, whose protection Is most divinely vow'd upon the right Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet. Son to the elder brother of this man. and king o'er him and all that he enjoys; or this down-trodden equity we tread in warlike march these greens before your town,

Being no further enemy to you Than the constraint of hospitable zeal n the relief of this oppressed child teligiously provokes. Be pleased then To pay that duty which you truly owe To him that owes it, namely, this young prince;

And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear, Save in aspect, hath all offence seal'd up; Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heaven; And with a blessed and unvex'd retire, With unhack'd swords and helmets all un-bruis'd. We will bear home that lusty blood again Which here we came to spout against your town, And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.

But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer, 'Tis not the roundure of your old-fac'd

Can hide you from our messengers of war, all these English and their Though discipline

Were harbour'd in their rude circumference. Then tell us, shall your city call us lord In that behalf which we have challeng'd it; Or shall we give the signal to our rage, 265 And stalk in blood to our possession?

Cit. In brief: we are the King of England's subjects;

For him, and in his right, we hold this town. K. John. Acknowledge then the King, and let me in.

Cit. That can we not; but he that proves the King.

Have we ramm'd up our gates against the To enter conquerors, and to proclaim world.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the King?

And if not that, I bring you witnesses: Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's hreed-

Bast. Bastards and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.

K. Phi. As many and as well-born bloods as those-

Bast. Some bastards too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.

Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest.

We tor the worthiest hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those souls

That to their everlasting residence. Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!

K. Phi. Amen, Amen! Mount, chevaliers: to arms!

Bast. Saint George, that swing'd the dragon, and e'er since

At your den, sirrah, with your lioness, I would set an ox-head to your hon's hide, And make a monster of you.

Peace! no more. Aust. Bast. O. tremble, for you hear the lion roar!

K. John. Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth

In best appointment all our regiments. Bast. Speed then to take advantage of the field.

K. Phi. It shall be so; and at the other hill Command the rest to stand. God and our France, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates And let young Arthur, Duke of Britaine,

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring vour bells:

King John, your king and England's, doth approach.

Commander of this hot malicious day.

Their armours that march'd hence so silverbright Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood.

There stuck no plume in any English crest That is removed by a staff of France:

Our colours do return in those same hands That did display them when we first march'd forth: 320

And like a jolly troop of huntsmen come Our lusty English, all with purpled hands. Dy'd in the dying slaughter of their foes.

Open your gates and give the victors way. Cit. Heralds, from off our tow'rs we might behold 325

From first to last the onset and retire Of both your armies, whose equality

By our best eyes cannot be censured. Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd blows; Strength match'd with strength, and power so even. We hold our town for neither, yet for both.

Enter the two Kings, with their Powers, at several doors.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?

Say, shall the current of our right run on? Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,

Shall leave his native channel and o'erswell With course disturb'd even thy confining shores.

Unless thou let his silver water keep A peaceful progress to the ocean.

That sways the earth this climate overlooks. Before we will lay down our just-borne arms,

We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear,

Or add a royal number to the dead, Gracing the scroll that tells of this war's loss

With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory How like you this wild coursel, mighty tow'rs When the rich blood of kings is set on fire! O, now doth Death line his dead chaps with steel;

The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his I like it well. fangs:

In undetermin'd differences of kings. Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus? Cry 'havoc!' kings; back to the stained field.

You equal potents, fiery kindled spirits! Then let confusion of one part confirm The other's peace. Till then, blows, blood, and death! 360

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen

K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?

Cit. The King of England, when we know the King.

K. Phi. Know him in us that here hold up Into this city's bosom. his right.

K. John. In us that are our own great deputy And bear possession of our person here.

Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king, Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,

Yurn thou the mouth of thy artillery, As we will ours, against these saucy walls: and when that we have dash'd them to the ground, Why then defy each other, and pell-mell Make work upon ourselves, for heaven or hell. K. Phi. Let it be so. Say, where will you assault?

K. John. We from the west will send destruction

Aust. I from the north. Our thunder from the south K. Phi. shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

Bast. [Aside] O prudent discipline! From north to south,

Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth.

I'll stir them to it.—Come, away, away! Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe awhile to stay,

And I shall show you peace and fair-fac'd league;

Win you this city without stroke or wound: Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds That here come sacrifices for the field. 420 Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on with favour; we are bent to hear.

Cit. That daughter ti. e of Spain, the Lady Blanch,

Is niece to England; look upon the years Of Lewis the Dauphin and that lovely maid. If lusty love should go in quest of beauty, Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? If zealous love should go in search of virtue. Where should he find it purer than in Blanch? If love ambitious sought a match of birth, Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch?

Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth, Is the young Dauphin every way complete-

If not complete of, say he is not she; And she again wants nothing, to name want, If want it be not that she is not he. 436 He is the half part of a blessed man, Left to be finished by such as she: And she a fair divided excellence,

Scene 17 KING JOHN

Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. 110 O, two such silver currents, when they join,

Do gloufy the banks that bound them in: And two such shores to two such streams made one,

Two such controlling bounds, shall you be, Kings,

To these two princes, if you marry them. 145 This union shall do more than battery can To our fast-closed gates; for at this match With swifter spleen than powder can enforce.

The mouth of passage shall we fling wide

And give you entrance; but without this match,

The sea enraged is not half so deaf, Lions more confident, mountains and rocks More free from motion-no, not Death himself

In mortal fury half so peremptory As we to keep this city.

Here's a stay 455 That shakes the rotten carcass of old Death Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed.

That spits forth death and mountains, rocks and seas:

Talks as familiarly of roaring lions As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs ! 460 What cannoneer begot this lusty blood? He speaks plain cannon-fire, and smoke and bounce;

He gives the bastinado with his tongue; Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his But buffets better than a fist of France. 465 Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words

Since I first call'd my brother's father dad. Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match:

Give with our niece a dowry large enough; For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie 170 Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown That you green boy shall have no sun to ripe

The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit. I see a yielding in the looks of France; Mark how they whisper. Urge them while their souls Are capable of this ambition,

Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath For I do love her most unfeignedly. Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse, Cool and congeal again to what it was.

Cit. Why answer not the double majesties This friendly treaty of our threat'ned town? K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward first

To speak unto this city: what say you? K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son.

Can in this book of beauty read 'I love', 485 Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen: r Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poictiers.

And all that we upon this side the sea-Except this city now by us besieg'd-Find hable to our crown and dignity, Shall gild her budal bed, and make her rich In titles, honours, and promotions, As she in beauty, education, blood, Holds hand with any princess of the world. K. Phy. What say'st thou, boy? Look in the lady's face.

Lew. I do, my lord, and in her eye I fir.d A wonder, or a wondrous miracle, The shadow of myself form'd in her eye: Which, being but the shadow of your son, Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow.

I do protest I nover lov'd myself Till now infixed I beheld myself

Drawn in the flattering table of her eye. [Whispers with Blanch.

Bast. [Aside] Drawn in the flattering table of her eye. Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow, And quarter'd in her heart-he doth espy Himself love's traitor. This is pity now, That hang'd and drawn and quarter'd there should be

In such a love so vile a lout as he.

Blanch. My uncle's will in this respect is

If he see aught in you that makes him like. That any thing he sees which moves his liking

I can with ease translate it to my will: Or if you will, to speak more properly, I will enforce it eas'ly to my love. 515 Further I will not flatter you, my lord. That all I see in you is worthy love. Than this: that nothing do I see in youchurlish thoughts themselves Though should be your judge-That I can find should ment any hate. 520 K. John. What say these young ones?

What say you, my niece? Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do

What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say. K. John. Speak then, Prince Dauphin; can you love this lady? Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love;

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen,

Touraine, Maine, Poictiers, and Anjou, these five provinces, With her to thee; and this addition more, Full thirty thousand marks of English coin.

Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal. Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well; young princes, close your hands.

423

Aust. And your lips too; for I am well Makes it take head from all indifferency, assur'd

That I did so when I was first assur'd. 535 K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,

Let in that amity which you have made; For at Saint Mary's chapel presently The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd. Is not the Lady Constance in this troop? 540 I know she is not; for this match made up. Her presence would have interrupted much. Where is she and her son? Tell me, who knows.

Lew. She is sad and passionate at your Highness' tent.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league that we have made

Will give her sadness very little cure. Brother of England, how may we content This widow lady? In her right we came: Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,

To our own vantage.

We will heal up all, 550 K. John. For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Britaine,

And Earl of Richmo d; and this rich fair town

We make him lord of. Call the Lady Constance:

Some speedy messenger bid her repair To our solemnity. I trust we shall, If not fill up the measure of her will, Yet in some measure satisfy her so That we shall stop her exet mation. Go we as well as haste will suffer us To this unlook'd-for, unprepared pomp. 560

[Exeunt all but the Bastard. Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition! John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole, Hath willingly departed with a part; And France, whose armour conscience buckled on. Whom zeal and charity brought to the field

As God's own soldier, rounded in the ear With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil,

That broker that still breaks the pate of faith.

That daily break-vow, he that wins of all. Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids.

Who having no external thing to lose But the word 'maid', cheats the poor maid of that;

That smooth-fac'd gentleman, tickling commodity,

Commodity, the bias of the world-The world, who of itself is peised well, 575 Why holds thine eye that lamentable Made to run even upon even ground, Till this advantage, this vile-drawing bias. This sway of motion, this commodity,

From all direction, purpose, course, in-

And this same bias, this commodity, This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word.

Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France, Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid,

From a resolv'd and honourable war. To a most base and vile-concluded peace. And why rail I on this commodity? But for because he hath not woo'd me yet ;

Not that I have the power to clutch my

When his fair angels would salute my pairn, But for my hand, as unattempted yet, Like a poor beggar raileth on the rich. Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail And say there is no sin but to be rich: And being rich, my virtue then shall be 595 To say there is no vice but beggary. Since kings break faith upon commodity, Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee. [Exit.

ACT THREE

Scene I. France. The French King's camb. Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married! Gone to swear a peace!

False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends!

Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard; Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again. It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so; I trust I may not trust thee, for thy word Is but the vain breath of a common man: Believe me I do not believe thee, man; I have a king's oath to the contrary. Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frighting

For I am sick and capable of fears, Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears; A woman, naturally born to fears; And though thou now confess thou didst but jest,

With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce, But they will quake and tremble all this day.

What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?

Why dost thou look so sadly on my son? ~ What means that hand upon that breast of thine?

rheum,

Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds? Be these sad signs confirmers of thy word: ? Scene 11 KING IOHN

Then speak again—not all thy former tale, Am bound to under-bear. But this one word, whether thy tale be true. Sal. As true as I believe you think them false

That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O. if thou teach me to believe this sorrow.

Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die:

And let belief and life encounter so

As doth the fury of two desperate men Which in the very meeting fall and die! art thou?

France friend with England; what becomes of me?

Fellow, be gone: I cannot brook thy sight: This news hath made thee a most ugly man. Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done

But spoke the harm that is by others done? Const. Which harm within itself so

As it makes harmful all that speak of it. Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. If thou that bid'st me be content wert grim, and sland'rous to thy mother's womb.

Full of unpleasing blots and sightless stains. Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious, Patch'd with foul moles and eye-offending marks.

I would not care, I then would be content; For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown. But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy. Nature and Fortune join'd to make thee great:

Of Nature's gifts thou mayst with lilies boast,

And with the half-blown rose; but Fortune, O!

She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee: Sh' adulterates hourly with thine uncle

John. And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on

France

To tread down fair respect of sovereignty, And made his majesty the bawd to theirs. France is a bawd to Fortune and King John-

That strumpet Fortune, that usurping John!

Tell me, thou fellow, is not France for- But now in arms you strengthen it with sworn?

Envenom him with words, or get thee gone The grappling vigour and rough frown of And leave those woes alone which I alone

Pardon me, madam, Sal. I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou mayst, thou shalt; I will not go with thee:

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud.

For gnef is proud, and makes his owner stoop.

To me, and to the state of my great grief, 70 Let kings assemble: for my grief's so great That no supporter but the huge firm earth Can hold it up. [Seats herself on the ground.

Here I and sorrows sit: Lewis marry Blanch! O boy, then where Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

> Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis. BLANCH, ELINOR, the BASTARD, AUSTRIA. and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter, and this blessed day

Ever in France shall be kept festival. To solemnize this day the glorious sun Stays in his course and plays the alchemist. Turning with splendour of his precious eye The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold. The yearly course that brings this day about

Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. [Rising] A wicked day, and not a holy day!

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done

That it in golden letters should be set Among the high tides in the calendar? Nay, rather turn this day out of the week, This day of shame, oppression, perjury; Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child

Pray that their burdens may not fall this day,

Lest that their hopes prodigiously cross'd: But on this day let seamen fear no wreck;

No bargains break that are not this day made: This day, all things begun come to ill end,

Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change! K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause

To curse the fair proceedings of this day. Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit

Resembling majesty, which, being touch'd and tried.

Proves valueless; you are forsworn, forsworn;

You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood.

KING JOHN [Act 3

Is cold in amity and painted peace, 105 And our oppression hath made up this league.

Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kungs!

widow cries: Be husband to me, heavens!

Let not the hours of this ungodly day Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset, Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings!

Hear me, O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace! Const. War! war! no peace! Peace is to me a war.

O Lymoges! O Austria! thou dost shame That bloody spoil. Thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward!

Thou little valuant, great in villainy! Thou ever strong upon the stronger side! Thou Fortune's champion that dost never fight

But when her humorous ladyship is by To teach thee safety! Thou art perjur'd

And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,

A ramping fool, to brag and stamp and swear

Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave, Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my

Been sworn my soldier, bidding me depend Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength,

And dost thou now fall over to my foes? Thou wear a lion's hide! Doff it for shame, And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O that a man should speak those words to me!

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life.

recreant limbs.

K. John. We like not this: thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDULPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the Pope.

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven!

To thee, King John, my holy errand is. I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal, And from Pope Innocent the legate here, Do in his name religiously demand

Why thou against the church, our holy So wilfully dost spurn; and force perforce

Keep Stephen Langton, chosen Archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see?

This, in our foresaid holy father's name, 145 Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories

Can task the free breath of a sacred king? Thou canst not, Cardinal, devise a name So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous, To charge me to an answer, as the Pope. Tell him this tale, and from the mouth of England Add thus much more, that no Italian priest Shall tithe or toll in our dominions: But as we under heaven are supreme head. So, under Him that great supremacy, Where we do neign we will alone uphold, Without th' assistance of a mortal hand. So tell the Pope, all reverence set apart

To him and his usurp'd authority. K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this. K. John. Though you and all the kings of Christendom

Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, Dreading the curse that, money may buy out,

And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust, Purchase corrupted pardon of a man, 166 Who in that sale sells pardon from himself-Though you and all the test, so grossly led, juggling witchcraft with revenue This cherish;

Yet I alone, alone do me oppose Against the Pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then by the lawful power that I have

Thou shalt stand curs'd and excommunicate:

And blessed shall he be that doth revolt From his allegiance to an heretic; And meritorious shall that hand be call'd, Canonized, and worshipp'd as a saint, That takes away by any secret course Thy hateful life.

O, lawful let it be Const. Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those That I have room with Rome to curse awhile!

Good father Cardinal, cry thou 'amen' To my keen curses; for without my wrong There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too: when law can do no right,

Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong; Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,

For he that holds his kingdom holds the law;

Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong, How can the law forbid my tongue to curse? Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse.

Scene 1] KING JOHN

Let go the hand of that arch-heretic, And raise the power of France upon his head, Unless he do submit himself to Rome. Eli. Look'st thou pale, France? Do not let go thy hand. Const. Look to that, devil, lest that France repent

And by disjoining hands hell lose a soul. Aust. King Philip, listen to the Cardinal. Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs,

Because-

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them. K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the Cardinal?

Cardinal?

Lew. Bethink you, father; for the differ-

Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome 205 Or the light loss of England for a friend. Forgo the easier.

That's the curse of Rome. Blanch. Const. O Lewis, stand fast! The devil tempts thee here

In likeness of a new untrimmed bride. Blanch. The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,

But from her need.

O, if thou grant my need, Const. Which only lives but by the death of

That need must needs infer this principle-That faith would live again by death of need.

O then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up: Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down! K. John. The King is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O, be 1emov'd from him, and answer well!

Aust. Do so, King Philip; hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet lout.

K. Phi. I am perplex'd and know not what to sav.

Pand. What canst thou say but will perplex thee more,

If thou stand excommunicate and curs'd? K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,

And tell me how you would bestow your-

This royal hand and mine are newly knit, And the conjunction of our inward souls Married in league, coupled and link'd to- Is not amiss when it is truly done;

With all religious strength of sacred vows;

The latest breath that gave the sound of words Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love. Between our kingdoms and our royal selves;

And even before this truce, but new before, No longer than we well could wash our hands,

To clap this royal bargain up of peace, 235 Heaven knows, they were besmear'd and overstain'd

With slaughter's pencil, where revenge did paint

The fearful difference of incensed kings. And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood.

So newly join'd in love, so strong in both, Unyoke this seizure and this kind regreet? Const. What should he say, but as the Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven.

Make such unconstant children of ourselves. As now again to snatch our palm from palm, Unswear faith sworn, and on the marriage-

Of smiling peace to march a bloody host. And make a riot on the gentle brow

Of true sincerity? O, holy sir,

My reverend father, let it not be so! Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose, Some gentle order; and then we shall be blest your pleasure, and continue friends. Pand. All form is formless, order order-

Save what is opposite to England's love. Therefore, to arms! be champion of our church.

Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse-

A mother's curse—on her revolting son. France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue.

A chafed hon by the mortal paw,

A fasting tiger safer by the tooth. Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith;

And like a civil war set'st oath to oath. Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd,

That is, to be the champion of our church. What since thou swor'st is sworn against thyself

And may not be performed by thyself, For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss

And being not done, where doing tends

The truth is then most done not doing it: The better act of purposes mistook

Is to mistake again; though indirect, 275 Yet indirection thereby grows direct, And falsehood falsehood cures, as fire coois

Within the scorched veins of one newburn'd. It is religion that doth make yows kept: But thou hast sworn against religion By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st, And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth

Against an oath; the truth thou art unsure To swear swears only not to be forsworn; Else what a mockery should it be to swear! But thou dost swear only to be forsworn; And most forsworn to keep what thou dost swear.

Therefore thy later vows against thy first Is in thyself rebellion to thyself: And better conquest never caust thou make Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts

Against these giddy loose suggestions; Upon which better part our pray'rs come

If thou vouchsate them. But if not, then know

The peril of our curses light on thee So heavy as thou shalt not shake them off. But in despair die under their black weight Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will't not be Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth o thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding-day? Against the blood that thou hast married What. slaughtered men?

Shall braying trumpets and loud churlish drums.

Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp O husband, hear me! ay, alack, how new Is 'husband' in my mouth !--even for tha name.

Which till this time my tongue did ne'e pronounce.

Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms Against mine uncle.

Const. O, upon my knee, Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee, Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Forethought by heaven!

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love. Wha motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name o wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him tha thee upholds.

His honour. O, thine honour, Lewis, thin honour!

Lew. I muse your Majesty doth seem so cold.

When such profound respects do pull you

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need. England, I will fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty! Eli. O foul revolr of French inconstancy! K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old Time the clock-setter, that bald sexton Time, is it as he will? Well then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood. Fair day, adieu! Which is the side that I must go withal?

I am with both: each army hath a hand. And in their rage. I having hold of both, They whirl asunder and dismember me. 330 Husband, I cannot pray that thou mayst win;

Uncle, I needs must pray that mou mayst lose;

Father, I may not wish the fortune thine; Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive. Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose: 335 Assured loss before the match be play'd.

Lew. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives. there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together. [Exit Bastard. France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath,

A rage whose heat hath this condition That nothing can allay, nothing but blood, shall our feast be kept with The blood, and dearest-valu'd blood, of France.

> K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere out blood shall quench that fire.

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. K. John. No more than he that threats. To arms let's hie! [Exeunt severally.

Scene II. France. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums, excursions. Enter the BASTARD with Austria's head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot;

Some airy devil hovers in the sky And pours down mischief. Austria's head lie there,

While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy. Philip. make up:

Scene III. France. Plains near Angiers. Alarums, excursions, retreat. Enter KING John, Elinor, Arthur, the Bastard. HUBERT, and Lords.

K. John [To Elmon] So shall it be; your Grace shall stay behind,

So strongly guarded. [To Athur] Cousin, look not sad ;

Thy grandam loves thee, and thy uncle will As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O. this will make my mother die with grief!

K. John. [To the Bastard] Cousin, away for England! haste before, And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags Of hoarding abbots; imprisoned angels Set at liberty; the fat ribs of peace Must by the hungry now be fed upon. Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,

When gold and silver becks me to come on. I leave your Highness. Grandam, I will pray,

If ever I remember to be holy. For your fair safety. So, I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin. K. John. Coz, farewell. [Exit Bastard. Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; hark, a word.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,

We owe thee much! Within this wall of flesh

There is a soul counts thee her creditor. And with advantage means to pay thy love: And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished. Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say-But I will fit it with some better time. By heaven, Hubert, I am almost asham'd To say what good respect I have of thee.

I am much bounden to your Hub. Maiestv.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet, But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow. Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say—but let it go: The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day, Attended with the pleasures of the world, 35 Is all too wanton and too full of gawds
To give me audience. If the midnight bell Did with his iron tongue and brazen mouth Sound on into the drowsy race of night;

Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes. Hear me without thine ears, and make reply

Without a tongue, using conceit alone, 50 Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words-

Then, in despite of brooded watchful day, I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts. But, ah, I will not! Yet I love thee well: And, by my troth, I think thou lov'st me well.

Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I'll keep him so That he shall not offend your Majesty.

K. John. Death. Hub. My lord?

K. John. A grave. Hub. He shall not live.

K. John. Enough! I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee. Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee.

Remember. Madam, fare you well: I'll send those powers o'er to your Majesty. Eli. My blessing go with thee!

K. John. [To Arthur] For England, cousin, go; Hubert shall be your man, attend on you Enter CONSTANCE.

Look who comes here! a grave unto a soul:

Holding th' eternal spirit, against her will. In the vile prison of afflicted breath. I prithee, lady, go away with me.

Const. Lo now! now see the issue of your peace!

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! Comfort, gentle Constance!

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress, But that which ends all counsel, true redress-

Death, death: O amiable lovely death! 25 Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness! Arise forth from the couch of lasting night, Thou hate and terror to prosperity.

And I will kiss thy detestable bones, And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty brows, And ring these fingers with thy household worms.

And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,

And be a carrion monster like thyself. Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st.

And buss thee as thy wife. Misery's love, O, come to me!

O fair affliction, peace! 36 K. Phi. Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to crv.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!

Then with a passion would I shake the world.

And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy 40 Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice, Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so. I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine; 45 My name is Constance; I was Geffrev's wife:

Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost. I am not mad-I would to heaven I were ! K. Phi. What can go well, when we have For then 'tis like I should forget myself. O, if I could, what grief should I forget! 50 Preach some philosophy to make me mad, And thou shalt be canoniz'd, Cardinal: For, being not mad, but sensible of grief, My reasonable part produces reason How I may be deliver'd of these woes, And teaches me to kill or hang myself. If I were mad I should forget my son. Or madly think a babe of clouts were he. I am not mad; too well, too well I feel The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses. O. what

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England In the fair multitude of those her hairs! 251 Where but by a chance a silver drop hath fall'n, Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends Do glue themselves in sociable grief. Like true, inseparable, faithful loves, Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs. Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?

I tore them from their bonds, and cried aloud

But now I envy at their liberty. And will again commit them to their bonds. Because my poor child is a prisoner. And, father Cardinal, I have heard you say That we shall see and know our friends in heaven;

If that be true, I shall see my boy again; For since the birth of Cain, the first male child.

To him that did but vesterday suspire. 80 There was not such a gracious creature born.

But now will canker sorrow eat my bud And chase the native beauty from his cheek, And he will look as hollow as a ghost, As dim and meagre as an ague's fit; And so he'll die; and, rising so again,

When I shall meet him in the court of heaven

I shall not know him. Therefore never. never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more. Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of Const. He talks to me that never had a son. K. Phi. You are as fond of grief as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,

Scene 41 KING JOHN

Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me, And he that stands upon a slipp'ry place Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words, Remembers me of all his gracious parts. Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;

Then have I reason to be fond of grief. Fare you well; had you such a loss as I, I could give better comfort than you do. 100 I will not keep this form upon my head, Tearing her hair. When there is such disorder in my wit. O Lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son! My life, my joy, my food, my all the world! My widow-comfort, and my sorrows' cure!

[Exit. K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her. [Exit.

Lew. There's nothing in this world can make me joy.

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man; And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,

That it yields nought but shame and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,

Even in the instant of repair and health, The fit is strongest; evils that take leave On their departure most of all show evil; What have you lost by losing of this day? Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happi-

Pand. If you had won it, certainly you

No, no; when Fortune means to men most good.

She looks upon them with a threat'ning

'Tis strange to think how much King John hath lost

In this which he accounts so clearly won. Are not you griev'd that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lew. As heartily as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.

Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit; For even the breath of what I mean to speak Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub.

Out of the path which shall directly lead Thy foot to England's throne. And therefore mark:

John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins.

The misplac'd John should entertain an hour.

One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest. A sceptre snatch'd with an unruly hand 135 Must be as boisterously maintain'd as If you say ay, the King will not say no. gain'd,

Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up; That John may stand then. Arthur needs must fall :

So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,

May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green you are and fresh in this old world!

John lays you plots; the times conspire with you;

For he that steeps his safety in true blood Shall find but bloody safety and untrue. This act, so evilly borne, shall cool the hearts

Of all his people and freeze up their zeal, 150 That none so small advantage shall step forth

To check his reign but they will cherish it; No natural exhalation in the sky, No scope of nature, no distemper'd day, No common wind, no customed event, 155

But they will pluck away his natural cause And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs, Abortives, presages, and tongues of heaven. Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lew. May be he will not touch young Arthur's life,

But hold himself safe in his prisonment. Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,

If that young Arthur be not gone already, Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts

Of all his people shall revolt from him, 165 And kiss the lips of unacquainted change, And pick strong matter of revolt and wrath Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John. Methinks I see this hurly all on foot;

And, O, what better matter breeds for you Than I have nam'd! The bastard Faulconbridge

Is now in England ransacking the Church, Offending charity; if but a dozen French Were there in arms, they would be as a call To train ten thousand English to their side: Or as a little snow, tumbled about, noble Anon becomes a mountain.

Dauphin. Go with me to the King. 'Tis wonderful What may be wrought out of their discontent, Now that their souls are topful of offence. For England go; I will whet on the King. Lew. Strong reasons makes strong actions. Let us go;

[Exeunt.

ACT FOUR

SCENE I. England, A castle.

Enter HUBERT and Executioners.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and look thou stand

Within the arras. When I strike my foot Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth And bind the boy which you shall find with Fast to the chair. Be heedful; hence, and watch.

1 Exec. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! Fear not you. Exeunt Executioners. Look to't. Young lad, come forth; I have to say with vou.

Enter ARTHUR.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Good morrow, little Prince. Hub. title

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Mercy on me! Methinks no body should be sad but I; Yet, I remember, when I was in France, 14 Young gentlemen would be as sad as night, Only for wantonness. By my christendom, So I were out of prison and kept sheep, I should be as merry as the day is long; And so I would be here but that I doubt My uncle practises more harm to me: He is afraid of me, and I of him. Is it my fault that I was Geffrey's son? No, indeed, is't not; and I would to heaven I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. [Aside] If I talk to him, with his innocent prate

He will awake my mercy, which lies dead; Therefore I will be sudden and dispatch. Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? You look pale to-day;

In sooth, I would you were a little sick, That I might sit all night and watch with

I warrant I love you more than you do me. Hub. [Aside] His words do take possession of my bosom .-

Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper. [Aside] How now, foolish rheum! Turning dispiteous torture out of door! I must be brief, lest resolution drop

Out at mine eyes in tender womanish

Can you not read it? Is it not fair writ? Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect. Must you with hot irons burn out both mine Nay, hear me, Hubert! Drive these men eves?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you? Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache.

I knit my handkerchief about your brows-The best I had, a princess wrought it me-And I did never ask it you again;

And with my hand at midnight held your head;

And, like the watchful minutes to the hour. Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time. Saying 'What lack you?' and 'Where lies your grief?'

Or 'What good love may I perform for you?

Many a poor man's son would have lyen still.

And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you: But you at your sick service had a prince. Nay, you may think my love was craftv

And call it cunning. Do, an if you will, Arth. As little prince, having so great a If heaven be pleas'd that you must use

To be more prince, as may be. You are sad. Why, then you must. Will you put out mine eves.

These eyes that never did nor never shall So much as frown on you?

I have sworn to do it: And with hot irons must I burn them out. Arth. Ah, none but in this iron age would

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot, Approaching near these eyes would drink my tears,

And quench his fiery indignation Even in the matter of mine innocence: Nay, after that, consume away in rust But for containing fire to harm mine eve. Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

An if an angel should have come to me And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,

I would not have believ'd him-no tongue but Hubert's.

Hub. [Stamps] Come forth.

Re-enter Executioners, with cord, irons, etc. Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O. save me. Hubert. save me! My eyes are out

Even with the herce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here. Alas, what need you be so Arth. boist'rous rough?

will not struggle, I will stand stone-still. For heaven sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb; I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word, Nor look upon the iron angrily; Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy, you,

Whatever torment you do put me to. Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

1 Exec. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed. [Exeunt Executioners. Arth. Alas, I then have chid away my friend!

He hath a stern look but a gentle heart. Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Come, boy, prepare yourself. 90 Hub. Arth. Is there no remedy?

None, but to lose your eyes. Hub. Arth. O heaven, that there were but a mote in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair, Any annovance in that precious sense! feeling what small things are Then, boisterous there,

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible. Hub. Is this your promise? Go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues

Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes. Let me not hold my tongue, let me not, Hubert: 100

Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue, So I may keep mine eyes. O, spare mine eyes, Though to no use but still to look on you!

Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy. 105 Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief.

Being create for comfort, to be us'd In undeserved extremes. See else yourself: There is no malice in this burning coal: The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out.

And strew'd repentant ashes on his head. Hub. But with my breath I can revive it,

Arth. An if you do, you will but make it This act is as an ancient tale new told blush

And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert.

Nay, it perchance will sparkle in your eyes, And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight, Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on. All things that you should use to do me wrong

Deny their office; only you do lack That mercy which fierce fire and iron ex- Makes sound opinion sick, and truth

Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live: I will not touch taine eve

For all the treasure that thine uncle owes. With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! All this while

You were disguis'd.

Hub. Peace; no more. Adieu. Your uncle must not know but you are dead:

I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports; And, pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure

That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world.

Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven! I thank you, Hubert. Hub. Silence; no more. Go closely in with me.

Much danger do I undergo for thee.

[Exeunt.

Scene II. England. King John's palace. Enter King John, Pembroke, Salisbury. and other Lords.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,

And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eves. Pem. This once again, but that your Highness pleas'd.

Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before.

And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off,

The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt: Fresh expectation troubled not the land With any long'd-for change or better state. Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp. To guard a title that was rich before, To gild refined gold, to paint the hly, To throw a perfume on the violet, To smooth the ice, or add another hue Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light To seek the beauteous eve of heaven to garnish.

Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done, And, in the last repeating, troublesome, Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this the antique and well-noted

Of plain old form is much disfigured; And like a shifted wind unto a sail It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about.

Startles and frights consideration, suspected.

For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better

ness:

And oftentimes excusing of a fault Doth make the fault the worse by th' Doth show the mood of a much troubled excuse.

As patches set upon a little breach Discredit more in hiding of the fault

Than did the fault before it was so patch'd. Sal. To this effect, before you were newcrown'd.

We breath'd our counsel; but it pleas'd vour Highness

To overbear it; and we are all well pleas'd Since all and every part of what we would Doth make a stand at what your Highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation

I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;

And more, more strong, when lesser is my fear,

I shall indue you with. Meantime but ask What you would have reform'd that is not well,

And well shall you perceive how willingly 45 I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these,

To sound the purposes of all their hearts, Both for myself and them—but, chief of Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Your safety, for the which myself and them Bend their best studies-heartily request Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint

Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent

To break into this dangerous argument: If what in rest you have in right you hold, Why then your fears-which, as they say, attend

The steps of wrong-should move you to mew up

Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth The rich advantage of good exercise? That the time's enemies may not have this

To grace occasions, let it be our suit That you have bid us ask his liberty; Which for our goods we do no further ask Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,

Counts it your weal he have his liberty. K. John. Let it be so. I do commit his That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks? vouth

To your direction.

Enter HUBERT.

[Aside] Hubert, what news with you?

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed:

They do confound their skill in covetous- He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine: The image of a wicked heinous fault 30 Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his breast.

And I do fearfully believe 'tis done

What we so fear'd he had a charge to do. 75 Sal. The colour or the King doth come and go Between his purpose and his conscience, Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful batties set. His passion is so ripe it needs must break. Pem. And when it breaks, I fear will issue thence The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand.

Good lords, although my will to give is living

The suit which you demand is gone and

He tells us Arthur is deceas'd to-night. 85 Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,

Before the child himself felt he was sick. This must be answer'd either here or hence. K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me? Think you I bear the shears of destiny?

Sal. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame That greatness should so grossly offer it.

So thrive it in your game . and so, farewell. Pem. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury, I'll go with thee

And find th' inheritance of this poor child. His little kingdom of a forced grave. That blood which ow'd the breadth of all this isle

Three foot of it doth hold-bad world the while! This must not be thus borne: this will break out To all our sorrows, and ere long I doubt.

[Exeunt Lords. K. John. They burn in indignation. I repent. There is no sure foundation set on blood. No certain life achiev'd by others' death. 105

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast; where is that blood

So foul a sky clears not without a storm. Pour down thy weather-how goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England. Never such a pow'r

For any foreign preparation Was levied in the body of a land. The copy of your speed is learn'd by them, For when you should be told they do prepare.

The tidings comes that they are all arriv'd. K. John. O. where hath our intelligence been drunk? Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care.

That such an army could be drawn in France.

And she not hear of it?

Mess. Is stopp'd with dust: the first of April Deliver him to safety; and return,

Your noble mother: and as I hear, my lord.

The Lady Constance in a frenzy died Three days before; but this from rumour's tongue

I idly heard—if true or false I know not.

O, make a league with me, till I have pleas'd

My discontented peers! What! mother dead!

How wildly then walks my estate in France!

Under whose conduct came those pow'rs of France

That thou for truth giv'st out are landed here?

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy With these ill tidings.

Enter the BASTARD and PETER of Pomfret.

Now! What says the world To your proceedings? Do not seek to stuff My head with more ill news, for it is full. Bast. But if you be afear'd to hear the worst. Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin, for I was amaz'd

Under the tide; but now I breathe again Aloft the flood, and can give audience To any tongue, speak it of what it will. 140 Bast. How I have sped among the clergy-

The sums I have collected shall express. But as I travell'd hither through the land, I find the people strangely fantasied; Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams,

Not knowing what they fear, but full of And here's a prophet that I brought with

From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I And when they talk of him, they shake

With many hundreds treading on his heels; And whisper one another in the ear;

To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes, That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,

Your Highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst then so?

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him: impuson him; And on that day at noon whereon he savs My liege, her ear I shall yield up my crown let him be hang'd.

120 For I must use thee.

IExit Hubert with Peter.

O my gentie cousin. Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it;

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful Besides, 1 met Lord Bigot and Lord occasion! 125 Salisbury,

With eves as red as new-enkindled fire. And others more, going to seek the grave Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to-night On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go And thrust thyseif into their companies. I have a way to win their loves again; Bing them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out. K. John. Nav. but make haste; the better foot before.

O, let me have no subject enemies When adverse foreigners affright my towns With dreadful pomp of stout invasion! Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels,

And fly like thought from them to me again. Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. K. John. Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman. Exit Bastard.

Go after him; for he perhaps shall need Some messenger betwixt me and the peers; And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit. K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say five moons were seen to-night;

Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about The other four in wondrous motion.

K. John. Five moons!

Hub. Old men and beldams in the streets Do prophesy upon it dangerously; Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths;

their heads,

And he that speaks doth gripe the hearer's And those thy fears might have wrought

Whilst he that hears makes fearful action With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus, The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool, With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;

Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,

Standing on slippers, wnich his nimble haste

Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet, Told of a many thousand warlike French That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent. Another lean unwash'd artificer Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?

Thy hand hath murd'red him. I had a mighty cause To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him. Hub. No had, my lord! Why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings to be attended

By slaves that take their humours for a warrant

To break within the bloody house of life, 210 And on the winking of authority To understand a law; to know the meaning Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it frowns More upon humour than advis'd respect. Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did. K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal Witness against us to damnation! How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds Make deeds ill done! Hadst not thou been

A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd, Quoted and sign'd to do a deed of shame, This murder had not come into my mind; But, taking note of thy abhorr'd aspect. Finding thee fit for bloody villainy, Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger, I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death; And thou, to be endeared to a king, Made it no conscience to destroy a prince. Hub. My lord-

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head or made a pause,

When I spake darkly what I purposed, Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face, As bid me tell my tale in express words, Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off. 235 fears in me.

But thou didst understand me by my signs. And didst in signs again parley with sin; Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent.

And consequently thy rude hand to act 240 The deed which both our tongues held vile to name.

Out of my sight, and never see me more! My nobles leave me; and my state is braved.

Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign pow'rs:

Nay, in the body of this fleshly land. This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath.

Hostility and civil tumult reigns

Between my conscience and my cousin's death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,

I'll make a peace between your soul and Young Arthur is alive. This hand of mine

Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand, Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.

Within this bosom never ent'red yet The dreadful motion of a murderous thought: And you have slander'd nature in my form. Which, howsoever rude exteriorly.

Is yet the cover of a fairer mind Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Doth Arthur live? O. haste thee to the peers,

Throw this report on their incensed rage And make them tame to their obedience! Forgive the comment that my passion made Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind, And foul imaginary eyes of blood Presented thee more hideous than thou art. O, answer not; but to my closet bring The angry lords with all expedient haste. I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exeunt.

Scene III. England. Before the castle. Enter ARTHUR, on the walls.

Arth. The wall is high, and yet will I leap down.

Good ground, be pitiful and hurt me not! There's few or none do know me; if they

This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.

I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it. If I get down and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away. As good to die and go, as die and stay.

[Leaps down.

Scene 3] KING JOHN

O me! my uncle's spirit s in these stones Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones! [Dies

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmundsbury; is our safety, and we must embrace

It is our safety, and we must embrace This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pen. Who brought that letter from the Cardinal?

Sal. The Count Melun, a noble lord of France,

Whose private with me of the Dauphin's love

Is much more general than these lines import.

Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or rather then set fo.ward; for 'twill be

Two long days' journey, lords, or ere we meet. 20

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords!

The King by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The King hath dispossess'd himself of us.

We will not line his thin bestained cloak With our pure honours, nor attend the foot That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks.

Return and tell him so. We know the worst.

Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;

Therefore 'twere reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true—to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison. What is he lies nere?

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

35

She carth had not a hole to hide this deed

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed. Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done, Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.

Big. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,

Found it too precious-princely for a grave. Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,

Or have you read or heard, or could you think?

Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? Could thought, without this object.

Form such another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,

Of murder's arms; this is the bloodiest shame,

The wildest savagery, the viest stroke, That ever wall-ev'd wrath or staring rage

Presented to the tears of soft remoise. 50 Pem. All murders past do stand excus'd in this; and this, so sole and so unmatchable.

And this, so sole and so unmatchable, Shall give a holiness, a purity,

To the yet unbegotten sin of times, And prove a deadly ploodshed but a jest, 55 Exampled by this heinous spectacle.

Basi. It is a damned and a bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand,

If that it be the work of any hand. Sal. If that it be the work of any hand! to We had a kind of light what would ensue. It is the shameful work of Hubeit's hand; The practice and the purpose of the King; From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, 65 And breathing to his breathless excellence The incense of a yow, a holy yow,

Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight,

Nor conversant with ease and idleness, 70 Till I have set a glory to this hand By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Our souls religiously confirm thy Big. words.

Enter HUBERT.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you.

Arthur doth live; the King hath sent for you. 75

Sal. O, he is bold, and blushes not at death!

Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal.

Must I rob the law?

[Drawing his sword. Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours.

I would not have you, lord, forget yourself, Nor tempt the danger of my true defence; Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget 's' Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! Dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life; but yet I dare defend

My innocent life against an emperor. Sal. Thou art a murderer.

.Hub. Do not prove me so.
Yet I am none. Whose tongue soe'er speaks false, 91

Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say. Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil,
Salisbury.

95

If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot, Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame, I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime;

Or I'll so maul you and you toasting-iron That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulconbridge?

Second a villain and a murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well.

I honour'd him, I lov'd him, and will weep My date of life out for his sweet life's loss. Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes, For villainy is not without such rheum; And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocency. 110 Away with me, all you whose souls abhor Th' uncleanly sayours of a slaughter-house;

For I am stifled with this smell of sin.

Big. Away toward Bury, to the Dauphin there!

Pem. There tell the King he may inquire us out. [Exeunt Lords.

Bast. Here's a good world! Knew you of this fair work?

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death, Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir.

Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what: 120
Thou'rt damn'd as black—nay, nothing is so black—

Thou art more deep damn'd than Prince Lucifer;

There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child. Hub. Upon my soul—

Bast. If thou didst but consent 125 To this most cruel act, do but despair; And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread

That ever spider twisted from her womb Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be

To hang thee on; or wouldst thou drown thyself, 230

Put but a little water in a spoon And it shall be as all the ocean, Enough to stifle such a villain up. I do suspect thee very grievously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought,
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay, Let hell want pains enough to torture me! I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms. I am amaz'd, methinks, and lose my way Among the thorns and dangers of this world.

How easy dost thou take all England up! From forth this morsel of dead royalty. The life, the right, and truth of all this realm.

Is fled to heaven; and England now is left To tug and scamble, and to part by th' teeth 746

The unowed interest of proud-swelling state.

Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace; 1530 Now powers from home and discontents at

Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits, As doth a raven on a sick-fall'n beast, The imminent decay of wrested pomp. Now happy he whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child.

And follow me with speed. I'll to the King; A thousand businesses are brief in hand, And heaven itself doth frown upon the land. [Exaunt.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. England. King John's palace.

Enter King John, Pandulph, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand

The circle of my glory.

Pand. [Gives back the crown] Take again From this my hand, as holding of the Pope, Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word; go meet the French;

And from his Holiness use all your power To stop their marches fore we are inflam'd. Our discontented counties do revolt; Our people quarrel with obedience, Swearing allegiance and the love of soul to To stranger blood, to foreign royalty. This inundation of mistemp'red humour Rests by you only to be qualified. Then pause not; for the present time's so

Scene 1] KING IOHN

That present med'cine must be minist'red. O, let it not be said! Foiage, and run 59 Or overthrow incurable ensues tempest up,

Upon your stubborn usage of the Pope: But since you are a gentle convertite. My tongue shall hush again this storm of war

And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.

On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon your oath of service to the Pope. Go I to make the French lay down their Ext. arms.

K. John, Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet Say that before Ascension-day at noon

My crown I should give off? Even so I have.

I did suppose it should be on constraint; But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds out

But Dover Castle. London hath receiv'd, Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his owers.

Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone To offer service to your enemy; And wild amazement hurries up and down The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again

After they heard young Arthur was alive? Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets.

An empty casket, where the jewel of life 40 By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.

he knew. But wherefore do you droop? Why look you sad?

Be great in act, as you have been in thought:

Let not the world see fear and sad distrust Govern the motion of a kingly eye. Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire; Threaten the threat'ner, and outface the

Of bragging horror; so shall inferior eyes, That borrow their behaviours from the great. Grow great by your example and put on The dauntless spirit of resolution. Away, and glister like the god of war When he intendeth to become the field; 55 Show boldness and aspiring confidence. What, shall they seek the lion in his den, And fright him there, and make him tremble there?

16 To meet displeasure farther from the doors Pand. It was my breath that blew this And grapple with him ere he come so nigh. K. John. The legate of the Pope hath been with me.

And I have made a happy peace with him; And he hath premis'd to dismiss the powers Led by the Dauphin.

Basi. O inglorious league! Shall we, upon the footing of our land, Send tair-play orders, and make compromise.

Insinuation, parley, and base truce, To arms invasive? Shall a beardless boy, A cock'red silken wanton, brave our fields And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil, Mocking the air with colours idly spread, And find no check? Let us, my hege, to

Perchance the Cardinal cannot make your peace;

Or, if he do, let it at least be said They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time. Bast. Away, then, with good courage!

Yet, I know Our party may well meet a prouder foe. Exeunt.

Scene II. England. The Dauthin's camp at Saint Edmundsbury.

Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, PEMBROKE, BIGOT, and Soldiers.

Lew. My Lord Melun, let this be copied out

And keep it safe for our remembrance; Return the precedent to these lords again, That, having our fair order written down, Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes,

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught May know wherefore we took the sacrament,

> And keep our faiths firm and inviolable. Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be bicken.

> And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear A voluntary zeal and an unurg'd faith To your proceedings; yet, believe me, Prince,

> I am not glad that such a sore of time Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt, And heal the inveterate canker of one wound

> By making many. O, it grieves my soul 15 That I must draw this metal from my side To be a widow-maker! O, and there Where honourable rescur and defence Cries out upon the name of Salisbury But such is the infection of the time That, for the health and physic of our right, We cannot deal but with the very hand Of stern injustice and confused wrong.

KING JOHN [Act 5

And is't not pity, O my grieved finends! 'That we, the sons and children of this isle, 25 Were born to see so sad an hour as this; Wherein we step after a stranger-march Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up Her enemies' ranks—I must withdraw and weep

Upon the spot of this enforced cause— 30 To grace the gentry of a land remote And follow unacquainted colours here? What, here? O nation, that thou couldst remove!

That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about,

Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself 35

And grapple thee unto a pagan shore, Where these two Christian armies might combine

The blood of malice in a vein of league, And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

Lew. A noble temper dost thou show in this;

And great affections wrestling in thy bosom Doth make an earthquake of nobility.

O, what a noble combat hast thou fought Between compulsion and a brave respect! Let me wipe off this honourable dew 45 That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. My heart hath melted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation;

But this effection of such many drops.

But this effusion of such manly drops, This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul.

Startles mine eyes and makes me more amaz'd

Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury, And with a great heart heave away this storm:

Commend these waters to those baby eyes
That never saw the giant world enrag'd,
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Full of warm blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep 60

Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Lewis himself. So, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter PANDULPH.

And even there, methinks, an angel spake: Look where the holy legate comes apace, 65 To give us warrant from the hand of heaven

And on our actions set the name of right With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France! The next is this: King John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in, 70 That so stood out against the holy church, The great metropolis and see of Rome.

Therefore thy threat'ning colours now wind up

And tame the savage spirit of wild war, That, like a lion fostered up at hand, 75 It may lie gently at the foot of peace And be no further harmful than in show.

Lew. Your Grace shall pardon me, I will not back:

I am too high-born to be propertied,
To be a scondary at control,
Or useful serving-man and instrument
To any sovereign state throughout the world.

Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars

Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself And brought in matter that should feed this fire;

And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out With that same weak wind which enkindled it.

You taught me how to know the face of right,

Acquainted me with interest to this land, Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart; And come ye now to tell me John hath made

His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?

I, by the honour of my marriage-bed, After young Arthur, claim this land for mine; And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?

Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,

What men provided, what munition sent, To underprop this action? Is't not I That undergo this charge? Who else but I, And such as to my claim are liable, for Sweat in this business and maintain this war?

Have I not heard these islanders shout out 'Vive le roi!' as I have bank'd their towns?

Have I not here the best cards for the game To win this easy match, play'd for a crown? And shall I now give o'er the yielded set? No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this work.

Lew. Outside or inside, I will not return Till my attempt so much be glorified As to my ample hope was promised Before I drew this gallant head of war, And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world To outlook conquest, and to win renown 115 Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sounds.

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the BASTARD, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world.

Let me have audience: I am sent to speak. Strike up the drums; and let the tengue My holy lord of Milan, from the King 1.0 I come, to learn how you have dealt for him: And, as you answer, I do know the scope And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilfulopposite.

And will not temporize with my entreaties; He flatly says he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,

The youth says well. Now hear our English King;

For thus his royalty doth speak n me. He is prepar'd, and reason too he should. 130 This apish and unmannerly approach,

This harness'd masque and unadvised revel. This unhair'd sauciness and boyish troops, The King doth smile at; and is well prepar'd

To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms.

From out the circle of his territories. That hand which had the strength, even at your door, To cudgel you and make you take the hatch. To dive like buckets in concealed wells, To crouch in litter of your stable planks, 140

To he like pawns lock'd up in chests and trunks, To hug with swine, to seek sweet safety

In vaults and prisons, and to thrill and shake

Even at the crying of your nation's crow, Thinking this voice an armed Englishman— Shall that victorious hand be feebled here That in your chambers gave you chastisement?

No. Know the gallant monarch is in arms And like an eagle o'er his acry tow'rs To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts, You bloody Neroes, ripping up the womb Of your dear mother England, blush for shame;

For your own ladies and pale-visag'd maids, Like Amazons, come tripping after drums, Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change, Their needles to lances, and their gentle hearts

To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;

We grant thou canst outscold us. Fare thee well; We hold our time too precious to be spent

With such a brabbler. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No. I will speak. We will attend to neither. Lew.

of war,

Plead for our interest and our being here. Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry out :

And so shall you, being beaten. Do but start

An echo with the clamour of thy drum, And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd

That shall reverberate all as loud as thine: Sound but another, and another shall, 171 As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder; for at hand-

Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need-

Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this

To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lew. Strike up our drums to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt. Exeunt.

Scene III. England. The field of battle. Alarums. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O. tell me, Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear. How fares your Majesty?

K. John. This fever that hath troubled me so long

Lies heavy on me. O, my heart is sick! Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,

Desires your Majesty to leave the field And send him word by me which way you

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply

That was expected by the Dauphin here 10 Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin Sands:

This news was brought to Richard but even now.

The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ay me, this tyrant fever burns me up

And will not let me welcome this good news. Set on toward Swinstead: to my litter straight; Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt. Scene IV. England. Another part of the battlefield.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and Bigot.
Sal. I did not think the King so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French;

If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,

In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. 5
Pem. They say King John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter MELUN wounded.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Meiun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold:

Unthread the rude eye of rebellion,
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out King John, and fall before his feet;
For if the French be lords of this loud day.

He means to recompense the pains you take By cutting off your heads. Thus hath he

And I with him, and many moe with me, Upon the altar at Saint Edmundsbury; Even on that altar where we swore to you Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? May this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view, Retaining but a quantity of life, Which bleeds away even as a form of wax Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire? What in the world should make me now deceive,

Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?

I say again, if Lewis do win the day, 30 He is forsworn if e'er those eyes of yours Behold another day break in the east; But even this night, whose black contagious breath

Already smokes about the burning crest Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun, 35 Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire.

Paying the fine of rated treachery
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,

If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
Commend me to one Hubert, with your king:

The love of him—and this respect besides, For that my grandsire was an Englishman—Awakes my conscience to confess all this. In lieu whereof, I piay you, bear me hence From forth the noise and rumour of the field,

Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts

In peace, and part this body and my soul

With contemplation and uevout desires. Sal. We do believe thee; and beshrew

my soul
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which

We will untread the steps of damned flight, And like a bated and retired flood, Leaving our rankness and irregular course, Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,

And calmly run on in obedience
Even to our ocean, to our great King John.
My arm shall give thee help to bear thee
hence:

For I do see the cruel pangs of death Right in thine eye. Away, my friends!

New flight, 60
And happy newness, that intends old right.
[Exeunt, leading off Melun.

Scene V. England. The French camp.

Enter LEWIS and his Tiain.

Lew. The sun of heaven, methought, was loath to set, But stay'd and made the western welkin blush,

When English measure backward their own ground

In faint retire. O, bravely came we off, When with a volley of our needless shot, 5 After such bloody toil, we bid good night; After such bloody toil, we bid good night; Last in the field and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?

Lew. Here; what news?

Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English lords

By his persuasion are again fall'n off,

And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,

Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin Sands.

Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin Sands.

Lew. Ah, foul shrewd news! Beshrew thy very heart!

I did not think to be so sad to-night 15
As this hath made me. Who was he that said

King John did fly an hour or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary pow'rs?
Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

KING JOHN Scene 5]

Lew. Well; keep good quarter and good care to-night;

The day shall not be up so soon as I To try the fair adventure of to-morrow.

Scene VI. An open place near Swinstead And they are all about his Majesty. Abbev.

Enter the BASTARD and HUBERT, severally.

Hub. Who's there? Speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Bast. A friend. What art thou? Of the part of England. Hub.

Bast. Whither dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee? Why may I not demand

Of thine affairs as well as thou of mine? 5 Bast. Hubert, I think.

Thou hast a perfect thought.

I will upon all hazards well believe Thou art my friend that know'st my tongue so well.

Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt. And if thou please, Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think

I come one way of the Plantagenets. Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou and eyeless night

Brave soldier. Have done me shame. pardon me

That any accent breaking from thy tongue Should scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, here walk I in the black brow of night

To find you out.

Bast. Brief, then: and what's the news? Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night.

Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible. 20 Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill

I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The King, I fear, is poison'd by a

I left him almost speechless and broke out

To acquaint you with this evil, that you might The better arm you to the sudden time

Than if you had at leisure known of this. Bast. How did he take it; who did taste to him? Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved Confound themselves.

vıllain. Whose bowels suddenly burst out. The

Yet speaks, and peradventure may recover. Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his Maiesty?

Hab. Why, know you not? The lords are all come back.

And brought Prince Henry in their company:

[Exeunt. At whose request the King hath pardon'd them.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven. And tempt us not to bear above our power!

I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this Passing these flats, are taken by the tide-

These Lincoln Washes have devoured them; Myself, well-mounted, hardly have escap'd. Away, before! conduct me to the King; I doubt he will be dead or ere I come.

[Exeunt.

Scene VII. The orchard at Swinstead Abbey. Enter PRINCE HENRY, SALISBURY, and BIGOT. P. Hen. It is too late; the life of all his bood Is touch'd corruptibly, and his pure brain, Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house. Doth by the idle comments that it makes Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His Highness yet doth speak, and holds belief

That, being brought into the open air, It would allay the burning quality Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.

Doth he still rage? [Exit Bigot. Pem. He is more patient Than when you left him; even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! Fierce extremes

In their continuance will not feel themselves.

Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts, Leaves them invisible, and his siege is now Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds With many legions of strange fantasies,

Which, in their throng and press to that last hold.

'Tis strange that death should sing.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death.

And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, Prince; for you My hege! my loid! But now a king-now are born 25

To set a form upon that indigest

Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude. Re-enter Bigot and Attendants, who bing in King John in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;

It would not out at windows nor at doors There is so hot a summer in my bosoin That all my bowels crumble up to dust. I am a scubbled form drawn with a pen Upon a parchment, and against this file Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your Majesty? K. John. Poison'd-ill-fare! Dead, forsook, cast off; And none of you will bid the winter come To thrust his icy fingers in my maw.

Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course

Through my buir'd bosom, nor entreat the north

To make his bleak winds kiss my parched

And comfort me with cold. I do not ask you much:

I beg cold comfort: and you are so strait And so ingrateful you deny me that.

P. Hen. O that there were some virtue in my tears,

That might relieve you!

The salt in them is hot. K. John. Within me is a hell; and there the poison Is as a fiend confin'd to tyrannize On unreprievable condemned blood.

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion

And spleen of speed to see your Majesty! 50 K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eve!

The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burnt,

And all the shrouds wherewith my life should sail

Are turned to one thread, one little hair; My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, Which holds but till thy news be uttered; And then all this thou seest is but a clod And module of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward.

Where God He knows how we shall answer him;

For in a night the best part of my pow'r, As I upon advantage did remove, Were in the Washes all unwarily Devoured by the unexpected flood.

[The King dies. Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.

What surety of the world, what hope, what stay.

When this was now a king, and now is clay?

Basi. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind

To do the office for thee of revenge.

And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven.

As it on earth hath been thy servant still. Now, now, you stars that move in your night spheres,

Where be your pow'rs? Show now your mended faiths.

And instantly return with me again To push destruction and perpetual shame Out of the weak door of our fainting land. Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;

The Dauphin rages at our very heels. Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we The Cardinal Pandulph is within at rest. Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin, And brings from him such offers of our peace As we with honour and respect may take, 85 With purpose piesently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it when he Ourselves well sinewed to our defence. Sal. Nay, 'tis in a manner done already; For many carriages he hath dispatch'd 90 To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel

To the disposing of the Cardinal; With whom yourself, myself, and other lords. If you think meet, this afternoon will post To consummate this business happily. Bast. Let it be so. And you, my noble Prince, With other princes that may best be spar'd. Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be interr'd:

For so he will'd it.

Thither shall it, then; 100 Bast. And happily may your sweet self put on The lineal state and glory of the land! To whom, with all submission, on my knee I do bequeath my faithful services And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we

To rest without a spot for evermore.

P. Hen. I have a kind soul that would give you thanks, And knows not how to do it but with tears. Scene 7] KING JOHN

Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.
This England never did, nor never shall, Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror, But when it first did help to wound itself.

But when it first did help to wound itself.

Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them. Nought shall make us rue,
If England to itself do rest but true.

[Exeunt.

THE SCENE: England and Wales.

ACT ONE

Scene I. London. The ralace.

Enter King Richard, John of Gaunt, with other Nobles and Attendants.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honoured Lancaster,

Hast thou, according to thy oath and band, Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bola son,

Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal, Which then our leisure would not let us hear, Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him

If he appeal the Duke on ancient malice, Or worthily, as a good subject should, On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument.

On some apparent danger seen in him Aim'd at vour Highness-no inveterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence: face to face

And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will

The accuser and the accused freely speak. High-stomach'd are they both and full of Once more, the more to aggravate the

In rage, deaf as the sea, hasty as fire,

Enter BOLINGBROKE and MOWBRAY.

Boling, Many years of happy days befall My gracious sovereign, my most loving hege!

Mow. Each day still better other's happiness

Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,

Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both; yet one but flatters us, As well appeareth by the cause you come; Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.

Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbiay?

Boling. First-heaven be the record to my speech! In the devotion of a subject's love, Tend'ring the precious safety of my prince, And free from other misbegotten hate, Come I appellant to this princely presence. Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee, And mark my greeting well; for what I speak

My body shall make good upon this earth, Or my divine soul answer it in heaven-Thou art a traitor and a miscreant,

Too good to be so, and too bad to live, 40 Since the more fair and crystal is the sky, The ugher seem the clouds that in it fly. note.

446

With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy In name of lendings for your higginess. thuoat:

And wish-so please my sovereign-ere I move,

What my tongue speaks, my right drawn sword may prove.

Mow. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal.

'Tis not the trial of a woman's war.

The bitter clamour of two eager tongues, Can arbitiate this cause betwixt us twain; The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast As to be hush'd and nought at all to say. First, the fair reverence of your Highness curos me

From giving reins and spurs to my free speech:

Which else would post until it had return'd These terms of treason doubled down his throat.

Setting aside his high blood's royalty, And let him be no kinsman to my liege, I do defy him, and I spit at him, Call him a slanderous coward and a villain; Which to maintain, I would allow him odds And meet him, were I tied to run afoot Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps, Or any other ground inhabitable Where ever Englishman durst set his foot. Meantime let this defend my loyalty-

By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie. Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage,

Disclaiming here the kindred of the King; And lay aside my high blood's royalty, 71 Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except.

If guilty dread have left thee so much strength

As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop.

By that and all the rites of knighthood else Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,

What I have spoke or thou canst worse devise.

Mow. I take it up: and by that sword I swear

Which gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder

I'll answer thee in any fair degree Or chivalrous design of knightly trial; And when I mount, alive may I not light

If I be traitor or unjustly fight! K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?

It must be great that can inherit us So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boling. Look what I speak, my life shall prove it true-

That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles soldiers.

The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments

Like a false traitor and injurious villain. Besides, I say and will in battle prove-Or here, or elsewhere to the furthest veige That ever was survey'd by English eye-That all the treasons for these eighteen years Complotted and contrived in this land Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring. Further I say, and further will maintain

Upon his bad life to make all this good, That he did plot the Duke of Gloucester's death.

Suggest his soon-believing adversaries. And consequently, like a traitor coward, Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:

Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries, Even from the tongueless caverns of the

To me for justice and rough chastisement; And, by the glorious worth of my descent, This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!

Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to

Mow. O, let my sovereign turn away his face

And bid his ears a little while be deaf, Till I have told this slander of his blood How God and good men hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears. Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir

As he is but my father's brother's son, Now by my sceptre's awe I make a vow, Such neighbour nearness to our sacred bland

Should nothing privilege him nor partialize The unstooping firmness of my upright soul He is our subject, Mowbray; so art thou: Free speech and fearless I to thee allow.

Mow. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart.

Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest.

Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais Disbuts'd I duly to his Highness' soldiers; The other part reserv'd I by consent, For that my sovereign liege was in my del-t Upon remainder of a dear account Since last I went to France to fetch his queen:

Now swallow down that lie. For Gloucester's death-

I slew him not, but to my own disgrace Neglected my sworn duty in that case. For you, my noble Lord of Lancaster, 135 The honourable father to my foe. Once did I lay an ambush for your life, A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul; But ere I last receiv'd the sacrament I did confess it, and exactly begg'd Your Grace's pardon; and I hope I had it. This is my fault. As for the rest appeal'd, It issues from the rancour of a villain, A recreant and most degenerate tiaitoi; Which in myself I boldly will defend, And interchangeably hurl down my gage Upon this overweening traitor's foot To prove myself a loyal gentleman Even in the best blood chamber'd in his hosom.

In haste whereof, most heartily I pray 150 Your Highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me;

Let's purge this choler without letting blood-

This we prescribe, though no physician; Deep malice makes too deep incision. Forget, forgive; conclude and be agreed: Our doctors say this is no month to bleed. Good uncle, let this end where it begun; We'll calm the Duke of Norfolk, you your

Mow. Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot;

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:

The one my duty owes; but my fair name, Despite of death, that lives upon my grave To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.

I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffl'd here; Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd

The which no balm can cure but his heartblood

Which breath'd this poison.

Rage must be withstood: K. Rich. Give me his gage—lions make leopards tame.

Mow. Yea, Dut my shame, Take but my shame, My d Yea, but not change his spots. And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord, The purest treasure mortal times afford Is spotless reputation; that away Men are but gilded loam or painted clay.

Scene II. London. The Duke of Lancaster's balace.

Enter John of Gaunt with the Duchess of GLOUCESTER.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Woodstock's blood

Doth more solicit me than your exclaims To stir against the butchers of his life! But since correction lieth in those hands Which made the fault that we cannot correct.

Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven: Who, when they see the hours ripe on earth,

Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads. Duch. Finds biotherhood in thee no sharper spur?

Hath love in thy old blood no living fire? Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art

Were as seven vials of his sacred blood. Or seven fair branches springing from one course,

Some of those branches by the Descinies With her companion, Grief, must end her

But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloucester,

One vial full of Edward's sacred blood, One flourishing branch of his most royal root.

Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt; Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,

By envy's hand and murder's bloody axe Ah, Gaunt, his blood was thine! That bed, that womb,

That mettle, that self mould, that fashion'd thee.

Made him a man; and though thou livest and breathest.

Yet art thou slain in him. Thou dost consent

In some large measure to thy father's death In that thou seest thy wretched brother

Who was the model of thy father's life. Call it not patience, Gaunt-it is despair; In suff'ring thus thy brother to be slaught'red.

Thou showest the naked pathway to thy

His deputy anointed in His sight,

Hath caus'd his death; the which if wrongfully,

Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift 40 An angry arm against His minister.

Duch. Where then, alas, may I complain myself?

Gaunt. To God, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.

Thou goest to Coventry, there to behold 45 Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight.

O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,

That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast!

Or, if misfortune miss the first career. Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom 50 That they may break his foaming courser's back

And throw the rider headlong in the lists, A caitiff recreant to my cousin Hereford! Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometimes Speak truly on thy knighthood and thy brother's wife,

As much good stay with thee as go with me! Duch. Yet one word more-grief boundeth where it falls.

Not with the empty hollowness, but weight. I take my leave before I have begun, For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done. Commend me to thy brother, Edmund York.

Lo, this is all—nay, yet depart not so; Though this be all, do not so quickly go: I shall remember more. Bid him-ah, what ?-

With all good speed at Plashy visit me. Alack, and what shall good old York there

But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls. Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones? And what hear there for welcome but my groans?

Therefore commend me; let him not come there

To seek out sorrow that dwells every where. Desolate, desolate, will I hence and die; The last leave of thee takes my weeping [Exeunt.

SCENT III. The lists at Coventry.

Enter the LORD MARSHAL and the DUKE of Aumerle.

Mar. My Lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter in.

Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, sprightfully and bold.

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and stay 5 For nothing but his Majesty's approach.

The trumpets sound, and the KING enters with his nobles, GAUNT, BUSHY, BAGOT, GREEN, and Others. When they are set, enter MOWBRAY, DUKE OF NORFOLK, in arms, defendant, and a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of vonder champion

The cause of his arrival here in arms: Ask him his name; and orderly proceed

To swear him in the justice of his cause. 10 Mar. In God's name and the King's, say who thou ait.

And why thou comest thus knightly clad in arms:

Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel.

oath:

Mow. My name is Tnomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk;

Who hither come engaged by my oath-Which God defend a knight should violate!-

Both to defend my loyalty and truth To God, my King, and my succeeding issue, Against the Duke of Hereford that appeals

And, by the grace of God and this mine arm,

To prove him, in defending of myself, A fraitor to my God, my King, and me. And as I truly fight, defend me heaven! 25

The trumbets sound. Enter BOLINGBROKE. DUKE OF HEREFORD. appellant. irmour, and a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms. Both who he is and why he cometh hither Tnus plated in habiliments of war: And formally, according to our law, Depose him in the justice of his cause. 30 Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither

Before King Richard in his royal lists? Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?

Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Am 1; who ready here do stand in arms To prove, by God's grace and my body's valour,

In lists on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,

That he is a traitor, foul and dangerous, To God of heaven, King Richard, and to

And as I truly fight, defend me heaven! Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold

Or daring-hardy as to touch the lists, Except the Marshal and such officers Appointed to direct these fair designs. Boling. Lord Marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,

And bow my knee before his Majesty; For Mowbray and myself are like two

That vow a long and weary pilgrimage. Then let us take a ceremonlous leave And loving farewell of our several friends. Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your Highness,

And craves to kiss your hand and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend and fold him in our arms.

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right, 55 So be thy fortune in this royal fight!

As so defend thee heaven and thy valour! Farevell my blood; which if to-day thou shed, Lament we may, but nor revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. As confident as is the falcon's flight Agairst a bird, do I with Mowbray fight. My loving lord, I take my leave of you: Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle: Not sick, although I have to do with death. But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.

Lo. as at English feasts, so I regreet The daintiest last, to make the end most

O thou, the earthly auchor of my blood. Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate, 70 Doth with a twofold vigour lift me un To reach at victory above my head,

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers, And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat 75

And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt.

Even in the lusty haviour of his son. Gainit. God in thy good cause make thee prosperous!

Be swift like lightning in the execution. And let thy blows, doubly redoubled, Fall like amazing thunder on the casque Of thy adverse pernicious enemy.

Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant, and live.

Boling. Mine innocence and Saint George to thrive!

Mow. However God or fortune cast my lot.

There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne.

A loyal, just, and upright gentleman. Never did captive with a freer heart Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement, 10 More than my dancing soul doth celebrate This feast of battle with mine adversary.

Most mighty liege, and my companion peers,

Take from my mouth the wish of happy vears.

As gentle and as jocund as to jest Go I to fight: truth hath a quiet breast. K. Rich. Farewell, my lord, securely I espy Virtue with valour couched in thine eye. Order the trial, Marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry amen.

Mar. [To an Officer] Go bear this lance to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby.

Stands here for God, his sovereign, an himself.

On pain to be found false and recreant. To prove the Duke of Norfolk, Thoma-Mowbray,

A traitor to his God, his King, and him; And darss him to set forward to the fight 2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolk,

On pain to be found false and recreant. Both to defend himself, and to approve Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby To God, his sovereign, and to him di Courageously and with a free desire Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound trumpets; and set forward combatants. [A charge sounded Stay, the King hath thrown his warde

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmetand their spears.

And both return back to their chairs again Withdraw with us; and let the trumpet: sound

While we return these dukes what we decree.

A long flourish, while the King consults his Council.

Draw near,

And list what with our council we have done.

For that our kindgom's earth should not be soil'd

With that dear blood which it hath fostered And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' sword;

And for we think the eagle-winged pride Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts. With rival-hating envy, set on you To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle

Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep:

Which so rous'd up with boist'rous un- Lay on our royal sword your banish'd tun'd drums.

With harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadful And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,

Might from our quiet confines fright fair

And make us wade even in our kindred's blood-

Therefore we banish you our territories. You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life, 110 Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields

Shall not regreet our fair dominions,

But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done. This must my comfort be-

That sun that warms you here shall shine on me.

And those his golden beams to you here lent Shall point on me and gild my banishment. K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom. Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:

The sly slow hours shall not determinate 150 The dateless limit of thy dear exile; The hopeless word of 'never to return' Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

Mow. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege.

And all unlook'd for from your Highness' mouth.

A dearei merit, not so deep a maim As to be cast forth in the common air, Have I deserved at your Highness' hands. The language I have learnt these forty vears.

My native English, now I must forgo; 160 And now my tongue's use is to me no more Than an unstringed viol or a harp: Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up Or, being open, put into his hands That knows no touch to tune the harmony. Within my mouth you have engaol'd my tongue.

Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips: And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance Is made my gaoler to attend on me. I am too old to fawn upon a nurse, 170

Too far in years to be a pupil now. What is thy sentence, then, but speechless death.

Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath

K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate;

After our sentence plaining comes too late. Mow. Then thus I turn me from my country's light,

To dwell in solemn shades of endless night. K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.

hands;

Swear by the duty that you owe to God, 180 Our part therein we banish with yourselves, To keep the oath that we administer:

You never shall, so help you truth and God. Embrace each other's love in banishment:

traitor,

My name be blotted from the book of life, And I from heaven banish'd as from hence! But what thou art, God, thou, and I, do know: 201

And all too soon, I fear, the King shall rue. Farewell, my liege. Now no way can I stray: Save back to England, all the world's my way. Exu.

K. Rich. Un 'e, even in the glasses of thine eyes

I see thy grieved heart. Thy sad aspect Hath from the number of his banish'd years Pluck'd four away. [To Bolingbroke] Six frozen winters spent,

Return with welcome home from banish-

Boling. How long a time lies in one little

Four lagging winters and four wanton springs

End in a word: such is the breath of Kings. Gaunt. I thank my liege that in regard

He shortens four years of my son's exile; But little vantage shall I reap thereby, For ere the six years that he hath to spend

Can change their moons and bring their times about,

My oil-dried lamp and time-bewasted light Shall be extinct with age and endless night; My inch of taper will be burnt and done, And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live. Gaunt. But not a minute, King, that thou canst give: Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow

And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow;

Thou canst help time to furrow me with age, But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage; 230 Thy word is current with him for my death, But dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice.

Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave.

Gaunt. Things sweet to taste prove in digestion sour.

You urg'd me as a judge; but I had rather You would have bid me argue like a father. O, had it been a stranger, not my child. To smooth his fault I should have been more mild.

A partial slander sought I to avoid, And in the sentence my own life destroy'd. Alas, I look'd when some of you should say I was too strict to make mine own away; The clogging burden of a guilty soul. 200 I was too strict to make mine own away; Mow. No, Bolingbroke; if ever I were But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue Against my will to do myself this wrong. K. Rich, Cousin, farewell: and, uncle. bid him so.

Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

[Flourish. Exit King with train. Aum. Cousin, farewell; what presence must not know,

From where you do remain let paper show. Mar. My lord, no leave take I, for I will

As far as land will let me by your side. Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words.

That thou returnest no greeting to thy friends?

Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you.

When the tongue's office should be prodigal To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart.

Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.

Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

Gaunt. What is six winters? They are quickly gone. Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten.

Gaunt. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure.

Boling. My heart will sigh when I miscall it so.

Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage. Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary Esteem as foil wherein thou art to set The precious jewel of thy home return.

Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make

Will but remember me what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love. Must I not serve a long apprenticehood To foreign passages; and in the end,

Having my freedom, boast of nothing else But that I was a journeyman to grief? Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven visits Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Teach thy necessity to reason thus:

There is no virtue like necessity.

Think not the King and banish thee,
But thou the King. Wee doth the heavier

Where it perceives it is but faintly borne Go, say I sent thee forth to purchase honour.

And not the King exil'd thee; or suppose Devouring postlence hangs in our air And thou art flying to a fresher clime. 285 Look what thy soul holds dear, imagine it To lie that way thou goest, not whence thou com'st.

SCENE IV. London. The court.

Enter the King, with Bagot and Green, at one door; and the Duke of Aumerle at another.

K. Rich. We did observe. Cousin Aumerle.

How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so.

But to the next high way, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed?

Aum. Faith, none for me; except the north-east wind,

Which then blew bitterly against our faces, Awak'd the sleeping rheum, and so by chance

Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin when you parted with him?

Aum. 'Farewell'

And, for my heart disdained that my tongue Should so profane the word, that taught me craft

To count rfeit oppression of such grief that words seem'd buried in my sorrow's

Marry, would the word 'farewell' have length'ned hours

And added years to his short banishment, He should have had a volume of farewells, But since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt, 20

When time shall call him home from banishment,

Whether our kinsman come to see his triends.

Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green, Observ'd his courtship to the common people;

How he did seem to dive into their hearts With humble and familiar courtesy; What reverence he did throw away on slayes,

Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles 28

And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As 'twere to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;
A brace of draymen bid God speed him well
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With 'Thanks, my countrymen, my loving
friends':

As were our England in reversion his, 35 And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts!

Now for the rebels which stand out in Ireland.

Expedient manage must be made, my liegt, Ere further leisure yield them further means 40

For their advantage and your Highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war;

And, for our coffers, with too great a court And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light,

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm; 45
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. It that come short.

For our affairs in hand. It that come short, Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters:

Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich,

They shall subscribe them for large sums - of gold, 50

And send them after to supply our wants; For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter BUSHY.

Bushy, what news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord, Suddenly taken; and hath sent post-haste To entreat your Majesty to visit him. K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely House.

K. Rich. Now put it, God, in the physician's mind

The lining of his coffers shall make coats To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him. Pray God we may make haste, and come too late l All. Amen.

Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. London. Elv House.

Enter John of Gaunt, sick, with the Duke OF YORK, etc.

Gaunt. Will the King come, that I may breathe my last

In wholesome counsel to his unstaid youth York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear. Gaunt. O. but they say the tongues of dving men Enforce attention like deep harmony. Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain:

For they breathe truth that breathe their words in pain.

He that no more must say is listen'd more Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose;

More are men's ends mark'd than their lives before.

The setting sun, and music at the close, As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last. Writ in remembrance more than things long past.

Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,

My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear. York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds.

As praises, of whose taste the wise are fond. Lascivious metres, to whose venom sound The open ear of youth doth always listen; Report of fashions in proud Italy, Whose manners still our tardy apish nation

Limps after in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanitv-

So it be new, there's no respect how vile-That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears? Then all too late comes counsel to be heard For young hot colts being rag'd do rage Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard.

Direct not him whose way himself will choose.

'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks I am a prophet new inspir'd,

And thus expiring do foretell of him: His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last, For violent fires soon burn out themselves: Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;

To help him to his grave immediately! 60 He tires betimes that spurs too fast betimes ;

With eager feeding food doth choke the feeder:

Light vanity, insatiate cormorant. Consuming means, soon preys upon itself. This royal throne of kings, this scept red isle,

This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars. This other Eden, demi-paradise, This fortress built by Nature for herself Against infection and the hand of war, This happy breed of men, this little world, This precious stone set in the silver sea, 46 Which serves it in the office of a wall. Or as a moat defensive to a house,

Against the envy of less happier lands; This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,

This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings.

Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth,

Renowned for their deeds as far from home. For Christian service and true chivality, As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's Son: This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land.

Dear for her reputation through the world. Is now leas'd out-I die pronouncing it-Like to a tenement or pelting farm. England, bound in with the triumphant sea,

Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege

Of wat'ry Neptune, is now bound in with shame

With inky blots and rotten parchment bonds;

That England, that was wont to conquer others,

Hath made a shameful conquest of itself. Ah, would the scandal vanish with my life. How happy then were my ensuing death I

Enter KING and QUEEN. AUMERLE. BUSHY, GREEN, BAGOT, Ross. and WILLOUGHBY.

York. The King is come; deal mildly with his youth, the more.

Queen. How fares our noble uncle And thou-Lancaster?

K. Rich. What comfort, man? How is't Presuming on an ague's privilege. with aged Gaunt?

Gaunt, O, how that name befits my composition!

Old Gaunt, indeed: and gaunt in being old. Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?

watch'd;

gaunt. The pleasure that some fathers feed upon

Is my strict fast-I mean my children's

And therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt.

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave, Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me, I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee. K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

that die. K. Rich. Thou, now a-dying, sayest thou flatterest me.

sicker be. K. Ruh. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill. Gaunt. Now He that made me knows I see thee ill:

Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill. Thy death-bed is no lesser than thy land 95

Wherein thou liest in reputation sick; And thou, too careless patient as thou art, Commit'st thy anointed body to the cure Of those physicians that first wounded thee: A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown, Whose compass is no bigger than thy head; And yet, incaged in so small a verge,

The waste is no whit lesser than thy land. O, had thy grandsire with a prophet's eye Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons, From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame.

Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd, Which art possess'd now to depose thyself. Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world, It were a shame to let this land by lease; 110 But for thy world enjoying but this land, Is it not more than shame to shame it so? Landlord of England art thou now, not

Thy state of law is bondslave to the law;

K. Rich. A lunatic lean-witted fool, 115 Darest with thy frozen admonition

Make pale our cheek, chasing the royal blood

With fury from his native residence. Now by my seat's right royal majesty, 120 Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son, For sleeping England long time have I This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all Should run thy head from thy unreverent shoulders.

Gaunt. O, spare me not, my brother Edward's son.

For that I was his father Edward's son; That blood already, like the pelican, Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly carous'd.

My brother Gloucester, plain well-meaning soul-

Whom fair befall in heaven mongst happy souls !---

May be a precedent and witness good 130 That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood.

Join with the present sickness that I have: And thy unkindness be like crooked age, To crop at once a too long withered flower. Gaunt. No, no; men living flatter those Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!

These words hereafter thy tormentors be! Convey me to my bed, then to my grave. Gaunt. O. no! thou diest, though I the Love they to live that love and honour have.

> [Exit, borne out by his Attendants. K. Rich. And let them die that age and sullens have;

For both hast thou, and both become the grave. York. I do beseech your Majesty impute his words To wayward sickliness and age in him. He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear As Harry Duke of Hereford, were be here. K. Rich. Right, you say true: as Hereford's love, so his; 145

As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your Majesty.

K. Rich. What says he?

Nay, nothing; all is said. North. His tongue is now a stringless instrument; Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so!

Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe. K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;

His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be. So much for that. Now for our Irish wars We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns,

Which live like venom where no venom else. But only they have privilege to live. And for these great affairs do ask some charge.

Towards our assistance we do seize to us 16 The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stanpossess'd.

York. How long shall I be patient? Ah how long

Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong
Not Gloucester's death, nor Hereford's banishment, 16

Nor Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,

Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke About his marriage, nor my own disgrace, Have ever made me sour my patient cheek Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face. I am the last of noble Edward's sons, 17 Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first.

In war was never lion rag'd more fierce, In peace was never gentle lamb more mild, Than was that young and princely gentle-

His face thou hast, for even so look'd he, Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours. But when he frown'd, it was against the French

And not against his friends. His noble hand Did win what he did spend, and spent not that

Which his triumphant father's hand had

His hands were guilty of no kindred blood, But bloody with the enemies of his kin. O Richard! York is too far gone with grief, Or else he never would compare between— K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?

York. O my liege, Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleas'd Not to be pardoned, am content withal. Seek you to seize and gripe into your hands The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?

Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?

Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true? Did not the one deserve to have an heir? Is not his heir a well-deserving son? Take Hereford's rights away, and take from Time

His charters and his customary rights;

Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;

Be not thyself—for how art thou a king

But by fair sequence and succession?

Now, afore God—God forbid I say true!—

If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,

Call in the letters patents that he hath

By his attorneys-general to sue His livery, and deny his off'red homage, You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,

You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts, And prick my tender patience to those thoughts

Which honour and allegiance cannot think. K. Rich. Think what you will, we seize into our hands

His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

York. I'll not be by the while. My liege, farewell.

What will ensue hereof there's none can tell:

But by bad courses may be understood That their events can never fall out good. IExit.

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire straight;
Bid him repail to us to Ely House
To see this business. To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow.

And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our Uncle York Lord Governor of England;
For he is just, and always lov'd us well.
Come on, our queen; to-morrow must we

Be merry, for our time of stay is short.
[Flourish. Exeunt King, Queen, Bushy,

Aumerle, Green, and Baget.

North. Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.

Ross. And living too; for now his son is Duke.

Willo. Barely in title, not in revenues.

North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence,

Ere't be disburdened with a liberal tongue.

North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more

That speaks thy words again to do thee harm!

Willo. Tends that thou wouldst speak to the Duke of Hereford?

If it be so, out with it boldly, man; Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.

Ross. No good at all that I can do for him;

Unless you call it good to pity him, Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne n him, a royal prince, and many moe

Of noble blood in this decliming land. 240
The King is not himself, but basely led By flatterers; and what they will inform, letely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the King severely prosecute

'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our With eight tall ships, three thousand men heirs.

Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes;

And quite lost their hearts; the nobles hath he fin'd

For ancient quarrels and quite lost their hearts.

Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd.

As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what: But what, a God's name, doth become of this?

North. Wars hath not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,

But basely yielded upon compromise That which his noble ancestors achiev'd with blows.

More hath he spent in peace than they in wars.

Ross. The Earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

Willo. The King's grown bankrupt like a broken man.

North. Reproach and dissolution hangeth over him.

Ross. He hath not money for these Irish

His burdenous taxations notwithstanding, But by the robbing of the banish'd Duke. North. His noble kınsman-most degenerate king!

But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing, Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm: We see the wind sit sore upon our sails, 265 And yet we strike not, but securely perish. Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;

And unavoided is the danger now

For suffering so the causes of our wreck. North. Not so: even through the hollow eves of death

I spy life peering; but I dare not say How near the tidings of our comfort is. Willo. Nav. let us share thy thoughts as thou dost ours. Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumber-

We three are but thyself, and, speaking so.

Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore be bold.

North. Then thus: I have from Le Port Blanc, a bay

In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence

Lord Cobham,

That late broke from the Duke of Exeter, His brother, Archbishop late of Canterbury, Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramston, Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoint—

All these, well furnish'd by the Duke of Britaine. 285 of war.

Are making hither with all due expedience, And shortly mean to touch our northern shore.

Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay

The first departing of the King for Ireland. If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke, Imp out our drooping country's broken wing,

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,

Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptie's gilt.

And make high majesty look like itself, 295 Away with me in post to Ravenspurgh: But if you faint, as fearing to do so,

Stay and be secret, and myself will go. Ross. To horse, to horse! Urge doubts to them that fear.

Willo. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Windsor Castle.

Enter QUEEN, BUSHY, and BAGOT,

Bushy. Madam, your Majesty is too much sad. You promis'd, when you parted with the King.

To lay aside life-harming heaviness And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the King, I did; to please myself

I cannot do it; yet I know no cause Why I should welcome such a guest as grief, Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest As my sweet Richard. Yet again metlinks Some unboin sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb.

Is coming towards me, and my inwaid soul With nothing trembles. At some thing it grieves

More than with parting from my lord the King.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows.

Which shows like grief itself, but is not so; For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears. Divides one thing entire to many objects, Like perspectives which, rightly gaz'd upon, Show nothing but confusion—ey'd awry, Distinguish form. So your sweet Majesty, Looking awry upon your lord's departure, That Harry Duke of Heieford, Rainold Find shapes of grief more than himself to wail;

Which, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows

Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious Queen,

More than your lord's departure weep not -more is not seen; Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye.

imaginary.

Queen. It may be so: but yet my inward Soul

Persuades me it is otherwise. Howe'er it be, I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad As-though, on tlunking, on no thought I think-

Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd

From some forefather grief: mine is not so, For nothing hath begot my something grief,

Or something hath the nothing that I grieve;

'Tis in reversion that I do possess-

But what it is that is not yet known what, I cannot name; 'tis nameless wee, I wor.

Enter GREEN.

Green. God save your Majesty! and well Where nothing lives but crosses, cares, and met, gentlemen. 41 I hope the King is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.

Queen. Why hopest thou so? 'Tis better hope he is:

For his designs crave haste, his haste good retir'd his power

And driven into despair an enemy's hope Who strongly hath set footing in this land.

The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself, And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd 50 At Ravenspurgh.

Now God in heaven forbid! Queen. Green. Ah, madam, 'tis too true; and that is worse,

The Lord Northumberland, his son young Henry Percy,

The Willoughby,

With all their powerful triends, are fled to him.

Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland

And all the rest revolted faction traitors? Green. We have; whereupon the Earl of Worcester

Hath broken his staff, resign'd his stewardship,

And all the household servants fled with him To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to

And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir.

Wnich for things true weeps things Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy;

And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother. 6s Have wee to wee, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Burhy. Despair not, madam. Queen. Who shall hinder me?

I will despair, and be at enmity With cozening hope—he is a flatterer.

A parasite, a keeper-back of death, Who gently would dissolve the bands of life.

Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter YORK.

Green. Here comes the Duke of York. Queen. With signs of war about his aged O, full of careful business are his looks! 75

Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts.

Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth.

Whilst others come to make him lose at home.

Here am I left to underprop his land, Who, weak with age, cannot support myself.

Then wherefore dost thou hope he is not Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made:

Enter a Servingman.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

York. He was—why so go all which way it will!

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are cold

And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side. Sirrah, get thee to Plashy, to my sister Gloucester;

Lords of Ross, Beaumond, and Bid her send me presently a thousand pound.

Hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordslup.

To-day, as I came by, I called there-But I shall grieve you to report the rest. 95

York. What is't, knave? Serv. An hour before I came, the Duchess died.

York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes

Comes rushing on this woeful land at once! I know not what to do. I would to God, 100 So my untruth had not provok'd him to it, The King had cut off my head with my brother's.

Scene 21

What, are there no posts dispatch'd for Ireland?

How shall we do for money for these wars? Come, sister-cousin, I would say-pray, pardon me.

Go. fellow, get thee home, provide some carts.

And bring away the armour that is there.

I should to Plashy too, But time will not permit. All is uneven, And everything is left at six and seven.

[Exeunt York and Queen. Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland. But none returns. For us to levy power Proportionable to the enemy

Is all unpossible. Green. Besides, our nearness to the King in love

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,

Because we ever have been near the King. Green. Well, I will for refuge straight to Bristow Castle.

The Earl of Wiltshire is already there. Bushy. Thither will I with you; for little office

Will the hateful commons perform for us, Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.

Will you go along with us? r40
Bagot. No; I will to Ireland to his Majesty.

Farewell. If heart's presages be not vain, We three here part that ne'er shall meet. He was not so resolv'd when last we spake Bushy. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

KING RICHARD THE SECOND

Green. Alas, poor Duke! the task he undertakes Is numb'ring sands and drinking oceans

dry. Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Farewell at once-for once, for all, and ever.

Bushy. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Gloucestershire.

Enter BOLINGBROKE and NORTHUMBER-LAND, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkelev now?

North. Believe me, noble lord,

I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire. These high wild hills and rough uneven ways Draws out our miles, and makes them wearisome; I'll dispose of you. Gentlemen, go muster And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar.

> Making the hard way sweet and delectable. But I bethink me what a weary way From Ravenspurgh to Cotswold will be Boling. Of much less value is my company

Bushy. Wherein the King stands gener- Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter HARRY PERCY.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy, Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.

Harry, how fares your uncle?

Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the Queen? 25 Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the court, Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd The household of the King.

What was his reason? North. together.

Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor.

But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurgh. To offer service to the Duke of Hereford: And sent me over by Berkeley, to discover What power the Duke of York had levied there;

Then with directions to repair to Ravenspurgh.

Have you forgot the Duke of North. Hereford, boy?

Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,

I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now; this is the Duke.

Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service.

Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young; Wnich elder days shall ripen, and confirm To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure I count myself in nothing else so happy As in a soul rememb'ring my good friends; And as my fortune ripens with thy love, It shall be still thy true love's recompense. My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkeley? And what stir

Keeps good old York there with his men of Percy. There stands the castle, by you tuft of trees.

Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard:

And in it are the Lords of York, Berkeley, and Seymour-None else of name and noble estimate.

Enter Ross and WILLOUGHBY.

North. Here come the Lords of Ross and Willoughby,

Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste. Boling. Welcome, my lords. I wot your love pursues

A banish'd traitor. All my treasury Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd, Shall be your love and labour's recompense. Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.

Willo. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor;

Which, till my infant fortune comes to

Stands for my bounty. But who comes here? Enter BERKELEY.

North. It is my Lord of Berkeley, as I guess.

Berk. My Lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord, my answer is-'to Lancaster '

And I am come to seek that name in England;

And I must find that title in your tongue Before I make reply to aught you say. Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning To raze one title of your honour out.

To you, my lord, I come-what lord you will-

From the most gracious regent of this land. The Duke of York, to know what pricks you on

To take advantage of the absent time. And fright our native peace with self-borne arms.

Enter YORK, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you;

Here comes his Grace in person. My noble uncle! [Kneels.

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,

Whose duty is deceivable and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle !--85 York. Tut, tut!

In an ungracious mouth is but profane. Why have those banish'd and forbidden

But then more 'why?'-why have they dar'd to march

So many miles upon her peaceful bosom, Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war And ostentation of despised arms? Com'st thou because the anointed King is hence ?

Why, foolish boy, the King is left behind, And in my loyal bosom lies his power. Were I but now lord of such hot youth

As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself

Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men.

From forth the ranks of many thousand French.

O, then how quickly should this arm of mine.

Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee And minister correction to thy fault! 105

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault;

On what condition stands it and wherein? York. Even in condition of the worst degree-

In gross rebellion and detested treason.

Thou art a banish'd man, and here ar come

Before the expiration of thy time.

In braving arms against thy sovereign. Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'c Hereford:

But as I come, I come for Lancaster. And, noble uncle, I beseech your Grace 11 Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eve You are my father, for methinks in you I see old Gaunt alive. O, then, my father, Will you permit that I shall stand con demn'd North. The noble Duke hath sworn his coming is

But for his own; and for the right of that We all have strongly sworn to give him aid; And let him never see joy that breaks that oath!

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms.

I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,

Because my power is weak and all ill left: But if I could, by Him that gave me life, 155 I would attach you all and mane you stoop Unto the sovereign mercy of the King; But since I cannot, be it known unto you I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well; Unless you please to enter in the castle, 160 And there repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.

But we must win your Grace to go with us To Bristow Castle, which they say is held By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices, 165 The caterpillars of the commonwealth, Which I have sworn to weed and pluck York. It may be I will go with you; but yet I'll pause,

For I am loath ... break our country's laws. Nor friends nor foes, to me welcome you are. Things past redress are now with me past care. IExeunt.

Scene IV. A camp in Wales.

Enter Earl of Salisbury and a Welsh Captain.

Cap. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten days

And hardly kept our countrymen together, And yet we hear no tidings from the King; Therefore we will disperse ourselves. Farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman;

And I challenge law—attorneys are denied The king reposeth all his confidence in thee.

Farewell. Our countrymen are gone and fled, 145 As well assur'd Richard their King is dead. Exit.

> Sal. Ah, Richard, with the eyes of heavy mind,

I see thy glory "ke a shooting star Fall to the base earth from the firmament! The sun set weeping in the lowly west, Witnessing storms to come, woe, and uniest;

Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes; And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. (Exit.

Scene I. Bolingbroke's camp at Bristol.

From off my hands, here in the view of men I will unfold some causes of your deaths: You have misled a prince, a royal king, A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,

By you unhappied and disfigured clean: 10 You have in manner with your sinful hours Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him: Broke the possession of a roval bed. And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs;

Myself-a prince by fortune of my birth, Near to the King in blood, and near in love

Till you did make him misinterpret me-Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds. Eating the bitter bread of banishment, Whilst you have fed upon my signories, Dispark'd my parks and fell'd my fores woods,

From my own windows torn my household coat.

Than Bolingbroke to England. Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is that heaven will take our souls,

And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd.

[Exeunt Northumberland, and others, with the prisoners.

Scene II. The coast of Wales. A castle in view.

Drums. Flourish and colours. Enter the KING, the BISHOP OF CARLISLE, AUMERLE and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barkloughly Castle call they this at hand?

Aum. Yea, my lord. How brooks your Grace the air

After your late tossing on the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well. I ween for joy

To stand upon my kingdom once again, 5 Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand. Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs.

As a long-parted mother with her child Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meeting.

So weeping-smiling greet I thee, my earth, And do thee favours with my royal hands. Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,

Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense;

But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom. And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way, 15 Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet Which with usurping steps do trample thee:

Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies; And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower.

Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder. Whose double tongue may with a mortal

And not neglected; else, if heaven would, And we will not, heaven's ofter we refuse, The proffered means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss:

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not

That when the searching eye of heaven is hıd.

Behind the globe, that lights the lower world. Then thieves and robbers lange abroad unseen

In murders and in outrage boldly here: But when from under this terrestrial ball He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines And darts his light through every guilty hole.

Then murders, treasons, and detested sins. The cleak of night being pluck'd from off their backs.

Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?

So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,

Who all tills while hath revell'd in the night. Whilst we were wand'ring with the Antipodes,

Shall see us rising in our throne, the east, His treasons will sit blushing in his face, Not able to endure the sight of day, But self-affrighted tremble at his sin. Not all the water in the rough rude sea Can wash the balm off from an anointed Welcome, my lord. How far off lies your power?

Sal. Nor near nor farther off, my gracious lord,

Than this weak arm. Discomfort guides my tongue

And bids me speak of nothing but despair. One day too late, I fear me, noble lord, Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth. O, call back yesterday, bid time return, And thou shalt have twelve thousand

K. Rich. I had forgot myself; am I not King?

Awake, thou conacu majesty! thou sleepest.

Is not the King's name twenty thousand names?

Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes At thy great glory. Look not to the ground. Ye favourites of a king; are we not high? High be our thoughts. I know my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege

Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver hım.

K. Rich. Mine ear is open and my heart prepar'd.

The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold. Say, is my kingdom lost? Why, 'twas my care:

And what loss is it to be rid of care? Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we? Greater he shall not be . if he serve God, We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so. Revolt our subjects? That we cannot Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?

If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it. I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. No matter where-of comfort no man speak. Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;

Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.

Let's choos executors and talk of wills; And yet not so—for what can we bequeath Save our deposed bodies to the ground? 15 Our lands, our lives, and all, are Bolingbroke's.

And nothing can we call our own but death And that small model of the bairen earth Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.

For God's sake let us sit upon the ground And tell sad stories of the death of kings: How some have been depos'd, some slain in war.

Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd.

Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd,

All murder'd—for within the hollow crown That rounds the mortal temples of a king Keeps Death his court; and there the antic sits.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden

To drive away the neavy thought of care? Ludy. Madam, we'll play at bowls. Queen. "I will make me think the world Lady. Madam, we'll dance. Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,

When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief;

Therefore no dancing, girl; some other sport.

Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales. Queen. Of sorrow or of joy?

Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither, girl; For it of joy, being attogether wanting. It doth remember me the more of sorrow; Or if of griet, being altogether had,

It adds more sorrow to my want of joy; For what I have I need not to repeat.

And what I want it boots not to complain. Lady. Madam, I'll sing. Oueen.

'Tis well that thou hast cause; But thou snouldst please me better wouldst thou weep.

Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.

Queen. And I could ing, would wepping do me good.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

But stay, here come the gardeners. Let's step into the shadow of these trees. 25 My wretchedness unto a row of pins, They will talk of state, for every one doth so Against a change: woe is forerun with woe.

That seem'd in eating him to hold him up, Are pluck'd up root and all by Bolingbroke-

I mean the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green. Serv. What, are they dead?

They are; and Bolingbroke Hath seiz'd the wasteful king. O, what pity

That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land

As we this garden! We at time of year Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit trees, Serv. What, think you the King shall be deposed?

Gard. Depress'd he is already, and depos'd

'Tis doubt he will be. Letters came last night

To a dear friend of the good Duke of York's That tell black tidings. Queen. O, I am press'd to death through want of speaking!

[Coming forward. Thou, old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden, How dares thy harsh rude tongue sound this unpleasing news?

What Eve, what serpent, hath suggested

To make a second fall of cursed man? Why dost thou say King Richard is depos'd? Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth.

Divine his downfall? Say, where, when,

and how, Cam'st thou by this ill tidings? Speak. thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me, madam; little joy

To breathe this news; yet what I say is King Richard, he is in the mighty hold Of Bolingbroke. Their fortunes both are weigh'd.

And some few vanities that make him light; But in the balance of great Bolingbroke, Besides himself, are all the English peers. And with that odds he weighs King Richard down.

Post you to London, and you will find it so; I speak no more than every one doth know. Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,

Doth not thy embassage belong to me, And am I last that knows it? O, thou thinkest

To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast. Come, ladies, go To meet at London London's king in woe. What, was I born to this, that my sad look Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?

Gard'ner, for telling me these news of woe, Pray God the plants thou graft'st may never grow!

I would my skill were subject to thy curse. Here did she fall a tear; here in this place I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace. 105 seen,

ACT FOUR

Scene I. Westminster Hall.

Enter, as to the Parliament, Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, Surrey, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Otheis; Herald, Officers, and Bagot.

Boling. Call forth Bagot.

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind— What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death;

Who wrought it with the King, and who perform'd

The bloody office of his timeless end. 5
Bagot. Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue

Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd. In that dead time when Gloucester's death was plotted

I heard you say 'Is not my arm of length, That reacheth from the restful English Court

As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head?' Amongst much other talk that very time 14 I heard you say that you had rather refuse The offer of an hundred thousand crow_ns Than Bolingbroke's return to England; Adding with il, how blest this land would be In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords,

What answer shall I make to this base man? Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars 21 On equal terms to give him chastisemen? Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd With the attainder of his slanderous lips. There is my gage, the manual seal of death That marks thee out for hell. I say thou liest,

And will maintain what thou hast said is false

In thy heart-blood, though being all too base

To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear; thou shalt not take it up.

30

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best

In all this presence that hath mov'd me so. Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathy,

There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine. By that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st.

I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it.

That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death.

If thou deniest it twenty times, thou liest;

And 1 will turn thy falsehood to thy heart, Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dai'st not, coward, live to see that day. 41 Fuz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true

In this appeal as thou art all unjust; 45 And that thou art so, there I throw my gage,

To prove it on thee to the extremest point Of mortal breathing. Seize it, if thou dar'st.

Aum. An if I do not, may my hands rot

And never brandish more revengeful steel Over the glittering helmet of my foe! 51 Another Lord. I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle:

And spur thee on with full as many lies As may be holloa'd in thy treacherous ear From sun to sun. There is my honour's pawn;

Engage it to the trial, if thou darest.

Aum. Who sets me else? By heaven, I'll throw at all!

I have a thousand spirits in one breast
To answer twenty thousand such as you.
Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater, I do remember well 60

The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitz. 'Tis very true; you were in presence then,

And you can witness with me this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true.

Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy! 65
That he shall he so heavy on my sword
That it shall render vengeance and revenge
Till thou the he-giver and that he do he
In proof whereof, there is my honour's

pawn; 70
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!

If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live, I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness, And spit upon him whilst I say he lies, 75

And lies, and lies. There is my bond of faith.

To tie thee to my strong correction. As I intend to thrive in this new world, Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal.

Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men 8x

To execute the noble Duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage

If he may be repeal'd to try his honour, 85 I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks, under gage

And, though mine enemy, restor'd again To all his lands and signories. When he is return'd.

Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial. Car. That honourable day shall never be

Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought For Jesu Christ in glorious Christian field. Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens; And, toil'd with works of war, retur'd himself

To Italy: and there, at Venice, gave His body to that pleasant country's earth.

And his pure soul unto his captain, Christ, Under whose colours he had fought so long. Boling. Why, Bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Car. As surely as I live, my lord. Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom

Of good old Abraham! Lords appellants, Your differences shall all rest under gage 105 Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter YORK, attended.

York. Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee

From plume-pluck'd Richard, who with willing soul

Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields To the possession of thy royal hand. Ascend his throne, descending now from

And long live Henry, fourth of that name! Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marry, God forbid! Worst in this royal presence may I speak, Yet best beseeming me to speak the truth. Would God that any in this noble presence Were enough noble to be upright judge Of noble Richard! Then true noblesse would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. What subject can give sentence on his king? And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?

Thieves are not judg'd but they are by to

That in a Christian climate souls refin'd 180

That Norfolk lies. Here do 1 throw down Should flow so hemous, black, obscene a deed!

Boling. These differences shall all rest Stirr'd up by God, thus boldly for his king.

Till Norfolk be repeal'd-repeal'd he shall My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call king.

Is a foul traiter to proud Hereford's king: And if you crown him, let me prophesy-The blood of English shall manure the ground,

And future ages groan for this foul act: Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels. And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars Shall kin with kin and kind with kind confound:

Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny, Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls. O, if you raise this house against this house. It will the woefullest division prove That ever fell upon this cursed earth. Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,

Lest child, child's children, cry against you woe.

North. Well have you argued, sir: and, for your pains, Of capital treason we arrest you here.

My Lord of Westminster, be it your charge To keep him safely till his day of trial. May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit?

Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view

He may surrender; so we shall proceed Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. |Fxit. Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest.

Procure your sureties for your days of answer.

Little are we beholding to your love. And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter YORK, with KING RICHARD, and Officers bearing the regalia.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king,

Before I have shook off the regal thoughts Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd

To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee. 164

Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me To this submission. Yet I well remember The favours of these men. Were they not mine?

me?

So Judas did to Christ; but he, in twelve, Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand, none. God save the King! Will no man say amen?

Am I both priest and clerk? Well then, Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat amen.

God save the King! although I be not he: And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me. To do what service am I sent for hither?

York. To do that office of thine own good will

Which tired majesty did make thee offer-The resignation of thy state and crown To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown. Here, cousin, seize the crown.

Here, cousin,

On this side my hand, and on that side thine.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well That owes two buckets, filling one another: The emptier ever dancing in the air, The other down, unseen, and full of water. That bucket down and full of tears am I, Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. My crown I am; but still my griefs are mine.

You may my glories and my state depose, But not my griefs; still am I king of those. Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my cares down.

My care is loss of care, by old care done; Your care is gain of care, by new care won. The cares I give I have, though given away: They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?

K. Rich. Ay, no; no, ay; for I must nothing be;

Therefore no no, for I resign to thee. Now mark me how I will undo myself: I give this heavy weight from off my head, And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand, The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;

With mine own tears I wash away my balm. With mine own hands I give away my crown,

With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,

With mine own breath release all duteous oaths;

All pomp and majesty I do forswear; My manors, rents, revenues, I forgo; My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny. God pardon all oaths that are broke to me! God keep all vows unbroke are made to thee! Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd,

And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd.

And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit.

God save King Henry, unking'd Richard savs.

And send him many years of sunshine days! What more remains?

No more; but that you read North. These accusations, and these grievous crimes

North. My lord, dispatch: read o'er these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears; I cannot see.

And yet salt water blinds them not so much

But they can see a sort of traitors here. Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,

I find myself a traitor with the rest; For I have given here my soul's consent T' undeck the pompous body of a king; 250

Made glory base, and sovereignty a slave, Proud majesty a subject, state a peasant. North. My lord-

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man,

Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title-No, not that name was given me at the font-But 'tis usurp'd. Alack the heavy day, That I have worn so many winters out. And know not now what name to call myself! O that I were a mockery king of snow,

Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke To melt myself away in water drops!

glass doth come.

K. Rich. Frend. shou torments me ere I come to hell.

Boling. Urge it no more, my Lord Northumberland. North. The commons will not, then, be satisfied.

encugh,

When I do see the very book indeed Where all my sins are wilt, and that's myself. 275

Re-enter Attendant with a glass.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read. No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck

So many blows upon this face of mine And made no deeper wounds? O flatt'ring glass.

Like to my followers in prosperity, Thou dost beguile me! Was this face the

That every day under his household roof Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face That like the sun did make beholders wink? Is this the face which fac'd so many follies That was at last out-fac'd by Bolingbroke? A brittle glory shineth in this tace: As brittle as the glory is the face;

[Dashes the glass against the ground. For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers. Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport-How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd

The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again. The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see. 'Tis very true: my grief lies all within; 295 And these external manner of 'aments Are merely shadows to the unseen grief That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul. There lies the substance; and I thank thee, king,

For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way How to lament the cause. I'll beg one bo 'n. And then be gone and trouble you no more. Shall I obtain it?

I have a king here to my latterer. Being so great, I have no used to beg. Bolung. Yet ask.

K. Ruh. And shall I have?

Boling You shall. K. Ruh. Then give me leave to go. Boling. Whither?

K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.

Boling. Go, some of you convey him to the Tower.

K. Rich. O, good! Conveyers! Conveyers are you all.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied. I'll read That rise thus numbly by a true king's fall Execut King Richard some Lords. and a Guard.

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.

Car. The woe's to come; the children vet unborn

Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn. Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot To rid the realm of this pernicious blot? 3°5

Abbot. My lord. Before I freely speak my mind herein. You shall not only take the sacrament To bury mine intents, but also to effect Whatever I shall happen to devise. I see your brows are full of discontent, Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears.

ACT FIVE

Scene I. London. A street leading to the Tower.

Enter the QUEEN, with her Attendants.

Queen. This way the King will come; this is the way

To Julius Cæsar's ill-erected tower, To whose flint bosom my condemned lord Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke. Here let us rest, if this rebellious carth Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter King Richard and Guard.

Boling. Name it, fair cousin. But soft, but see, or rather do not see, K. Rich. Fair cousin! I am greater than My fair rose wither. Yet look up, behold, 305 That you in pity may dissolve to dew,

And wash him fresh again with true-love And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-12015. 70

Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,

When triumph is become an alehouse guest? K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so.

To make my end too sudden. Learn, good soul.

To think our former state a happy dream; From which awak'd, the truth of what we

Shov's us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,

To grim Necessity; and he and I Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,

And closter thee in some religious house. Our holy lives must win a new world's crown.

Which our profane hours here have thrown down.

Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind

Transform'd and weak'ned? Hath Bolingbroke depos'd

Thine intellect? Hath he been in thiv heart?

The lion dying thrusteth forth his paw And wounds the earth, it nothing else, with rage

To be o'eipow'r'd; and wilt thou, pupillike.

Take the correction mildly, kiss the rod, And fawn on rage with base humility, Which art a lion and the king of beasts?

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed! aught but beasts. I had been still a happy king of men.

Good sometimes queen, prepare thee hence for France.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd:

You must to Pomíret, not unto the Tower. And, madam, there is order ta'en for you: With all swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne, The time shall not be many hours of age More than it is, ere foul sin gathering head Shall break into corruption. Thou shalt think Though he divide the realm and give thee half

It is too little, helping him to all;

And he shall think that thou, which knowest the way

To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again, Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.

The love of wicked men converts to fear; That 'ear to hate; and hate turns one or

To worthy danger and deserved death. North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.

Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.

K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd! Bad men, you violate

A twofold marriage-'twixt my crown and me.

And then betwixt me and my married wife. Let me unkers the oath 'twixt thee and me; And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made. Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,

Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime:

Think I am dead, and that even here thou My wife to France, from whence set forth in pomp,

She came adorned hither like sweet May. Sent back like Hallowmas or short'st of day.

Queen. And must we be divided? Must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both, and send the King with me.

North. That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes thither let me go. K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe. Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here; Better far off than near, be ne'er the near Go, count thy way with sighs; I mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan the way being short.

And piece the way out with a heavy heart. Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief, Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;

Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart. Quien. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part

To take on me to keep and kill thy heart. So, now I have mine own again, be gone,

That I may strive to kill it with a groan. 100 K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay.

Once more, adieu: the rest let sorrow say. Exeunt.

Scene II. The Duke of York's palace.

Enter the DUKE OF YORK and the DUCHESS. Duch. My lord, you told me you would tell the rest, When weeping made you break the story off.

Of our two cousins' coming into London.

York. Where did I leave? Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,

Where rude misgoverned hands from windows' tops

Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the Duke, great Bolingbroke,

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know. With slow but stately pace kept on his course.

Whilst all tongues cried 'God save thee, Bolingbroke!

You would have thought the very windows spake,

So many greedy looks of young and old Through casements darted their desiring

Upon his visage; and that all the walls 15 With painted imagery had said at once Jesu preserve thee! broke!

Whilst he, from the one side to the other turning,

Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's I will be satisfied; let me see the writing. neck.

Bespake them thus, ' I thank you, countrymen '

And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along. Duch. Alack, poor Richard I where rode he the whilst?

York. As in a theatre the eyes of men

After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage Are joly bent on him that enters next. Thinking his prattle to be tedious;

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on gentle Richard; no man cried God save him!

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home;

But dust was thrown upon his sacred head: Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off. His face still combating with tears and smiles,

The badges of his grief and patience. That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted.

And barbarism itself have pitied him. But heaven bath a hand in these events.

To whose high will we bound our calm contents.

To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now. Whose state and honour I for ave allow. 40 Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

Aumerle that was: But that is lost for being Richard's friend, And, madam, you must call him Rutland now.

I am in Parliament pledge for his truth And lasting fealty to the new-made king. 45

Enter AUMERLE.

Duch. Welcome, my son. Who are the violets now

That strew the green lap of the new come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not.

God knows I had as lief be none as one. York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of time. Lest you be cropp'd before you come to prime.

What news from Oxford? Do these justs and triumphs hold?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent not, I purpose so. York. What seal is that that hangs without thy bosom?

Welcome, Boling- Yea, look'st thou pale? Let me see the writing.

Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.

York. No matter, then, who see it. Aum. I do beseech your Grace to pardon

It is a matter of small consequence Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear-

What should you fear? Duch. Tis nothing but some bond that he is I would appeach him. ent'red into

For gay apparel 'gainst the triumph-day. York. Bound to himself! What doth he with a bond

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool. Boy, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it.

York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say. [He plucks it out of his bosom, and reads it.

Treason, foul treason! Villain! traitor! slave !

Duch. What is the matter, my lord? York. Ho! who is within there?

Enter a Servant.

Saddle my horse. God for his mercy, what treachery is here! Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?

Now, by mine honour, by my life, my troth,

I will appeach the villain.

the King.

What is the matter? Duch. York. Peace, foolish woman. 80 What is the Duch. I will not peace. matter, Aumerle?

Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no

Than my poor life must answer. Duch.

His Man enters with his boots.

Duch, Strike him, Aumerle. Poor boy, thou art amaz'd. Hence, villain! never more come in my sight.

York. Give me my boots, I say. Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do? Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?

Have we more sons? or are we like to have? Is not my teeming date drunk up with time?

And wilt thou pluck my fair son from minc age

And rob me of a happy mother's name? Is he not like thee? Is he not thine own? York. Thou fond mad woman, Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy? A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament.

And interchangeably set down their hands To kill the King at Oxford.

He shall be none; We'll keep him here. Then what is that to I see some sparks of better hope, which elder him ?

KING RICHARD THE SECOND

York. Away fond woman! were he twenty times my son

Duch. Hadst thou groan'd for him As I have done, thou wouldst be more pitiful.

But now I know thy mind: theu dost suspect

That I have been disloyal to thy bed And that he is a bastard, not thy son. Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind. He is as like thee as a man may be,

Not like to me, or any of my kin, And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman! 110 Exit. Duch. After, Aumerle! Mount thee upon his horse: Spur post, and get before him to the King. And beg thy pardon ere he do acruse thee. I'll not be long behind; though I be old, I doubt not but to ride as fast as York; 115 York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle And never will I rise up from the ground my horse. [Exit Servant. Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd there Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee.

Away, be gone. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Windsor Castle.

Enter BOLINGBROKE as King, PERCY, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell me of my unthrifty son? 'Tis full three months since I did see him

Thy life answer! If any plague hang over us, 'tis he. York. Bring me my boots. I will unto I would to God, my lords, he might be found.

Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there.

For there, they say, he daily doth frequent With unrestrained loose companions,

Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes

And beat our watch and rob our passengers, Which he, young wanton and effeminate boy,

Takes on the point of honour to support So dissolute a crew.

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the Prince.

And told him of those triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling. And what said the gallant? Percy. His answer was, he would unto the

And from the common'st creature pluck a glove

And wear it as a favour; and with that He would unhorse the lustiest challenger. Boling. As dissolute as desperate; yet

If on the first, how heinous e'er it be, To win thy after-love I pardon thee. Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key. That no man enter till my tale be done.

York knocks at the door and crieth. York. [Within] My hege, beware; look My dangerous cousin, let your mother in. to thyself:

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there. Boling, [Drawing] Villain, I'll make thee sate.

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand; thou hast no cause to tear.

York. [Within] Open the door, secure, foolhardy King.

Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face? Open the door, or I will break it open. 45

Enter YORK.

Beling. What is the matter, uncle? Speak:

Recover breath; tell us how near is danger, That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know

The treason that my haste forbids me show. Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise pass'd.

I do repent me; read not my name there; My heart is not confederate with my hand. York. It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.

I tore it from the traitor's bosom, King; 55 Fear, and not love, begets his penitence. Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!

O loyal father of a treacherous son! Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain,

May happily bring forth. But who comes From whence this stream through muddy passages Hath held his current and defil'd himself! Thy overflow of good converts to bad: And thy abundant goodness shall excuse 65 This deadly blot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd;

Aum. God save your Grace! I do beseech And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,

To have some conference with your Grace As thuiftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.

Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies. Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies. 71 Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath, Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Duch. [Within] What ho, my liege, for God's sake, let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry?

Duch. [Within] A woman, and thine aunt. great King; 'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door. A beggar begs that never begg'd before. Boling. Our scene is alt'red from a serious

This let alone will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O King, believe not this hardhearted man!

Love loving not itself, none other can. York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here? Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear? Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech. For ever will I walk upon my knees,

And never see day that the happy sees Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy 95 By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers I bend my knee. [Kneels.

York. Against them both, my true joints bended be. [Kneels. Ill mayst thou thrive, if thou grant any grace ! Duch. Pleads he in earnest? Look upon his face;

60 His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;

He prays but faintly and would be denied; We pray with heart and soul, and all beside. His weary joints would gladly rise, I know; Our knees still kneel till to the ground they grow.

His prayers are full of false hypocrisy; Ours of true zeal and deep integrity. Our prayers do out-play his; then let them have That mercy which true prayer ought to IIO have.

Boling, Good aunt, stand up.

Nay, do not say 'stand up': Duch. Say 'pardon' first, and afterwards 'stand up'.

An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach. 'Pardon' should be the first word of thy speech.

I never long'd to hear a word till now: 115 Say 'pardon' King; let pity teach thee how.

The word is short, but not so short as sweet: No word like 'pardon' for kings' mouths so

Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord.

That sets the word itself against the word! Speak ' pardon ' as 'tis current in our land ; The chopping French we do not understand. Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there:

Or in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear, That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,

Pity may move thee 'pardon' to rehearse. Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!

Yet am I sick for fear. Speak it again. Twice saying 'pardon' doth not pardon twain. 131

But makes one pardon strong. Boling. With all my heart

I pardon him. A god on earth thou art. Duch. Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law and the Abbot, With all the rest of that consorted crew, Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.

Good uncle, help to order several powers To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are. May tear a passage through the flinty ribs They shall not live within this world, 1 Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls; swear.

KING RICHARD THE SECOND

Uncle, farewell; and, cousin, adieu: Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove

Enter SIR PIERCE OF EXTON and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the King. what words he spake?

' Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?'

Was it not so?

Serv. These were his very words. Exton. 'Have I no friend?' quoth he. He spake it twice.

And urg'd it twice together, did he not? 5 Serv. He did.

Exton. And, speaking it, he wishtly look'd on me,

As who should say 'I would thou wert the man

That would divorce this terror from my heart':

Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare

This prison where I live unto the world; And, for because the world is populous And here is not a creature but myself, I cannot do it. Yet I'll hammer it out. My brain I'll prove the female to my soul, Duch. I do not sue to stand; My soul the father; and these two beget Pardon is all the suit I have in hand. 130 A generation of still-breeding thoughts, Boling, I pardon him, as God shall pardon And these same thoughts people this little world.

In humours like the people of this world, For no thought is contented. The better sort.

As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd

With scruples, and do set the word itself Against the word,

As thus: 'Come, little ones'; and then

' It is as hard to come as for a camel To thread the postern of a small needle's eve'.

With being nothing.

The music plays.

Music do I hear? Ha, ha! keep time. How sour sweet music When time is broke and no proportion kept!

So is it in the music of men's lives. And here have I the daintiness of ear To check time broke in a disorder'd string; But, for the concord of my state and time, Had not an ear to hear my true time broke. I wasted time, and now doth time waste me : For now hath time made me his numb'ring clock:

My thoughts are minutes: and with sighs they jar

Their watches on unto mine eyes, the outward watch,

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,

Now, sir, the sound that tells what hour

it is Are clamorous groans which strike upon my heart.

Which is the bell. So sighs, and tears, and groans,

Show minutes, times, and nours; but my time

Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy While I stand fooling here, his Jack of the clock.

This music mads me. Let it sound no more: For though it have holp madmen to their Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable. King,

When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York.

O. how it ern'd my heart, when I beheld. In London streets, that coronation-day, When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary-That horse that thou so often hast bestrid. That horse that I so carefully have dress'd!

K. Rich. Rode he on Baibary? Tell me. gentle friend,

How went he under him?

Groom. So proudly as if he disdain'd the ground.

K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;

This hand hath made him proud with clappipg him. Would he not stumble? would he not fall down, Since pride must have a fall, and break the neck

Of that proud man that did usurp his back? Forgiveness, horse! Why do I rail on thee. Since thou, created to be aw'd by man. Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;

And yet I bear a burden like an ass, Is pointing still, in cleansing them from Spurr'd, gall'd, and tir'd, by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper with meat.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit. Keep. My lord, will't please you to fall to?

Exton. As full of valour as of royal blood. Both have I spill'd. O, would the deed were good!

For now the devil, that told me I did well, Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. This dead king to the living king I'll bear. Take hence the rest, and give them burial Exeunt.

Scene V1. Windsor Castie.

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE, the DUKE OF YORK, with other Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind mucle York, the latest news we hear

Is that the rebels have consum'd with fire Our town of Ciceter in Gioucestershire: But whether they be ta'en or slain we hear nor.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Welcome, my lord. What is the news? North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all nappiness.

The next news is, I have to London sent The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent.

The manner of their taking may appear At large discoursed in this paper here. Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;

And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter FITZWATER.

Füz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent In weeping after this untimely bier. to London

KING RICHARD THE SECOND

The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Suedy . Two of the dangerous consorted traiters 15 That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow. Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;

Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlister.

Percy. The grand conspirator, Abbot of Westminster,

With clog of conscience and sour melancholy.

Hath yielded up his body to the grave; But here is Carlisle living, to abide Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride. Boling, Carlisle, this is your doom: Choose out some secret place.

life; Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on So as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:

Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here For though mine enemy thou hast ever been.

High sparks of honour in thee have I seen. Enter Exton, with Attendants, bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great King, within this coffin I present

Thy buried fear. Herein all breathless lies The mightiest of thy greatest enemies. Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought

A deed of slander with thy fatal hand Upon my head and all this famous land. Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

Beling. They love not poison that do poison need.

Nor do I thee. Though I did wish him. dead.

But neither my good word nor princely favour;

With Cain go wander thorough shades of night,

And never show thy head by day nor light. Lords, I protest my soul is full of woe That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow.

Come, mourn with me for what I do lament, And put on sullen black incontinent.

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land, To wash this blood off from my guilty hand. March sadly after; grace my mournings here

ACT ONE

Scene I. London. The palace.

Enter the KING, LORD JOHN OF LANCASTER, EARL OF WESTMORELAND, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and Others.

Find we a time for frighted peace to pant And breathe short-winded accents of new

To be commenc'd in strands afar remote. No more the thirsty entrance of this soil 5 Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood: No more shall trenching war channel her fields.

Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed

Of hostile paces. Those opposed eyes Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven.

All of one nature, of one substance bred, Did lately meet in the intestine shock And furious close of civil butchery, Shall now in mutual well-beseeming ranks March all one way, and be no more oppos'd Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies. The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife, No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends.

As far as to the sepulchre of Christ-Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross

We are impressed and engag'd to fight-Forthwith a power of English shall we levy, Whose aims were moulded in their mothers' womb

To chase these pagans in those holy fields Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet Which fourteen hundred years ago were naıl'd

For our advantage on the bitter cross. King. So shaken as we are, so wan with But this our purpose now is twelvemonth old.

And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go: Therefore we meet not now. Then let me

Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland, What yesternight our Council did decree In forwarding this dear expedience.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question

And many limits of the charge set down 35 But yesternight, when all athwart there came

A post from Wales loaden with heavy news; Whose worst was that the noble Mortimer, Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower. Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken.

A thousand of his people butchered; Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,

Such beastly shameless transformation. By those Welshwomen done, as may not be Without much shame re-told or spoken of.

King. It seems then that the fidings of this broil

20 Brake off our business for the Holy Land. West. This match'd with other did, my gracious Lord;

On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur there.

Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald, That ever-valiant and approved Scot. At Holmedon met.

Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour:

As by discharge of their artillery

And shape of likelihood the news was told; For he that brought them, in the very heat

And pride of their contention did take horse.

Uncertain of the issue any way.

King. Here is a dear, a true industrious

Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,

Stain'd with the variation of each soil Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours:

And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.

The Earl of Douglas is discomfited: Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty knights, Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter

On Holmedon's plains; of prisoners,

West. In faith, It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.

mak'st me sin In envy that my Lord Northumberland

Should be the father to so blest a son— 80 A son who is the theme of honour's tongue, Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant;

Who is sweet Fortune's minion and her pride ;

Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him, See riot and dishonour stain the brow Of my young Harry. O that it could be prov'd

That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd

In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,

And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet! Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. But let him from my thoughts. What think you, coz,

Of this young Percy's pride? The prisoners Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd well too; for the fortune of us that are the word.

I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife. West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,

Malevolent to you in all aspects:

Which makes him prune himself, and bristle

The crest of youth against your dignity. King. But I have sent for him to answer

And for this cause awhile we must neglect

Our holy purpose to Jerusalem. Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we

Will hold at Windsor—so inform the lords; But come yourself with speed to us again, For more is to be said and to be done 100 Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will, my hege.

Scene II. London. The Prince's lodging. Enter the PRINCE OF WALES and SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it. lad?

Prince. Thou art so fat-witted with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldest truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? Unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and To beaten Douglas; and the Earl of clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair het wench in flame-colouied taffeta, I see no reason why thou shouldst A gallant prize? Ha, cousin, is it not? 75 be so superfluous to demand the time of the Fal. Indeed, you come near me now, Hal; King. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad and for we that take pulses go by the moon and the seven stars, and not by Phobus, he 'that wand'ring knight so fair'. And, I prithee, sweet wag, when thou art a king, as, God save thy Grace-Majesty, I should say; tor grace thou wilt have none-

Prince. What, none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

Prince. Well, how then? Come, roundly, coundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when theu art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

Prince. Thou sayest well, and it holds moon's men dotn ebb and flow like the sea, being governed, as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatch'd on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing 'Lay by ' and spent with crying 'Bring in'; now in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder, and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tayern a most sweet wench?

Prince. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag! Wnat, in thy quips and thy quiddities? What a plague have I to do with a buff jerkın?

Prince. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast call'd her to a re koning many a time and oft.

Prince. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

hast paid all there. Prince. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and where it would not. I have used my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so us'd it that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent -but, I prithee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fubb'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antic the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

Prince. No: thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge!

Prince. Thou judgest false already: I mean thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman. 66 Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

Prince. For obtaining of suits?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat or a lugg'd bear.

Prince. Or an old lion, or a lover's lute. Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

Prince. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor Ditch?

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes, and art indeed the most comparative, rascalliest, sweet young prince. But, Hal, I prithee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to An old lord of the Council hang'd.

rated me the other day in the street about you, sir, but I mark'd him not; and yet he talk'd very wisely, but I regarded him not; and yet he talk'd wisely, and in the street too.

Prince. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration. and art indeed able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal-God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I. if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over. By the Lord, an I do not I am a villain! I'll be damn'd for never a king's son in Christendom.

Prince. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Zounds, where thou wilt, lad: I'll make one. An I do not, call me villain and baffle me.

Prince. I see a good amendment of life Fâl. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou in thee—from praying to puise-taking. 100 Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal: 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his veration.

Enter Poins.

Poins!-Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried 'Stand' to a true man.

Prince. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal. What says Monsieui Remorse? What says Sir. John Sack and Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that theu soldest him on Good Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg?

Prince. Sir John stands to his word—the devil shall have his baigain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs; he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thou damn'd for keeping thy word with the devil.

Prince. Else he had been damn'd for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock early, at Gadshill! There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. I have vizards for you all; you have horses for yourselves. Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap. We may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be Fal. Hear ye, Yedward: if I tarry at them to be as true-bied cowards as ever home and go not, I'll hang you for going. Poins, You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou cam'st not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

Prince. Well then, once in my days I'll he a madcap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

Prince. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

Prince. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I prithee, leave the Prince and me alone: I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure that he shall go.

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion, and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed; that the true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell; you shall find me in Eastcheap.

Prince. Farewell, thou latter spring!

Farewell, All-hallown summer!

[Exit Falstaff. Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow. I have a jest to execute that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill, shall rob those men that we have already waylaid; yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders.

Prince. How shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves; which they shall have no sooner achieved but we'll set upon them.

Prince. Yea, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see—I'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we will change after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments.

Prince. Yea, but I doubt they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know The scourge of greatness to be us'd on it-turn'd back; and for the third, if he fight 131 longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be the Prince. Who ?- I rob, I a thief? Not I, incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured, and in the reproof of this lives the lest.

Prince. Well, I'll go with thee. Provide us all things necessary, and meet me tomorrow night in Eastcheap: there I'll sup.

Farewell.

Poins. Farewell, my lord. [Exit Poins. Prince. I know you all, and will awhile uphold

The unyok'd humour of your idleness; Yet herein will I imitate the sun. Who doth permit the base contagious clouds To smother up his beauty from the world. That, when he please again to be himself, Being wanted, he may be more wond'red at By breaking through the foul and ugly mists

Of vapours that did seem to strangle him. If all the year were playing holidays, To sport would be as tedious as to work;

But when they seldom come, they wish'dfor come.

And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents. So, when this loose behaviour I throw off And pay the debt I never promised,

By how much better than my word I am. By so much shall I falsify men's hopes, 204 And, like bright metal on a sullen ground. My reformation, glitt'ring o'er my fault, Shall show more goodly and attract more eyes Than that which hath no foil to set it off. I'll so offend to make offence a skill, Redeeming time when men think least I

The Archbishop. Hot. Of York, is it not?

Wor. True; who bears hard His brother's death at Bristow, the Lord Scroop.

I speak not this in estimation, As what I think might be, but what I know Is ruminated, plotted, and set down,

And only stays but to behold the face Of that occasion that shall bring it en. Hot. I smell it. Upon my life, it will do well. North. Before the game is afoot thou still let'st slip. Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot.

And then the power of Scotland and of York To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor. And so they shall. Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.
Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,

To save our heads by raising of a head; For, bear ourselves as even as we can, 285 The King will always think him in our debt,

And think we think ourselves unsatisfied, Till he hath found a time to pay us home. And see already how he doth begin

To make us strangers to his looks of love. Hot. He does, he does. We'll be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell. No further go in

Than I by letters shall direct your course. When time is ripe, which will be suddenly, I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer; Where you and Douglas and our pow'rs at once.

As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,
To bear our fortunes in our own strong
arms.

Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother. We shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu. O, let the hours be mean to come to London? short Sec. Car. Time enough to Till fields and blows and groams applaud our sport! [Exeunt.

ACT TWO

Scene I. Rochester. An inn yard.

Enter a Carrier with a lantern in his hand.

First Carrier. Heigh-ho! an it be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd; Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not pack'd. What, ostler!

Ost. [Within] Anon, anon.

First Car. I prithee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle; put a few flocks in the point; poor lade is wrung in the withers out of all cess.

Enter another Carrier.

Sec. Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots; this house is turned upside down since Robin Ostler died. 20

First Car. Poor fellow never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

Sec. Car. I think this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.

First Car. Like a tench! By the mass, there is ne'er a king christen could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

Sec. Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a of gallows; fo fordan; and then we leak in your chimney; hangs with me and your chamber-lye breeds fleas like a no starveling. loach.

First Car. What, ostler ! come av av, and be hang'd; come away.

Sec. Car. I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing Cross.

First Car. God's body! the tuikeys in my pannier are quite starved. What, osfler! A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? Canst not hear? An 'twere nor as good deed as drink to break the pate on thee, I am a very villain. Come, and be hang'd! Hast no faith in thee?

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

First Car. I think it be two o'clock. Gads. I prithee lend me thy lantern to see my gelding in the stable.

First Car. Nay, by God! Soft! I know a trick worth two of that, i' faith.

Gads. I pray thee lend me thine.

Sec. Car. Ay, when, canst tell? Lend me thy lantern, quoth 'a? Marry, I'll see thee hang'd first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

Sec. Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee. Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge.

[Execut Carriers.]

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain! 46 Cham. [Within] At hand, quoth pick-purse.

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from labouring; thou layest the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current that I told you yesternight: there's a franklin in the Wild of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold; I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper, a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too—God knows what. They are up already and call for eggs and butter; they will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck. 60

Cham. No, I'll none of it; I pray thee keep that for the hangman; for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

63

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me; and thou knowest he is no starveling. Tut! there are other Troyans that thou dream'st not of, the 487

which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be look'd into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot landrakers, no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hu'd malt-worms; but with nobility and tranquillity, burgomasters and great onevers, such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray. And yet, zounds, I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but prey on her; for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their Will she hold out water in foul boots?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquor'd her. We steal as in a castle, cocksure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night than to fern-seed for your walking invisible. Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man. Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; 'homo' is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy [Exeunt. knave.

Scene II. The highway, near Gadshill.

Enter the PRINCE OF WALES and POINS.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter; I have remov'd Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gumm'd velvet.

Prince. Stand close.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Poins! Poins! And be hang'd! Poins!

Prince. Peace, ye fat-kidney'd rascal; what a brawling dost thou keep!

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?

Prince. He is walk'd up to the top of the hill; I'll go seek him.

Fal. I am accurs'd to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squier further afoot, I shall break my wind. doubt not but to die a fair death for all this. if I scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two and twenty years, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd. It Poins! Hal! A plague upon you both! Bardolph! Peto! I'll starve ere I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink to turn true man, and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest variet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is three-score and ten miles afoot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon it, when thieves cannot be true one to another! [They whistle] Whew! A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hang'd.

Prince. Peace, ve fat-guts! lie down: lav thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers. 32

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. plague mean ye to colt me thus?

Prince. Thou liest: thou art not colted.

thou art uncolted.

Fal. I prithee, good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son. Prince. Out, ye rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Hang thyself in thine own heirapparent garters. If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison. When a jest is so forward, and afoot too !- I hate it.

Enter GADSHILL, BARDOLPH and PETO with Gads. Stand!

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice. Bardolph, what news?

Bard. Case ye, case ye; on with your vizards: there's money of the King's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the King's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, ye rogue; 'tis going to the King's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all. 55

Fal. To be hang'd.

Prince. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower; if they scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Peto, How many be there of them? 60

Gads. Some eight or ten.

Fal. Zounds, will they not rob us? What, a coward, Sir John Prince.

Paunch?

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt. your grandfather; but yet no coward. Hal.

Prince. Well, we leave that to the proof. Poins. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands could not be else: I have drunk medicines. behind the hedge: when thou need'st him.

there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hang'd.

Prince, [Aside to Poins] Ned, where are our disguises?

Foins. [Aside] Here, hard by; stand close. Exeunt the Prince and Poins. Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business.

Enter the Travellers.

First Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Threves. Stand!

Travellers. Jesus bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats. Ah, whoreson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! They hate us youth. Down with them; fleece them.

Trav. O, we are undone, both we and ours for ever!

Fal. Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would your store were here. On, bacons, on! What, ve knaves! young men must live. You are grand-jurors, are ye? we'll jure ye, faith. [Here they rob them and bind them. Exeunt.

Re-enter the PRINCE and Poins in buckram.

Prince. The thieves have bound the true Now, could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close: I hear them coming.

Enter the Thieves again.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring. There's no more valour in that Poins than in a wild duck

[As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them.

Prince. Your money! Poins. Villains!

[They all run away, and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.

Prince. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse.

The thieves are all scattered, and possess'd with fear

So strongly that they dare not meet each other;

Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Were't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the fat rogue roar'd ! [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Warkworth Castle.

Enter Hotspur solus, reading a letter.

Hot. 'But, for mine own part, my lord. I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.' He could be contented—why is he not, then? In respect of the love he bears our househe shows in this he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous '-why, that's certain: 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord feel, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower. 'The purpose you undertake is safety. dangerous; the friends you have named uncertain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.' Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant-a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my Lord of York commends the plot and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself; Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the King and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets for moving such a dish of skim milk with so honourable an action! Hang him; let him tell the King: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night. 32

Enter LADY PERCY.

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O my good lord, why are you thus alone?

For what offence have I this fortnight been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee

Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep ?

Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the

And start so often when thou sit'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks.

And given my treasures and my rights of I care not for thee, Kate; this is no world I'o thick-ey'd musing and curs'd melancholy? in thy taint slumbers I by thee have watch'd. And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars;

Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed: Cry 'Courage! To the field!' And thou hast talk'd Of sallies and reures, of trenches, tents,

Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets, Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin, 50 Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the currents of a heady fight. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war, And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions have appear'd.

Such as we see when men restrain their breath

On some great sudden hest. O, what portents are these? Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not. Hot. What, ho!

Enter a Servant.

Is Gilliams with the packet gone? Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago. Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? A roan, a crop-ear, is it not? Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne. Well, I will back him straight. O esperance! BiJ Butler lead him forth into the park. [Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord. Hot. What say'st thou, my lady? Lady. What is it carries you away? Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse. Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape!

A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen 75 As you are toss'd with. In faith, I'll know your business, Harry, that I will I fear my brother Mortimer doth stir About his title and hath sent for you To line his enterprise; but if you go-

Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love Lady. Come, come, you paraquito answer me Directly unto this question that I ask. In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry An if thou wilt not tell me all things true. Hot. Away. Away, you trifler! Love, I love thee not 42 To play with mammets and to tilt with lips: We must have bloody noses and crack'd crowns, nd pass them current too. God's me, my horse!

Vhat sav'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have with me?

Lady. Do you not love me? Do you not, indeed?

Well, do not, then; for since you love me not, will not love myself. Do you not love me? Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no.

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride? And when I am o' horseback, I will swear love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate: must not have you henceforth question

Whither I go, nor reason whereabout. Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude, This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate. I know you wise, but yet no farther wise Than Harry Percy's wife; constant you are. But yet a woman; and for secrecy. No lady closer; for I well believe

Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know,

And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate. Lady. How, so far ? Hot. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate: Whither I go, thither shall you go too; To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you. Will this content you. Kate?

Lady. It must, of force. [Exeunt.

The Boar's Head CENE IV. Eastcheab. Tavern.

Enter the PRINCE, and Poins.

Prince. Ned, prithee, come out of that fat room and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

Prince. With three or four loggerheads amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. I have sounded the very base-string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers and can call them all by their christen names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation that though I be but Prince of Wales yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy—by the Lord, so they call me— and when I am King of England I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dyeing scarlet: and when you breathe in your watering, they cry 'hem!' and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned-to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapp'd even now into my hand by an under-skinker, one that never spake other English in his life than ' Eight shillings and sixpence and You are welcome' with this shrill addition, 'Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon' or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I prithee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny diawer to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling 'Francis!' that his tale to me may be nothing but 'Anon'. Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent. [Exit Poins.

Poins. [Within] Francis! Prince. Thou are perfect. Poins. [Within] Francis!

Enter FRANCIS.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. Look down into the Pomgarnet, Ralph.

Prince. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord?

Prince. How long hast thou to serve,

Fran. Forsooth, five years, and as much

Poins. [Within] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

Prince. Five year! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. Francis, darest thou be so valuant as to play the coward with thy indenture and show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?

Fran, O Lord, sir, I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart-

Poins. [Within] Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir.

Prince. How old art thou, Francis? Fran. Let me see, about Michaelmas next I shall be-

Poins, [Within] Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir. Pray stay a little, my lord.

Prince. Nay, but hark you, Francis: for the sugar thou gavest me-'twas a pennyworth, was't not?

Fran. O Lord, I would it had been two! Prince. I will give thee for it a thousand pound; ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. [Within] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon.

Prince. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, o' Thursday; or indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis-

Fran. My lord? Prince. Wilt thou rob this leathern jerkin, crystal-button, knot-pated, agatering, puke-stocking, caddis-garter, smoothtongue, Spanish-pouch-

Fran. O Lord, sir, who do you mean? 69 Prince. Why, then, your blown bastard is your only drink; for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much. Fran. What, sir?

Poins. [Within] Francis!

Prince. Away, you rogue! Dost thou not hear them call?

[Here they both call him; Francis stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What, stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit Francis] My lord, old Sir John, with half-a-dozen more, are at the door. Shall I let them in?

Prince. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner] Poins!

Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir. Prince. Sırrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door. Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye: what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? Come, what's the issue?

Prince. I am now of all humours that have showed themselves humours since the old days of goodman Adam to the pupil-age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.

Re-enter Francis.

What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. Prince. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is upstairs and downstairs; his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife 'Fie upon this quiet life! I want work?. 'O my sweet Harry,' says she 'how many hast thou kill'd to-day?' 'Give my roan horse a drench' says he; and answers Some fourteen,' an hour after, 'a trifle, a trifle'. I prithee call in Falstaff; I'll play Percy, and that damn'd brawn shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. 'Rivo!' says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter FALSTAFF, GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, and PETO; followed by FRANCIS with wine.

Poins. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou 108 been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! Marry and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether-stocks, and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogue. Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks. 113]

Prince. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter, pittful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun's? If thou didsi, then behold that compound. 116

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too! There is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man; yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it. A villainous coward! Go thy ways. old Jack; die when thou wilt; if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There lives not three good men unhang'd in England, and one of them is fat and grows old. God help the while! A bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or anything. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

Prince. How now, woolsack! What mut- am I no two-legg'd creature.

ter you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales! 132

Prince. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are not you a coward? Answer me to that—and Poins there?

Poins. Zounds, ye fat patinch, an ye call me coward, by the Lord, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damn'd ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders—you care not who sees your back. Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! Give me them that will face me. Give me a cup of sack; I am a rogue if I drunk to-day.

Prince. O villain! thy lips are scarce wip'd since thou drunk'st last.

Fal. All is one for that. [He drinks] A plague of all cowards, still say I.

Prince. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter! There be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this day morning.

Prince. Where is it, Jack? Where is it? Fal. Where is it! taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

Prince. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue if I were not at halfsword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have scap'd by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet our through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hack'd ike a hand-saw—ecce signum! I never lealt better since I was a man—all would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them speak; if they speak more or less than ruth, they are villains and the sons of larkness.

Prince. Speak, sirs; how was it? Gads. We four set upon some dozen— Fal. Sixteen at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound. 170 Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us—

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

Prince. What, fought you with them all? Fal. All! I know not what you call all, but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish. If there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then Prince. Pray God you have not murd'red some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have pepper'd two of them; two I am sure I have paid—two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward: here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me—

Prince. What, four? Thou saidst but two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Poins. Ay, ay, he said four. Fal. These four came all afront, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

Prince. Seven? Why, there were but four even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Poins. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

Prince. [Aside to Poins] Prithee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

Prince. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack. Fal. Do so, for it is worth the list'ning to. These nine in buckram that I told thee

Prince. So, two more already. Fal. Their points being broken—Poins. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground; but I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and with a thought seven of the eleven I paid.

Prince. O monstrous! eleven buckram prince?

men grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it. three misbegotten knaves in Kendal green came at my back and let drive at me-for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldest not see thy hand.

Prince. These lies are like their father that begets them-gross as a mountain, Why, thou clay-brain'd open, palpable. guts, thou knotty-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-catch-

Fal: What, art thou mad? art thou mad?

Is not the truth the truth?

Prince. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? Come, tell us your reason; what sayest thou to this?

Poins. Come, your reason, Jack, vour reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? Zounds, an I were at the strappado, or all the racks in the world. I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! If reasons were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

Prince. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bedpresser, this horse-back-breaker, this huge

Fal. 'Sblood, you starveling, you eel-skin, you dried neat's-tongue, you bull's pizzle, you stock-fish-O for breath to utter what is like thee !-- you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck ! 240

Prince. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack.

Prince. We two saw you four set on four, and bound them and were masters of their four; and, with a word, out-fac'd you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house. And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roar'd for mercy, and still run and roar'd, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame? 256

Poins. Come, let's hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now?

Watch to-night, pray to-morrow. Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? Shall we have a play extempore?

Prince. Content—and the argument shall be thy running away.

Fal. Ah, no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me!

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord the Prince! Prince. How now, my lady the hostess! What say'st thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you; he says he comes from your father.

Prince. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight? Shall I give him his answer? 286 Prince. Prithee do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing,

Here comes lean Jack, here comes barebone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast! How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain.-Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied; for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted the sooner it wears. That thou ait my son I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion, but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point: why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher and eat blackberries? A question not to be ask'd. Shall the son of England prove a thief and take purses? A question to be ask'd. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many is our land by the name of pitch. This pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest; for, Harry, But tell me, Hal, art not thou now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in wees also. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

Prince. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? If thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker or a poulter's hare.

Prince. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand. Judge, my masters.

Prince. Now, Harry, whence come you? Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

Prince. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false. Nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i' faith.

Prince. Swearest thou, ungracious boy? Henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace; there is a devil haunts thee in the likeness of an old fat man; a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swoll'n parcel of dropsies. that huge bombard of sack, that stuff'd cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

Prince. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say I know more harm in him than in myself were to say more than I know. Bard. O, my lord, my lord! the sheriff with a most monstrous watch is at the door. Fal. Out, ye rogue! Play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter the Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord! Prince. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddle-stick; what's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door; they are come to search the Now, master sheriff, what is your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry

Hath followed certain men unto this house. Prince. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord-

Car. As fat as butier.

Prince. The man, I do assure you, is not here,

ACT THREE

Scene I. Wales. Glendower's castle.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure.

And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower,

Will you sit down?

And uncle Worcester—a plague upon it! 5 Welsh. I'il to dinner. I have forgot the map.

Mort. Peace, cousi

Glend. No, here it is.
Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur,

For by that name as oft as Lancaster

Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale, and with

A rising sigh he wisheth you in heaven. 10 Hot. And you in hell, as oft as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativity

The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cressets; and at my birth 15 The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shaked like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done at the same season if your mother's cat had but kitten'd, though yourself had never been born.

Glend. I say the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my

If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions; oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of colic pinch'd and vex'd By the imprisoning of unruly wind

Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,

Shakes the old beldam earth, and topples down

Steeples and moss-grown towers. At your birth,

Our grandam earth, having this distemp'rature,

In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many m

Glend. Cousin, of many men 35 I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave

To tell you once again that at my birth
The tront of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds

Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields. 40

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do show I am not in the roll of common men.

Where is he living, clipp'd in with the sea That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales,

Which calls me pupil or hath read to me? And bring him out that is but woman's son Can trace me in the tedious ways of art And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think there's no man speaks better Welsh. I'll to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man;

But will they come when you do call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command

The devil.

the devil

By telling truth: tell truth, and shame the devil.

If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither.

And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence.

O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil!

Mort. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head

Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wve

And sandy-bottom'd Severn have I sent him

Bootless home and weather-beaten back. Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!

How scapes he agues, in the devil's name? Glend. Come, here is the map; shall we divide our right

According to our threefold order ta'en? Mort. The Archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equally:

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto. By south and east is to my part assign'd: All westward. Wales beyond the Severn shore.

And all the fertile land within that bound, To Owen Glendower; and, dear coz, to you

The remnant northward lying off from Trent.

And our indentures tripartite are drawn: 80 Which being sealed interchangeably, A business that this night may execute. To-morrow, cousin Percy, you and I And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth

As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury. My father Glendower is not ready yet, Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.

[To Glendower] Within that space you may have drawn together

Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords;

And in my conduct shall your ladies come, From whom you now must steal and take no leave ;

For there will be a world of water shed Upon the parting of your wives and you. 95 I'll haste the writer, and withal

Hot. Methinks my moiety, north from Burton here,

In quantity equals not one of yours. See how this river comes me cranking in. And cuts me from the best of all my land Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out. I'll have the current in this place damm'd

> And here the smug and silver Trent shall run

In a new channel, fair and evenly;

It shall not wind with such a deep indent To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Glend. Not wind! It shall, it must; you sec it doth.

Mort. Yea, but

Mark how he bears his course and runs me

With like advantage on the other side, Golding the opposed continent as much 110 As on the other side it takes from you.

Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here.

And on this north side win this cape of land. And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so; a little charge will do it.

Glend. I'll not have it ali'red.

Will not you? Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hot. Who shall say me nay? Glend. Why, that will I.

Hot. Let me not understand you, then: speak it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as vou

For I was train'd up in the English court: Where, being but young, I framed to the harp

Many an English ditty lovely well, And gave the tongue a helpful ornament-A virtue that was never seen in you. Hot. Marry,

And I am glad of it with all my heart! I had rather be a kitten and cry mew Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers: To meet your father and the Scottish I had rather hear a brazen canstick turn'd. Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree; And that would set my teeth nothing on Nothing so much as mincing poetry.

Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag. 135 Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd. Hot. I do not care; I'll give thrice so much land

To any well-deserving friend:

But in the way of bargain, mark ye me, I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. Are the indentures drawn? Shall we be gone? Glend. The moon shines fair: you may away by night;

Break with your wives of your departure bence.

I am afraid my daughter will run mad, So much she doteth on her Mortimer. [Exit Mort. Fie, cousin Percy! how you crosmy father !

Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers me:

My wife can speak no English. I no Welsh. Glend. My daughter weens: she'll not part with you;

She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the ware. Most. Good father, tell her that she and my aunt Percy

[Glendower speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Glend. She is desperate here: a neevish. self-will'd harlotry, one that no persuacion can do good upon.

The Lady speaks in Welsh. Mort. I understand thy looks: pretiv Welsh

And rest your gentle head upon her lap. And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,

And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep, Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness, By'r lady, he is a good musician.

Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical, for you are altogether govern'd by humours. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.
